STYRON IS IN ITS PLACE in the freezer compartment doors because it is durable and its excellent insulating qualities prevent heat loss in the spacious freezer compartment.

STYRON IS IN ITS PLACE in the upper door panel because it doesn't chip, peel or rust, and the hard, smooth surface of Styron is so easily cleaned.

a place for everything with everything in its place!

STYRON IS IN ITS PLACE in the breaker frame because of its exceptional insulating properties, strength and flexibility. Intricate parts snap into place without need for fastening devices.

STYRON IS IN ITS PLACE in the control knobs because its built-in color never changes and it is always warm to touch even at low temperatures.

STYRON IS IN ITS PLACE in the lightweight dairy drawer and meat keeper because Styron does not stain or absorb moisture. The smooth gleaming surface is long wearing and easily washed.

OK FOR THIS LABEL made of STYRON a DOW PLASTIC inside the door of better refrigerators!

You can buy with confidence when you see this famous "made of STYRON" label. It means that samples of all plastics parts in refrigerators that bear this label have been tested by Dow's Product Evaluation Committee for functional design, good workmanship and the correct use of plastics. Look for the Styron (Dow polystyrene) label . . . it's your hallmark of confidence.

DOW plastics

astics Division, Dept. SHP-16 • THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY • MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

E-A-S-Y does it!... and it rings the bell for every occasion!

perfect for big parties because it cuts in thin, thin slices!

perfect for unexpected guests because it stays fresher longer!

and it has that CALUMET home-made goodness in every golden crumb!

Yes, here's that traditional holiday favorite . . . a pound-type cake that's as practical as it is decorative, and so-o-o easy to make, thanks to CALUMET'S Double-Dependable Double-Action!

New, Easy Recipe for "Jingle Bells"

ORANGE LOAF CAKE

Chosen from 63,000 recipes to be the CALUMET Cake-of-the-Holidays

ORANGE LOAF CAKE

Preparations. Have shortening at room temperature. Line bottom of 10x5x3-inch loaf pan with paper; grease. Start oven for moderate heat (350°F.). Sift flour once before measuring.

Ingredients:

- 2 cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
- 2 teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- 1 cup sugar
- ½ cup shortening
- 2 teaspoons grated orange rind
- *Milk (see below for amount)
- 5 egg yolks, unbeaten

With butter, margarine, or lard, use ¾ cup milk. With vegetable or any other shortening, use ¾ cup milk.*

Note: To get best results with this "JINGLE BELLS" recipe, use Double-Acting, Double-Dependable CALUMET Baking Powder. It raises your batter twice—first in the mixing bowl and then in the oven—to assure you a CALUMET-perfect cake: tender, delicious, velvety-smooth! It's this Double-Dependability that explains why more women use CALUMET than any other baking powder. And you may have noticed that more published recipes specify CALUMET than any other brand. (Perfect for biscuits, too—see recipe at left!)

Now the Mix-Easy Part!

Mix by hand or at a low speed of electric mixer. Count only actual beating time or beating strokes. Allow about 150 full strokes per minute. Scrape bowl and spoon often.

1. Sift flour once, measure into sifter, and add baking powder, salt, and sugar. Set aside.

2. Place shortening and orange rind in mixing bowl and stir just to soften shortening. Sift in dry ingredients. Add half of the milk and the egg yolks and mix until all flour is dampened. Then beat 2 minutes.

3. Add remaining milk and beat 1 minute longer.

Baking. Turn batter into pan. Bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 1 hour to 1 hour and 10 minutes, or until done. Cool.

Frosting. Frost top and sides of cake with your favorite butter cream frosting, reserving a small amount to tint red and to use as a garnish. Decorate top of cake with bells of the red frosting, red and green gumdrops, and silver dragées.

-and it's Hot Biscuit Time

Crisp, cold days call for biscuits hot from the oven . . . golden-brown, fluffy, delicious . . . CALUMET BISCUITS! Whisk up a batch for your family tonight—and watch smiles spread 'round that table!

CALUMET BAKING POWDER BISCUITS

- 2 cups sifted flour
- 2½ teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder*
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- 5 tablespoons shortening
- ¾ cup milk (about)

*Results with this recipe not assured if any other baking powder is substituted. That's because CALUMET'S Double-Dependable Double-Action supplies the precise leavening action needed. Wonderful for muffins, waffles, pancakes, coffee cake, too!

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening. Add milk and stir with fork until soft dough is formed (about 20 strokes). Turn out on lightly floured board and knead 20 turns. Pat or roll lightly ½ inch thick and cut with floured 2-inch biscuit cutter. Bake on ungreased baking sheet in hot oven (450°F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Makes 14 biscuits.

In Baking Your Best Bet is CALUMET BAKING POWDER

DOUBLE-ACTING

(Continued from Page 112)

uter world of intricacies and intrigues, s and finance, kings and duties, repelled ore and more. "Faugh!" said Mr. van s aloud. He was very angry. He tried n himself. I have read dozens of mails. is nothing in them, he said. The thought ersisted that this time there might be. r Mr. van Loomis someone else was ing the strangers. It was Niu, come m the kitchen where he had stirred up lipity and the house servants to proper ality. Niu looked down at Valentine lcGinty and his face was hard. Mr. van s, looking at him, thought for a mo- that Niu looked resentful, but, as Niu l to him, his face was smooth and polite. ulas are hot from the sun, Tsula," said 'Better not open wine. I serve fruit and coffee?"

é," said Mr. van Loomis, but his eyes ed Niu as he went back to the kitchen, pers flapping on the path.

entine and Charis walked back toward an Loomis as he came down the steps he beach. As they drew near he forgot le saw that Valentine was indeed a per- e young man but, as he looked at the Valentine's head, it seemed arrogant . That is a very conceited young man, nt Mr. van Loomis. I shan't know what ke until I test him. I mustn't let it be too thought Mr. van Loomis, not for him ot for her. He believed Charis to be ous as well as romantic, and that make her more difficult to please. I give it an interest, thought Mr. van s, something for them to cut their teeth ittle opposition, and, went forward to hem, he frowned and his face set and od morning, sir," alentine.

van Loomis did not Good morning." He d again and said, is private property. May I ask what e doing here?"

our boy brought us ashore," said Val- , surprised.

ent him to bring you. I wanted to know wha you are doing in these waters."

ther!" said Charis. "Father!"

ush, Charis. I'm afraid we don't wel- com strangers," said Mr. van Loomis.

I find," said Valentine with an edge to h voice that cut Charis sharply.

nce the war we have had to be careful," said Mr. van Loomis, inventing sentences that sounded well to him. "I shall have to ask see your papers."

ther!"

ush, Charis."

C ris looked at him in bewildered an- guis am quite in order," said Mr. van Loo s. "I am magistrate here. I must ask to s your papers and those of your man—I am d you have a man—before I allow you to l d here on Terraqueous."

e have landed," said Valentine. He coul not believe that this pomposity was seri s, but Charis was aghast.

She eft Mr. van Loomis and went to Valenti . "I have never known my father to talk like this," she said in distress. "He isn't like this."

Valentine took his wallet out of his breast pock and said stiffly, "I will get McGinty." and ent back down the beach.

ther," said Charis urgently and softly, "wh are you behaving to him like this? Fath r, isn't he our guest?" They had never had guest before.

on't be foolish, child. We have valu- able fisheries on this island. I can't have ver Tom, Dick and Harry landing here."

e isn't Tom, Dick and Harry," said a nearly in tears. "He is Valentine ueday, the famous playwright, father."

suppose he told you that."

e didn't. He told me his name and I olized him," said Charis with pride.

hen you have been reading the news- pap too?"

"Yes," said Charis as if that were nothing, and she said softly, "or I shouldn't have known who he was. He is a marvelous young man."

"What do you know about men?" said Mr. van Loomis. "Don't be a fool, child. You haven't met any man except Mario and the islanders; you think he is marvelous because you know only Mario. You should have seen some of the young men I knew in my day—the McDugdale of McDugdale or Dundas's boy in the Argylls. That was a young man, if you like! Why, this is a Mario compared to them!"

"I don't believe you," said Charis. "I don't want to see any more men."

"How do you know?"

"I know," said Charis, and she might have said, "I seem to know him with my whole heart," but she could not say that, not yet. "I—I like him," said Charis.

"Faugh!" said Mr. van Loomis, enormously pleased.

Perhaps it was the mention of the McDugdale of McDugdale or the thought of the pearls for Charis's twenty-first birthday, but Mr. van Loomis seemed to see a shining floor, the lights shining down from the chandeliers and the lines of lusters in the walls, shining on well-brushed heads, broad shoulders in velvet coats and the colors of the heavy, swinging plaids; they shone above bare shoulders, gleaming pearly white ones, white against the tartans, and he had a sudden feeling that Charis ought to be there. He could feel the pearl that Prem had given him, it was in his pocket, between his fingers; it was his gift to Charis, and now he thought with infinite regret that it was not enough. If she could have had her twenty-first birthday at Spey, a ball for her coming of age. She ought to have had it, thought Mr. van Loomis in dismay, and then Valentine came back along the beach, and Mr. van Loomis's spirits lifted. But there was one question to be settled, and he felt he could not wait to settle it.

By all means marry: if you get a good wife, you will be very happy; if you get a bad wife, you will become a philosopher. —SOCRATES.

"Are you married or single?" asked Mr. van Loomis as he took the papers that Valentine gave to him. The answer was so important to him that his hand trembled.

"Single," said Valentine briefly. He had brought McGinty with him and introduced him now.

"'Lo," said McGinty pleasantly.

"Good morning," said Mr. van Loomis distantly.

"Good morning," said Charis gently. Though she was gentle, she could not help comparing McGinty unfavorably with Valentine. Poor McGinty had not a chance; no more than an islander, could he look happy when he was not happy; his beard was not fair like Valentine's but ginger, and his hair did not lie down but rose up from his haircut that had already given him a quiff; his skin, too, did not tan in the sun but turned pink; now he looked as if he had been boiled all over. Not as good-looking, said Charis to herself. Not good-looking at all.

Mr. van Loomis, having looked through their papers, was firing a hail of questions at Valentine to cover up his question as to Valentine's married state. "Your name is Doubleday? You are English? Where do you come from? How did you come? What happened?"

This was a little hard on Valentine. As if he had been a king's son, he was used to being more than recognized, hailed and courted and flattered. He did not exactly want this, but he was used to it; people tumbled over themselves to meet his smallest wish; he had not known till now how spoiled he was.

"You see our papers," he said stiffly. "We are flying from Sydney. I had flown out from London for my sister's wedding. Last night, making for Surabaya, we had come down at Atemboea and, just after taking off, we ran into a storm and were blown off our course. The radio failed, and we don't know where we are, and I'm afraid the name of your island doesn't tell us. We ran out of petrol and so Automatic

you can love it and leave it!

TAPPAN "CP" GAS RANGE. One of many fine makes built to "CP" standards now available.

Never—but never—was there a cooking appliance so beautiful to have and behold as a new Gas range! It's so fast it's miles ahead of any other type range. So clean there's not one whiff of smoke even from char-type broiling. And so automatic you can load it, leave it and come back to a perfectly cooked dinner hours later. Yet it costs less to buy, install and operate than any comparable ranges run by any other fuel. No wonder millions of families are going modern—year after year—with Gas!

Gas has got it!

FOR MODERN COOKING REFRIGERATION WATER-HEATING HOUSE-HEATING AIR-CONDITIONING CLOTHES-DRYING INCINERATION

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

Romance is in your hands keep them sweet and soft and lovely

This fragrant, satiny lotion protects your hands—for hours longer. The exclusive softening ingredients don't vanish or rub away! Like a magic...invisible pair of gloves they help to guard you from the harmful effects of wind and work and weather. Yet Tussy Wind and Weather Lotion is never sticky! You feel only the velvety smoothness of your hands.

See how chapping, roughness and dryness seem to melt at the touch of Tussy Wind and Weather Lotion. Use it as a luxurious after-bath lotion, too—to keep arms and elbows and legs as soft as your hands. From head to toe—from January to December—you need Tussy Wind and Weather Lotion. $1 and $2. If you prefer a cream, use Tussy Wind and Weather Hand Cream. $1 plus tax.

TUSSY wind and weather lotion came down in the bay of that rock island and paddled ourselves in. I'm a playwright and I have a play just going into production; we open at Birmingham on the twenty-third, so that you see it is urgent that I get back."

"You—you act in your plays as well as write and produce them, don't you?" asked Charis.

"Yes," said Valentine.

"You see, Father," said Charis, her eyes shining with pride. And she asked Valentine, "Are you in this one?"

"Yes."

"In the . . . chief part?" asked Charis with sidelong look at Mr. van Loomis.

"I take the lead, of course."

"You see, father."

Mr. van Loomis snorted.

"It's urgent I get back," said Valentine again. "Your boy says there is no petrol here."

"No," said Mr. van Loomis.

"I suppose that we can cable?"

"We have no cable station."

"Then a wireless signal?"

"There is no wireless."

"Then ——"

"We are dependent," said Mr. van Loomis, "I should say, rather, that we should be dependent—did we need anything, which we don't, we are quite independent—on a chance yacht or fishing boat passing. We take our letters, if we have any, out to a buoy, and any ship that comes along takes them to the nearest office, probably Puerto, but that is four days' sail from here. She may have a bag for us; in that case she leaves it at the buoy. It is seldom or never that a ship puts in here. Our only regular caller is the lighthouse ketch, but, since we feed the crew from the island and they are islanders, she calls only four times a year. She came in yesterday. A pity!" said Mr. van Loomis blandly.

Home is the place you can go to without deserving it.
—ANON.

McGinty gave a long rude whistle. Valentine looked at Mr. van Loomis, but Mr. van Loomis met his hard gaze kindly. "And if there is anything urgent?" asked Valentine.

"When you have lived as long as I have," said Mr. van Loomis, "you will know that nothing is urgent."

"Oh, don't be ridiculous!" said Valentine, his patience breaking. He turned his back on Mr. van Loomis, kicking up the sand with his foot. He felt like an ineffectual small boy. Charis looked at him with hurt and pitying eyes. Mr. van Loomis waited blandly.

McGinty went to Valentine and said urgently under his breath, "It doesn't matter what the old guy says. We'll find a way to get out of here. They'll be looking for you, don't forget. Soon as it gets round, they'll be out after us. Don't let's argue. Let him talk all he wants."

"I repeat, nothing is urgent," said Mr. van Loomis. "What you do in your world is your affair. This happens to be mine, and I refuse to have my peace disturbed. You will have to wait and see what comes. You have told me your story. Very well. Now you have landed, you may stay on the island, provided you do as I say."

"Thanks for nothing," murmured McGinty.

"This is my island," said Mr. van Loomis, "and you will do as I say. You will both of you go to my house, and you must give me your word," he said to Valentine, "that you will not try to leave the island, either of you, without my permission, or try by any means to reach the outside world. No rigging up of transmitters," he said severely to McGinty.

"What does he think I am?" McGinty murmured to Valentine.

"Meanwhile I shall go out and find your flying boat," said Mr. van Loomis, "and verify your story."

"It happens to be true," said Valentine coldly.

"In that case I shall be able to verify it," said Mr. van Loomis. "Then I shall arrange to put out a signal, but first you must give me your word."

Valentine was looking at Charis. All this time she had kept quiet, not interrupting her father, though she was distressed. Val appreciated that quietness; presentl guessed, when they were alone, she deal with her father, but she kept his fa him in public. Valentine liked that to felt too weary to compete with Mr Loomis; suddenly it appeared that M Loomis was right and that nothing w gent; London, Birmingham, the pla whole business seemed far away and improbable than this improbable la He capitulated.

"Very well," he said, "I give yo word. What else is there to do?"

"Nothing else," said Mr. van L cheerfully. He turned and looked dow beach, beckoning Filipino. "And you tell your man that he should wear a red head is a dangerous color for the tro McGinty scowled. "Why can't he to me?" murmured McGinty to Val "I'm here, as good as him!"

"And now," said Mr. van Loomis daughter will take you up to the h

When they had gone, Filipino em from behind a palm tree. "Did I do wh told me, Tsula?" asked Filipino. "Tsu you send me to college?"

"Very well. Very well," said Mr Loomis, answering the first part of the tion. He was turning to follow the when Filipino stopped him.

"Tsula, what is this?" and Filipin out something on the palm of his ha shone small and round and white in th and Mr. van Loomis took it and loo it; it was an Australian sixpence. F watched it, angu while it was in M Loomis's hand.

"Where did yo this?"

"The youngest gave it, Tsula. Ple give it back!"

Mr. van Loomis was angry. Till th ment no islander on the island had to a piece of money; even Mario's moth had the sense to keep that from them island currency was barter and wo seemed to Mr. van Loomis to fit Mc that he should have come strolling in them and at once tipped Filipino. Yes him a vulgar tip, thought Mr. van Loo fury.

"Tsula, give it back."

"You don't want it," said Mr. van L

"Tsula . . . please!"

Mr. van Loomis would have se sixpence spinning into the sea, but he r bered how tiresome Filipino had been nothing that morning. I mustn't give a grievance, thought Mr. van Loomi reluctantly he gave the sixpence b Filipino.

"Tsula, is it money?" Filipino's came out and wet his lips.

"Yes. Curse it and him and you!" sa van Loomis, thoroughly out of tempe walked away up the beach, but Filipi not heard him.

He had never seen any money, but in every book and newspaper that h Charis had read, and he knew it was tant in the outside world. There came pino, from the sixpence, a sense of fr and power, also a great sense of res bility; it was not for nothing that h heard Pheasant tell the story of the Pr Son. Filipino tied the sixpence carefu the corner of his cloth and tucked i down in his waist knot against his Money! I have money, said Filipino.

Valentine felt as if he were charme through luncheon he listened to Mr Loomis's urbane conversation, watch clear-cut shape of Charis's small head dining room's shaded light, where N the boy Filipino came and went behind McGinty did not speak; he looked pi sulky in spite of Charis's efforts to tal van Loomis did not notice McGinty McGinty appeared to have offended but none of them knew how. Mr. van L talked to Valentine, whose head was

(Continued on Page 118)

The only shampoo that praises your hair 5 ways... and makes your hair want to curl!

✓ Washes more shine into your hair!
New-formula Rayve Creme Shampoo washes each hair diamond-bright—flashing with light and life!

✓ "Cream-conditions" your hair!
Scientists say frequent gentle shampoos mean lovelier, healthier hair! Rayve's special hair-cosmetic oils "Cream-Condition" your hair to new beauty every time you shampoo!

✓ Quick, rich lather!
Instantly—even in hardest water—Rayve bursts into energetic lather—works down to scalp fast—for deep-down cleansing!

✓ Free-rinsing . . . no soap-drag!
No other shampoo rinses out faster! Free-rinsing Rayve bathes your hair with highlights!

✓ Solves short hair's #1 problem, too!
Short curls must be dancing-clean or they go limp . . . Rayve's gentle cleansing lets you shampoo often—keeps short hair at glamour-peak!

AND... makes your hair want to curl!
Rayve actually washes more life into your wave! It leaves every hair so springy, yet so obedient, new-found waves fairly ripple back from your brush! Rayve makes your hair want to curl!

In jars or tubes.

Rayve CREME SHAMPOO

Fieldcrest

PRESENTS TOWELS IN HUNT CLUB COLORS

Brilliant new conversation pieces in colors taken from an old English hunting print—with the soft, caressing luxury you expect in towels by Fieldcrest. Mix the colors or match them. Either way they are exciting as gifts or as color accents in your own home.

TOWELS SHOWN
Derby Black Coat Red
Hunt Green
Saddle Brown

GIFT-SHOPPERS: For a glamorous yet practical gift, ask to see Fieldcrest towel ensembles in sparkling new gift packaging. At leading department stores everywhere.

Quality Tested for Lasting Beauty

Fieldcrest Towels are quality tested at 29 points during manufacture to give you extra wear, extra luxury.

Blankets • Bedspreads • Sheets • Lace Tablecloths • Electric Blankets • Curtains • La Franco Hosiery • Rayons
FIELDCREST MILLS, DIVISION OF MARSHALL FIELD & COMPANY, Inc., 88 WORTH ST., NEW YORK 13, N.Y.

(Continued from Page 116)

ning to swim. The dining room was restful; the windows were shaded from the noonday light by slats of wickerwork held away from the sills with sharpened bamboos; on each sill was a cascade of white orchids, their roots bound on the wood; the flowers hung down over the sills inside the room; their scent was heavy. There was grass matting on the floors, and against the walls were wooden chests. The table was carved, Mr. van Loomis told them, in a single piece from the roots of a tree; they sat on stools of the same shape; the wood was reddish brown and hand polished. The table mats were grass, woven like the floor mats but fine and of the same green-white color. The soup was served in wooden bowls of the hard red wood, but there was French flowered china and the silver was old-fashioned, heavy and crested. Valentine looked at the crest, a stag's head in a coronet, and looked thoughtfully at Mr. van Loomis.

There was a smell in the room that was homely in its strangeness, the smell of fresh brewing coffee. Then he must get stores, thought Valentine.

Niu and Filipino went backward and forward. They wore clean cotton cloths, their hair was immaculately oiled and brushed back with a flower behind the ear.

As soon as Niu had set eyes on Valentine and McGinty he had hurried to the kitchen and stirred up Serendipity. One boy had gone scuttling down to the beach for live crabs, another up the hill to the vineyards for grapes; to Niu, the only way they should be eaten was when they were still warm from the sun. One boy was sent to fetch cream and a fresh pumpkin for Serendipity to make a dish of pumpkin in curd; Niu himself had made a sauce for the chicken.

"First time Tsula have his own guests," said Niu with his inscrutable face. "It must all be good. Nothing must be wrong."

Now they ate a clear strong soup, crab scallops in their shells, chicken with rice and fried vegetables, the rice brought in first in wooden bowls with the hot sauce over it, then fruit and young bamboo shoots crystallized in sugar. On the fruit plates fresh leaves were laid, and Niu brought bowls of water and fringed napkins for their fi after it.

In a corner Webster, the cook's son, holding a huge palm-leaf fan with its resting on the ground between his leg swished it rhythmically, stirring the Webster, named for Webster's English tionary, wore a clean cloth, too, and a land round his neck. The swish of the fa the soft padding of the two men's feet Valentine feel more than ever in a sl dream.

They came out on the veranda for c "How do I get coffee?" asked Mr. Loomis. "I have a plantation. I found c wild here and cultivated it. We roast our berries." He stopped and frowned. Wal unexpectedly round the back of the h before luncheon, he had come full upo coffee machine bubbling over a brazier Filipino squatting beside it. Mr. van Lo was angry, but for twenty years he had been host to anyone and he was enjoyi too much to be put out for long. "This ning you shall taste our wine," he said. islanders make an arrack which is very We have a rice wine not unlike the Japa but I planted vines. Twenty years a brought them from Touraine, and the mate on our mountain seems to suit t We make a white wine, medium dry a reasonable bouquet."

"You seem to have everything here on little island," said Valentine, battling to his eyes open.

He sat facing the light, and the ch that showed between the blinds struck s of light into his eyes and worried Charis quietly stood up and drew closer. Valentine looked at her grate Now he sat in shade and his lids grew he It seemed a long while since the morn since the moment when this surprising m ing had broken into light and he and Ginty had begun to paddle themselves i dinghy with their new unused paddles a from the Water Star. He saw McGinty g large yawn and had to stiffen the corne his mouth not to follow him.

Mr. van Loomis was still talking. "Fo its smallness our island is big," said Mr. Loomis. "I wanted it to be vast, and, as "Frankly, I don't know why you bother—you know I'll come back soaked to the skin."

Lucille Ball co-starring in ıncy Pants" a Paramount Picture color by Technicolor

ucille Ball's hands t La Cross care"

says FRANCES JACOT
Studio Manicurist
Paramount Pictures, Inc.

ile it takes only three basic ments to give a manicure," says Jacot, "it takes instruments of ross precision quality to give fect manicure." That's why ny professional manicurists er La Cross to any other ure instruments. And s why celebrities like ille Ball, whose s get La Cross salon
, choose La Cross
ments for home ıicures, too!

oss Triple-Cut ith Cleaner
... finishes iles... 25¢
rs from 15¢

La Cross Tweezer... swiftly whisks eyebrows to loveliness... 50¢

La Cross Cuticle Nippers
...positive, precision, razor-keen blade action . . . $4.00

La Cross

America's Finest Manicure
Instruments Since 1903

EFEL BROS. CORP., NEWARK 3, NEW JERSEY

see, it is. You may smile"—Valentine had not smiled—"but it has vast resources. You see the surf on our beaches; the thunder comes from caves far down under it where the water surges up. There are deep growths of coral and holes reaching fathoms down into the sea; the mother rock is igneous, but it is a mass of hidden caves and water. The sea stretches to the horizon all round us," said Mr. van Loomis. "And you will scarcely see smoke or a sail. We don't need them," said Mr. van Loomis; "we have all we need. Our mountain head is lost in cloud so that its height gives us a proper perspective, a feeling of infinity. It gives us our variation in climate too; down here it is balmy, tropical; up there it is temperate."

Mr. van Loomis stood up and put his coffee cup down on the tray, stood upright again and stretched his arms. They have the span of an old prize buffalo's horns, thought Valentine.

"I wanted my island to be vast," said Mr. van Loomis again, "and I made it vast. Think of our crops; we have the crops of a whole continent: we have palms and rice fields and jute and groundnut, bananas and copra on the plain. We grow our own tobacco, coffee, Indian corn; on the lower slopes we have tea terraces and orange groves; lemons and vines and olives farther up, and, toward the summit, the fruit trees I brought, almonds and apricots and peach and apples; there I have pruned and cultivated a species of wild raspberry; if you came to tea with us in summer you would think you were having tea in England, raspberries and cream. I planted trees," said Mr. van Loomis, "along the roads and in the forest as I felled; they are saplings still, but one day they will be . . . mighty," said Mr. van Loomis, stretching again. "For building we have bamboo and palm leaves and our own wood. We have little metal on the island; the smith works his smithy only when he is not farming: we work with wood, and wood is a peaceful thing: it's not destructive, it's not too hard, it's strangely human; it has life, it will die; metal doesn't die, it rusts and tarnishes. Beware of anything that cannot die," said Mr. van Loomis. "It has no chance of greater life."

"Pity you haven't any petrol," said McGinty.

"Petrol, refineries, all the rest of it—conjuring, sheer conjuring," said Mr. van Loomis shortly. "We want no conjuring here."

To McGinty that seemed almost like blasphemy. "They are inventions," he argued.

"That is what I said," said Mr. van Loomis, and Valentine laughed.

McGinty did not know what they meant. He understood less and less of the conversation and cared less and less to understand; besides being sleepy, he was bored, and he showed his boredom. He fidgeted and yawned until Charis, coming to the decision that there are some guests who have to be dismissed, said:

"Wouldn't you like to go and lie down? All of us have a siesta here in the afternoon."

"Don't mind if I do," said McGinty. With a commiserating look at Valentine he went in.

In spite of his sleepiness, Valentine was beginning to be fascinated. As Mr. van Loomis described it, the island seemed to rise for him again, in the round, as it had risen to meet him from the sea. Filipino came in to take the coffee tray. Valentine wondered how the laughing, boastful, flying boy with the boat on the sea had transformed himself into this skillful mute; he thought it would be interesting to hear about the island from Filipino too.

"You have your islanders very well trained," he said as Filipino disappeared through the door. "Are they happy?"

"Happy?" Mr. van Loomis almost snapped. The sight of Filipino had pricked him sharply. He saw that coffee machine again, bubbling on the fire; he remembered The Rights of Man. Damn the boy! He is becoming a menace, thought Mr. van Loomis, but it was too soon after luncheon to be dis-

For the most Luxurious bath you've ever had...get the Big BATH SIZE!

For velvet-smooth Beauty Lather that caresses your skin, leaves your body glowing with a warm blush of fragrant loveliness, enjoy a beauty bath with Bath Size Palmolive Soap

IT'S EXQUISITE . . . It's economical. Big, big Bath Size Palmolive is perfect for tub or shower. Just the gentlest massage over your body creates a glorious beauty lather that leaves your skin glowing, alluring. Proper cleansing with this thrifty Bath Size smooths and softens your arms, back and shoulders . . . really gives you a lovelier complexion all over.

And its delicate, exciting scent leaves the merest hint of perfume on your skin—a delightful invitation to romance. Get Bath Size Palmolive today—for Palmolive's marvelous beauty lather means that you, too, may have a lovelier complexion from head-to-toe.

You Know US
We're Your Snow Cuties

ALL READY TO DELIVER YOUR FRIENDLY CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

There's a WHOLE GANG OF US, TOO

25 CARDS IN A BOX FOR ONLY $1.00

The famous artist, Marjorie Cooper, created us to carry your cheery Christmas greetings, and you'll love our whole gang.

Be sure to look for THIS BOX when you select your Christmas Cards for each Member of your Family and Others
Dear to You

Sold only in stores that feature

RUST CRAFT CARDS OF CHARACTER

THE KIND OF CARDS YOU LIKE TO SEND AND RECEIVE

BOSTON TORONTO

turbed. He frowned and said shortly, "They are contented," and put Filipino out of his mind. "Their life is the shape of a round," said Mr. van Loomis. He was beginning to be sleepy too. "That, my dear Doubleday, is the true shape for everything. Everything is a round; the universe ——"

"We don't know the shape of the universe," said Valentine.

"The world is round," went on Mr. van Loomis, ignoring him. "The world's path round the sun, the year that comes round again to the same day, the day and the night that grow through the hours and come back to the beginning of the day—it is all a round. That is the pattern we are meant to follow. The cycle is the shape of wisdom."

Charis gave a little yawn.

"Then you don't think we should choose a line and stick to it?" asked Valentine.

Mr. van Loomis shrugged. "If you like," he said. "But it is very fraying for the nerves."

"It is," said Valentine, and Charis noticed the edge in his voice.

"A line has no beauty and no end," said Mr. van Loomis. "When it's gone, it's gone; you will never see it again. A circle is bounded, it has discipline. The great things of the world are always disciplined," said Mr. van Loomis. "Look at a sonnet ——"

"A sonnet?" asked Valentine, trying to fight the drowsiness in his voice and eyes.

"Yes, a sonnet. The greatest poetry in the world has been written in a sonnet," said Mr. van Loomis and walked away to the other end of the veranda.

"Doesn't your father ever qualify what he says?" Valentine asked Charis.

"I can*not* tell you how much I believe in discipline," said Mr. van Loomis, coming back. "Man must accept a limit, recognize a law, to work and live in peace. We are human, not to be endowed with freedom. That is why I chose a little island that I could control. You will find discipline all through it, in it itself, in its daily life. Here you will find limitation and you will find beauty and simplicity. Men have forgotten how to be simple. Take sewing," said Mr. van Loomis. "What need is there to sew? Here there is no need. There is nothing that needs sewing on the island. For instance, excepting mine," said Mr. van Loomis, "there isn't a single pair of trousers on the island."

"Filipino has a pair of trousers," said Charis.

WHEN Mr. van Loomis went in, the veranda was very quiet. The yellow tropical midday light hung over the garden and the sea; the beaches shimmered in a haze of heat, and the sound of the breakers made a low booming that seemed to Valentine to go far away and come near again and go far away. With the sun beating on them from outside, the grass-blind mats gave off a soporific hot-grass smell; his eyes were lidded with sleep, his legs felt drugged with it.

"What do we do now?" asked Valentine.

"Sleep," said Charis.

That seemed to him the most beautiful thing he had ever heard. He stood up and went to her and took her hand; it felt cool and light, in the universal heaviness. "You are an angel to me," said Valentine and kissed her hand and went away to his room.

Charis caught her breath and stood up sharply; she lifted her hand and held the back of it, where Valentine had kissed it, against her cheek. Don't be a fool, said Charis to Charis, but already knew she was a fool. She was tingling from head to foot. Don't feel like that, said Charis sharply to herself. She tingled still. Then, another thought came to her, and, standing on the veranda, the warm air, spiced and balmy with sun, blown to her on every breeze, fanning against her skin, Charis was cold with misery. She was thinking of all the other women and girls whose hands Valentine had kissed. He did it so lightly and easily that she was sure h kissed hundreds; someone as famous would have kissed all kinds of Ma duchesses', princesses', beauties', th Charis miserably; hands of dozens of girls, competent, worldly-wise girls; girls, not Anyas or Emmas. She beg have a terror of them.

"Mis' Charis, ain' you goin' to lay do It was Pheasant come to look for her. C did not notice that it was strange for P ant to be awake and dressed at this ti day.

"PHEASANT, when you saw girls, y ladies, before you came here, did seem . . . very . . . clever and pretty?"

"None purty an' clever as you," Pheasant.

But she only says that, thought Chari terly. She says what she thinks I want to Impatiently she told Pheasant to "I shall come in a little while," she sai she did not come.

It's interesting for you to have met him, all, said Charis to Charis severely when P ant had gone. Tomorrow, soon, he will go again. He must go away. Her lips tren What do you expect? Charis asked h fiercely, but her eyes filled with tears a

When Doctor Canfield was inaugurated at Ohio State University, President Eliot of Harvard said to him, "Well, Canfield, now you are president, and everybody will call you a liar."

"Why, Doctor Eliot, did anyone ever call you a liar?"

"Worse than that," said Eliot, "they proved it."

—WILLIAM LYON PHELPS: Autobiography With Letters (Oxford University Press).

bars of sunlight shaded floor fro blind cracks sli gether in a blur. Charis! It is of telling yourself t if you have no a

She stood the the warm veran still that a lizard out and moved cally down the w hind her, then res its pads and f with its tongue at

Each moment days and the nig the island, except in the chill of the morning, was interwoven with a mesh sects and lesser reptiles, like life itsel ceeding, busy and unnoticed. There w ways the tck-tck of lizards and the wh of a cicada in a tree. The maids swept countless cobwebs from the corners, other cobwebs gleamed across the law on the bushes in the morning dew. were the great winged evening beetles every evening, too, at dusk. Niu went room to room in the house, waving a b lit malodorous incense against the m toes, while Filipino and Webster ran to close the slats on the windows. I drinking trough by the back door, or garden coiled under a bush, there was s be a little brilliant grass snake; there beetles with polished green and pe backs like scarabs from Egypt, and were swallowtail butterflies and the w land bees. At night, in every creek an the marshes and along the paths th through forests up the hill, there wer flies. Now Charis stood so still, her against her cheek, her eyes filled with that the lizard tcked fearlessly and c his fly. Suddenly he flicked back into th ner; Charis had raised her head. The walked quickly to the steps and lif crack of the blind.

In the heat of the day, when norma would have been stretched out on his sleeping heavily, Charis saw her father ping off the jetty into the canoe; she sa step down and bend under the awni reach his seat; she saw Luck push off the jetty poles; the paddles were held w for his cry, and then they all dipped flashed together, dipped and flashed, ing the canoe away from the shore. L "hé's" rang out, and the canoe h quickly toward the open sea. Then, the corner of her eye, she saw Phe and Niu walking away from the deep in talk. They should have been ing too.

"Hé, hé, hé" came Luck's cry acros sea. Now I wonder what they are up to, th Charis.

(To be Continued)

PHOTO BY GLADYS TABER

simple good things—neighborliness, kindness, gardens, and fire on the th—we must preserve. Our Thanksgiving should be that we still have an l of home-loving people, a faith in God unshaken, a will to freedom.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

N summer is quiet and lovely on nd. No two people ever agree as when it is, so I pick out my own.
fter a cold spell, after the black d after some days of rain. The vill have been on for some time, d lumberjackets hang by the back n comes a day of clear gold, of air y that the tiredest heart is rested.
benign, and that is the only word e it. A drifting blue haze smokes hills. All the sounds are mellowed ietness, the drumming of a horse's eorge's barn is soft and pleasant, l chatter of the hens is muted, the s horn is like a note in a song.
dogs bark idly, as if they had ason to chase the rabbit.

, I know, does not think of winter vinter will be a strange experience
She was born last December nird, and she spent the winter down in the house, coming out to only when the jonquils poked up ner. But some of the older dogs a look when I say what a beautit is, a wise and knowing look.
tell the days are getting shorter, shuts down early, and they, I re season-wise.

ve added another Irish setter to y, and there isn't any particular or it, except that the new one is a ister of Maeve's, the same father er but born this year. We spent a g ourselves why we could not pose her, and then we just went to er, and she had that look in her lunged at Jill with a coltish leap, ll legs and tail, and her smile was n gaps where the new teeth had ared.

came home with us, demolishing
g in the car and being wildly
. We named her Daphne, and we were careful about introducing her to the ten cockers and the original Irish. Making a new dog part of a group requires just a little psychology. We were always petting Maeve as Daphne loped up, and Daphne got her loving on the side. We fed her by herself so nobody would think she was eating his food.

Through an unhappy combination of circumstances, she had been mistreated, so she was terribly fearful and anxious and very hand-shy, as dogs get when they are whacked. But in a few days she blossomed. She decided she had gone to heaven, I think, and I never saw a dog so violently and continuously happy. Maeve took her into the closed circle after about three days, and they began to run everywhere together. They chase frogs around the edge of the pond by the hour, and then one of them will start after a rabbit, and pause and turn back and wait for the other one to come along too. Nothing more beautiful than the two red setters flying up the hill!

Jonquil adores Daphne; in fact, Jonquil thinks she is a setter herself. They play tug of war with an old towel, and the small golden cocker holds her own.

There has always been controversy about the relative merits of cocker and setter as field dogs. The cocker, I can guarantee, takes a back seat for nothing on four legs. Now and then the gate is left open by mistake, and Maeve takes Sister off for a hike. Sister is a very small spaniel and Maeve is a very rangy Irisher. Normally conservative, Sister gets the wind in her hair and she goes over bush, over brier, through swamps, across ponds. They cover miles and miles, and hours later we finally see them on some upland pasture, the setter in the lead, it is true, but the little cocker right at her heels, toiling along.

Sister bears evidence of her hunt by bringing berry vines in her ears and swamp

Beautiful Christmas Cards featuring

Favorite Christmas Carols

14 CARDS AND ENVELOPES $1.00 A BOX

Favorite Carols are particularly appropriate to send at Christmas. The card illustrated above is only one of several charming designs in this assortment.

Also each card, in addition to a Christmas greeting, includes a familiar carol . . . "Silent Night, Holy Night" . . . "O Little Town of Bethlehem" . . . "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear" . . . and others.

Sold only in stores that feature

RUST CRAFT CARDS OF CHARACTER

THE KIND OF CARDS YOU LIKE TO SEND AND RECEIVE

BOSTON TORONTO

KVP Paper Maids for Neater, Easier Living

Quicker, Easier Dusting!

Use a clean piece every time

Polish as you dust with these KVP Dusting Papers! They're the slickest, quickest work-savers you ever used. They grab the dust and hold it, leave a gleaming polish at the same time. So soft they can't mar the finest finish. No lint, no fuzz, no dirty cloths to wash. Dust the KVP way, today!

Polish as you dust

CRINKLED for convenience

Paper Maids Save Time—Save Work

Your Guarantee of Quality KVP

Shelf Papers ▪ Freezer Papers ▪ Heavy and Fancy Waxed ▪ KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers ▪ Pin Tape ▪ Baking Cups ▪ Place Mats ▪ Cookery Parchment ▪ Pressing Parchment ▪ Kalacloths.

Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Co. Parchment, Michigan

Never a dull moment

REGINA TWIN-BRUSH POLISHER AND SCRUBBER

America's Best Buy

FOR HOMES, OFFICES, STORES

LOWEST COST
GREATEST VALUE
At Leading Stores Everywhere

SCRUBS
WAXES
POLISHES
BUFFS

RECONDITIONING KIT EXTRA FOR SANDING
DRY CLEANING
REFINISHING

For Your Convenience

THE REGINA CORPORATION, Rahway 16, N. J.
Please send me free descriptive material on the Regina Electric Floor Polisher and the name of my nearest dealer.

NAME
ADDRESS
ZONE STATE
CITY

Also Producers of Twin-Brush Industrial Floor Machines

muck on her petticoats. But where Maeve has gone, there Sister has been also, she tells me, with pride.

Daphne will not run away. Security is so new to her that she thinks if she gets out of sight of the house, it may vanish. So she just hangs around looking in the windows and doors until she is let in, and then she tries to leap into any lap that is available. She is the lovingest setter I ever knew.

Jill has been cleaning up the garden, putting it to bed for the winter. Next year, she says, we shall have more of those new green beans that are so melting tender. But not the carrots we tried this time. They are too carrotty. The zucchini was flawless, the cucumbers just right, but the tomatoes were not a success. A garden is a lifelong experiment. Some of the new varieties are superb, but some lack the taste of old favorites.

We tried freezing slices of zucchini fried. I like it best that way, for the flavor is delicate and the texture is not mushy. I dip the slices in seasoned flour and brown them in butter or margarine in which a nip or two of onion has turned golden.

Our neighbors, Steve and Olive, had their first garden this past summer. How it took me back to our beginnings when I cried so hard at the sight of the first radish! I had never really believed that a tiny black seed could turn into a succulent vegetable. The Stephenscns bought the old red house at the corner of Jeremy Swamp Road chiefly to have quiet week ends. They were all worn out, they said, and they just had to have a little rest. Their little rest kept them busy ten or eleven hours every day while they scraped and painted and Olive sewed curtains and Steve carpentered. And while they weeded their garden. And then all those vegetables "came in," and Olive might freeze beans until one o'clock at night. Yet they kept looking better and better, which proves something about country living.

> When we are out of sympathy with the young, then I think our work in this world is over.
> —GEORGE MACDONALD.

One thing just leads to another when you buy an old house. No sooner had they moved in than the water pump stopped working. Then the bedroom floor seemed to sag under Olive's light tread, and of course the beams were giving out. Then they discovered the trees were all starving and simply had to be fed immediately! The tree man analyzed their whole land and the news was grave. Next, lightning rods came into their lives after one bad storm had rocked the whole house. A crisis in the cellar flooded the whole place. The plumber who arrived boated across the water on Steve's first carpenter job, a rack for the freezer.

I was thinking of all the trials an old house in the country does bring as I stopped in one day. The kitchen floor was being repaired, so the refrigerator was in the living room, together with all the dishes and supplies, and the kitchen cupboards. Olive had just been washing the dishes upstairs in the bathtub, since the sink was now outside the back door.

She and Steve stood at the window, and said, "Isn't the view simply wonderful? Last night we sat here and just saw the sun going down over the hill—it was magnificent! '

"Yes, it's lovely," I said, sitting on a carton of books.

"We're going to put in a furnace," said Steve, "because then when we can stay here the year round ——"

"Winter week ends, too," said Olive.

I DECIDED, as I went on to the village, that we are not actually peculiar, we country-minded. We belong in an age of great trouble, great anxieties, great conflicts. In this age, we turn again to the old houses which have stood since our fathers' day, to the good land which nourishes us, to the open sky over the steadiness of hills. We want to see the stars over the apple trees, and we don't mind at all how hard we work—work is indeed the bread of the country dwellers.

Also, I thought, as I went to the store and stooped to pet the dachshund that came back from the last war with Louis, also we have an obligation. Making war is not the end of life, it is a painful means we have had to but it is not the way of life which we me establish in our world. Therefore the v we must keep alive are the values of a w at peace. We must so live that after cease, the good things will remain.

The simple good things, such as neigl liness and kindness, such as gardens clean curtains, such as candles and fire o hearth, these we must preserve. And Thanksgiving should be that we still hav ideal of home-loving people, a faith in unshaken, and a will to freedom.

At Stillmeadow, we have the Thank ing family dinner with an added praye grace. And sitting around the apple-w fire, we are not forgetful of the terrors o time. We feel we must live more deeply, truly, and never lose hope in the futur

A GOOD many wonderful things have pened in our time, as well as the drea ones. Not so long ago, children were wor ten and twelve hours a day in factories sweatshops. Women were a kind of glor servant to man. Schools were run on learn-or-be-whacked theory. There we lot of things fifty years ago which we wou put up with now for a minute. We are gressing, after all.

Now, instead of caning a little boy teacher may send him home with a like the one Dallas got from her son:

"Dear Mother I was throwing roc recess. Dear Mother I was shooting r bands at noon today. Love."

When you see the children going to s in their comfortable easy clothes and r that a short time they were practic clad in strait jacket their lives, you get a den feeling of pleasu the growth we have in our world.

November night edged with chill. Th corn popper comes out we make popcorn over the fire and k big bowl of apples by the hearth. It do really matter whether you use a lo melted butter, or half butter and half ular shortening, or no butter at all plenty of salt.

I would hate to think that I was in s rut about food that I had to have one pa ular thing. With hoarders I have no pat at all, and I cannot understand how can live comfortably with themselves. forms of greed, hoarding is the ugliest. kind of thievery, actually. Better face it see if having a cellar full of sugar and c is really a pleasure. Now saving is a thing, but what a sad thing it is to be a miser! We decided when the news came from Korea that we would not get an can of coffee, although normally we some ahead to save trips to the village. ants had got into our sugar and we had one small bowl left. But as Jill said, w live without jelly and we just won't g and join those women lugging tons of home.

It gives me a sense of satisfaction t alize that I am not a slave to food, much love to cook and to eat. Nor are we goi be slaves to linen or blankets or soa anything else.

Cooking is really more inventive if have to use something different. Some c best things to eat have come from short The pumpkin pie was an early one; so mincemeat. Corn-meal mush—and ch and sliced and browned in butter, how it is! I myself really got intimate with bones the first time during the last war. becued or simmered with vegetables or g and served with dumplings, they are licious.

November is a good month for baked h and salt pork and Indian pudding an those nice New England dishes. Good fo too.

And especially good for brisk walks w bevy of cockers and a wild fringe of Irish ters, and for a Siamese cat named Esm sit on the hottest part of the hearth!

THE

STREIT SLUMBER* CHAIR SAYS:

"Merry Christmas for the REST of Your Life"

No. 128-B
The Parisian

Streit SLUMBER* CHAIR

* U. S. PAT. OFF.

BE SURE
this identifying triangular trade-mark is attached to the chair, when you buy.

No. 134
The New Yorker

No. 124
The Salem

This Christmas, forget the little gifts and wrap up one big package of COMFORT for that all-important man-of-the-house. Give him a beautiful, comfortable Streit Slumber* Chair—for the REST of his life! Day-in, day-out . . . for years to come . . . his Slumber* Chair will keep saying "Merry Christmas" everytime he sinks down into its soft cushions.

See your nearest Streit dealer today and place your most important gift order. And while you're there sit in the Slumber* Chair and discover for yourself the comfort of the thick, upholstered seat-and-back that adjusts to 3 positions of comfort . . . the seat high upholstered footstool . . . and the soft cushion-back that snuggles up to the crook of your neck.

No. 339-L
The Madison

Period designs to fit any decorative scheme

You may have your choice of authentic period designs in all the popular textile coverings, genuine leather or in Du Pont's sensationally new supported plastic, "Fabrilite"... in open or closed arm models . . . to harmonize with any decorative scheme. Place your order now while your dealer's selection of Slumber* Chairs is complete.

No. 105-L
The Manchester

3 PERMANENT POSITIONS OF COMFORT

No. 170-FB
The Essex

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

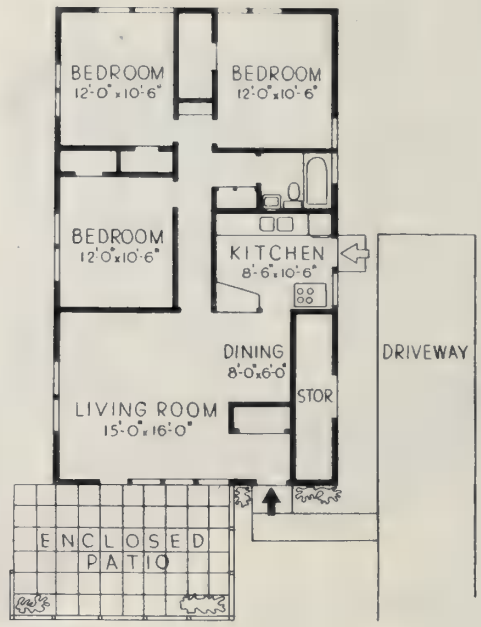
MATCHING FOOTSTOOL
Every Streit Slumber Chair Model has a matching footstool with a concealed storage compartment for books, sewing, etc.

No. 171
The Saratoga

No. 381-L
The New Haven

THE BEAUTIFUL Streit SLUMBER* CHAIR

. . . sold by leading furniture and department stores from coast-to-coast



Top buys in ready-built east to west

By RICHARD PRATT Architectural Editor of the Journal

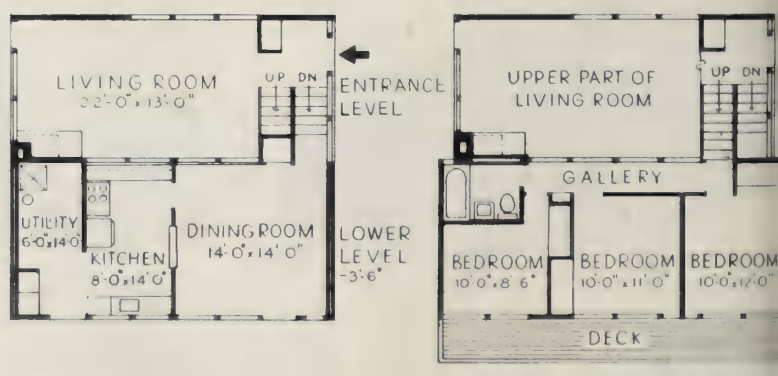
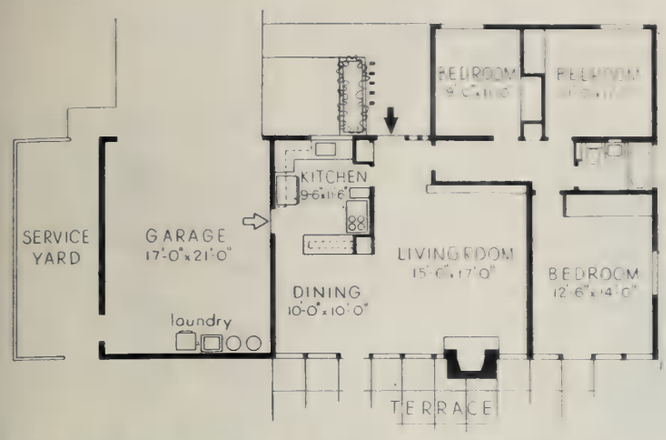
Most people now looking for new ready-built houses are able to pay somewhere between $7,000 and $14,000. That is the immense home market. And these five houses, in various parts of the country, show how much you can really get for your money, within that price range, when the houses are skillfully designed for livability and looks by leading architects, and built for lasting value by forward-looking developers. All are houses in either large or small developments: the larger the development, generally speaking, the lower the cost of the individual house. All are houses with three full-height bedrooms and one bath; living room with separate or semiseparate dining, and kitchen completely equipped. In every case, the architects have achieved individuality among the houses of each development by varying the colors, materials and minor architectural features; while the builder achieves economy in cost by repeating essentially the same design in quantity construction.

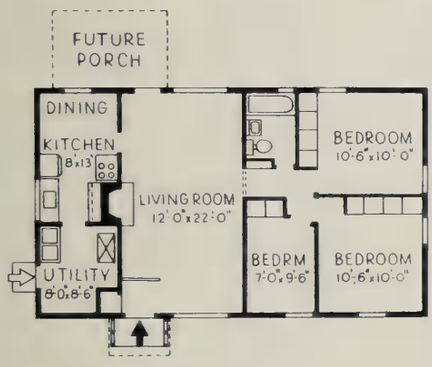
WESTERN WAYS PHOTO BY PIETRO BALESTRERO ■ A. QUINCY JONES AND PAUL WILLIAMS, ARCHITECTS.





Arizona: $6,950. This house is one of seven hundred in Pueblo Gardens, Tucson, which for price, and quality of design and construction, are probably the best buys in the country. The glass wall of the living room opens into a patio that is panel-fenced for privacy; other windows, protected by wide overhangs, look out on desert or mountain views, but are carefully oriented away from neighbors. Three bedrooms, well placed for privacy and quiet, have generous closets, as does the rest of the house; special features include small snack bar between kitchen and dining alcove, and large outside storage space.

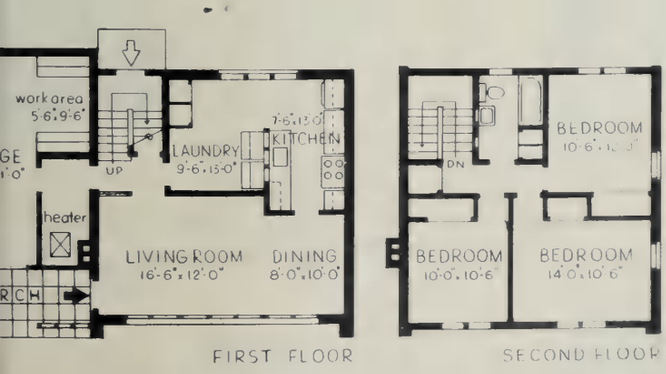
PHOTO BY GENE HOOK • DAVID B. RUNNELLS, ARCHITECT.



Kansas: $13,046. A three-level house, which you see here from its garden side, is one of nine in Prairie Village, and looks deceptively small in its snug woodland setting. You enter at the living-room level, a large room nicely separated from the rest of the house, an ideal place for your best furniture, easily kept in order. Below, a generous dining room opens onto the terrace, and provides space for other family activities; while the kitchen is well placed for keeping an eye on children at play. Up from the entrance hall are the bedrooms, with deck beyond that shades windows below and adds distinction.

California: $11,900. Turning its back to the street, this edwood City house, in a group of sixty-four, focuses its attention rough floor-to-ceiling glass on its terrace for dining, living, play. The mpact kitchen overlooks both street and garden through its serving- ting counter with shelves above, and has easy access to the garage- undry and adjacent service yard—practical in a mild climate; while e bedrooms become, in effect, a separate wing, planned to avoid affic through the living room, so typical of development houses.

PHOTO BY ROGER STURTEVANT ■ ANSHEN AND ALLEN, ARCHITECTS



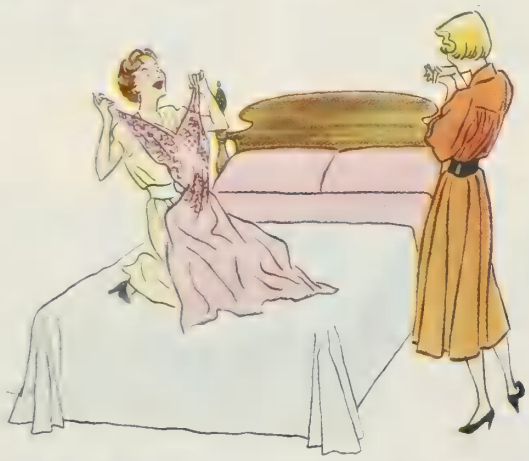
Virginia: $10,434. In a lovely woodland called Provi- ence Forest, this is one of twenty-six houses in McLean, enclosing a rect rectangular plan within a traditionally flavored exterior. Utility, ving and sleeping areas are kept clearly distinct, and simple wallboard teriors lend themselves to either modern or period furnishings. Din- g space is provided in both kitchen and living room, and by carry- g the living room right through the house from front to back, reat flexibility is gained in orienting the house to sun and view. he bedrooms, though not large, include ample storage space.

PHOTO BY ROBERT C. LAUTMAN ■ HARRY E. ORMSTON, ARCHITECT.

Pennsylvania: $13,850. This two-story house in larper Village, near Pittsburgh, one of a group of sixty, has masonry- lock end walls extending slightly to frame its clean, simple exterior nd give it a solid look. Inside, the combination kitchen and aundry provides space for eating as well as for the regular activities f this area, while the separate stair hall and second floor isolate the leeping quarters completely from the rest of the house. A special fea- ure is the work area in the garage. . . . Three out of the five houses hown here are single-story—roughly the current country-wide ratio.

PHOTO BY J. M. ARNOLD, JR. ■ HEROLD BRADLEY, ARCHITECT AND BUILDER.

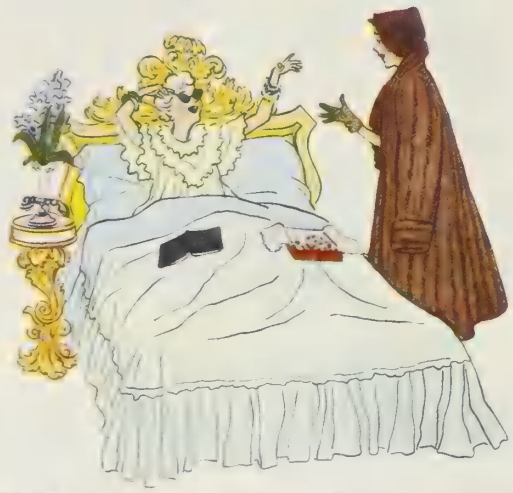
THE DEAREST FRIENDS



EXCITABLE TYPE: "I almost fainted! Such divine pastels! They're Cannon Combspun Percale Sheets! They're the new Water Colors!"

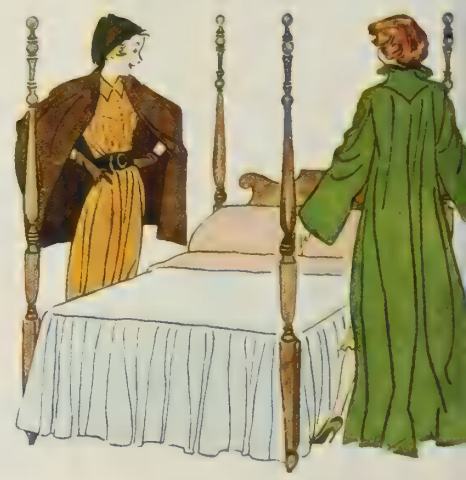
BUDGET-BEWAILER: "Broke as we are, those Cannon Percales in beautiful Water Colors were such a value even poor us could afford 'em!"

NONSTOP TALKER: "...they're Combspun—makes 'em smoother—the colors are absolu fast—and, my dear, talk about wear..."



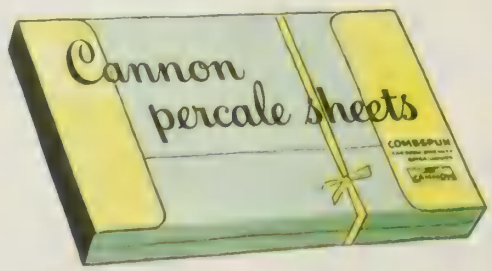
GLAMOUR QUEEN: "I couldn't sleep if my sheets didn't match my nightie—don't you love this shell pink?"

THE HANDY ONE: "I bought some extra sheets, cut 'em up, added ruffles—so, I've got drapes to match my moonlight yellow sheets!"

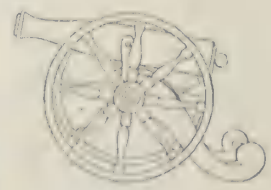


DEVOTED WIFE: "I was scared John would think I was crazy, but he thinks t lagoon green sheets are nifty!"

THE FAMOUS ONE: "Dah-ling! I'm so glad you came today. I'm in my aquamarine mood!"



ARTISTIC TYPE: "I asked myself: 'Burnt sienna and what?' And I said 'Ah—Cannon Combspuns in cloud grey!'"



CAREER GIRL: "Executive stuff is fine a office, but the home life is strictly femini —note these sunrise peach sheets!"

OUR HEROINE: "And do you think I could get a word in edgewise about my own heavenly Cannon Water Color sheets?"

COPR. 1950, CANNON MILL

CANNON PERCALE SHEETS – THEY'RE COMBSPU

TRADE MARK CANNON

CANNON TOWELS • STOCKINGS • BLANKETS • BEDSPREADS • CANNON MILLS, INC., N. Y. 13

SCHOOL HOUSING CRISIS

(Continued from Page 23)

ne of the money would be used for a eleven-room primary school to be the Olympic School; the rest would the beginning of funds for a new junior school.

e campaign had little difficulty attract- pporters. Parents of children on double were particularly vocal. While shifts assroom time only forty minutes, small s in the routine for crackers and milk, play period, had to be eliminated en- and mothers claimed they could see ifference in their children almost im- tely.

etsy had been a calm, complacent lit- l," her mother said. "Now she seemed us and distraught, and flew off the e at the slightest provocation." . . . nie was the same way," his mother "First-graders are too little to spend nuch time at concentrated work. Their of interest is short. They need to feel hey can take things easily at their own . . . "The afternoon shift was terri- a third mother said, "because it threw ildren's mealtime schedule off, and in inter it was dark by the time they left at four-thirty."

er mothers complained that with their nds on shifts at the lumber mills, and children going hool all day, household ules were almost sible. "I have children," one wife said, "and ly time we could down to a meal ner was on the ends."

ngview's strong tive PTA, com- of mothers who ust this way, g into action. briefings by Mr. mara and his ant, Scott Milli- mothers took bills and per- appeals to their nbors, tele- d everyone in during the week each election. "We dreaded going from to door," several mothers said, "but ned out to be fun. Some of us met e on our own streets that we'd never known before."

luenced strongly by these PTA moth- ongview's Educational Policies Coun- .E.P.C.) undertook a study of the m. Formed in 1941 as a vocal outlet e community on educational matters, .E.P.C. (whose membership is com- of the heads of twenty-five civic or- tions and any other citizens who care end its monthly meetings) had already responsible for extension of physical ng, introduction of sex education and ization of a balanced lunch program schools. Now its members, working gh their own individual organizations, that the levies be passed.

d they were passed—each by a major- nearly 3000 votes.

RYONE who had worked breathed a sigh ief. The money had been raised, plans new, modern school building were ap- d, and early in the spring ground was n for the Olympic School. But the bat- is not half over. Even then school di- s realized that a new financial drive nly a matter of time.

We could build one Olympic School for of the next five years, and still lose d." Mr. McNamara told school direc- "I think our next step should be a new high school. Then we could turn the nt junior high over to more primary s. Otherwise the Olympic School will double shifts inside of a year."

While recognizing the need for early action, school directors agreed with him that the public would not be ready for another financial drive for "probably two years." The state still was unable to make any funds available. There was nothing to do but wait.

Mothers of prospective Olympic School students took matters in their own hands in the late summer, only nine months after the levies had been passed. Walking home from the grocer's past the new Olympic building, or taking a special trip over at night "because we were all so excited about watching the building go up," they became dismayed when for several days only a few men seemed to be working. "I almost cried," one mother said, "because I thought all our work was in vain, and that the school would never be ready to open in January."

DESPITE the contractor's assurances that there was nothing to worry about, a committee of three mothers—Mrs. Van Sickle, Mrs. Spence and Mrs. Lindsay—went to work telephoning nearly 400 parents whose children might be affected. "We thought some other arrangements should be made in case the school didn't open," Mrs. Spence said. "And other mothers agreed. By the end of ten days we had located a church playroom which we thought could be converted into four classrooms, and carpenters and electricians to do the work free of charge. We asked Mr. McNamara to let us go ahead."

While Mr. McNamara investigated, PTA mothers carried their campaign one step farther. At the October meeting of the L.E.P.C., Mrs. Van Sickle told of the mothers' concern and urged the L.E.P.C. to "do something now about getting more schools." Mr. Milligan backed her up with facts and figures. And by the end of the meeting, eight members had volunteered to visit civic organizations, bring them up to date on the school situation, and propose that they join in sponsoring an immediate financial drive. When the answer from each group was the same—"Go ahead, and the sooner the better"—school directors voted to propose a bond issue of $750,000, the most they could legally raise in 1950, at the next general election, in February. The bonds would be retired in ten years by a levy of approximately 3.5 mills each year, or $3.50 on each $1000 of assessed valuation.

"The mothers and the L.E.P.C. really pushed us into it," Mr. Brown said. "We knew the situation and we knew something had to be done sometime. They convinced us we could go ahead immediately."

Under the direction of Mr. Milligan and Mrs. Van Sickle, who "practically deserted" her four children for a month, a careful campaign was worked out. The problem was public awareness. With public sentiment so strongly on their side, they didn't have to worry this time so much about how people voted, as whether they voted, for according to Washington state law, 40 per cent of the number of people voting in the last general election must vote in order to carry a bond or levy. Here lay the difficulty. The last election had been held during a presidential campaign and had drawn better than 8000 voters. This election was for school officials only—always a light election which normally would draw an average of not more than 900 voters.

"In other words," Mr. Milligan said, "we had to draw out more than two thousand people who normally wouldn't vote at all.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Good-by, Good Morrow

(For C. C.)

By Bette Richart

I understand the mourning of the dove
Who fears her solitude before it comes.
I see the fly, the amber that entombs.
I know their helpless grief that cannot move
Seeing my lover leave, but not my love.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

AMAZING NEW LEWYT INVENTION
makes Lewyt Vacuum Cleaner a Carpet Sweeper too!

WITH THE LEWYT, it's the world's first high-suction Rug Nozzle with a revolving brush! Its pick-up of embedded dirt, threads, even dog hairs will astound you! So much lighter, quieter, easier rolling, too! Self-cleaning; self-adjusting — perfect for "highs-and-lows" in sculptured carpets!

WITHOUT THE LEWYT, it's the world's most amazing carpet sweeper! Crumbs, tobacco, bits of paper — nothing escapes it! Never needs emptying! It empties itself when used as a vacuum cleaner! Lower slung...streamlined for wall-to-wall cleaning...and just about half the weight of ordinary sweepers!

WORLD'S FIRST HIGH-SUCTION RUG NOZZLE WITH REVOLVING BRUSH

*Outcleans conventional vacuum cleaners! Outcleans old fashioned carpet sweepers! It's a 2-in-1 work-saving, space-saving miracle! (Optional Equipment. Present Lewyt owners can purchase at nominal cost.)

NO DUST BAG TO EMPTY

DO IT with LEWYT

Listed by Underwriters' Laboratories

NO DUST BAG! SIMPLY THROW OUT LEWYT'S NEW PAPER "SPEED-SAK" A FEW TIMES A YEAR!

It's quiet—no annoying roar! ■ Allergy-proof filter system! ■ Neat, compact storage ■ 10 light, easy-to-use attachments that dust...sweep floors...clean drapes...spray paint...wax...de-moth! ■ Costs no more than conventional cleaners!

SEE THE NEW LEWYT TODAY! DEALERS EVERYWHERE!

LEWYT CORPORATION, Vacuum Cleaner Division, Dept. 11, 66 Broadway, Brooklyn 11, N. Y.

☐ Without obligation, rush me FREE copy of Lewyt's brand new 16-page full color book "Home Cleaning Made Easy"!

☐ I want to see Lewyt's Vacuum Cleaner-Carpet Sweeper invention perform on my own rugs!

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____

COUNTY _____ STATE _____

You'll want both!

TWO MAGNIFICENT BEDSPREADS, NEWLY FASHIONED, TO MAKE THEM VIRTUALLY LINT-FREE!

You can see at once the lustrous tufted beauty of these exquisite new candlewick bedspreads.
What you can't see is the special Morgan-Jones construction that preserves their luxurious charm.
Both bedspreads have sturdy, smooth-lying cotton backgrounds but . . . the decorative tufts are a special yarn of new-found brilliance that sheds practically no lint!
Count on Morgan-Jones for new ideas like this.
Count on Morgan-Jones for outstanding quality.
Ask for these bedspreads by name, at better stores everywhere.

MORGAN-JONES, INC.
58 Worth St., New York 13

There were lots who offered odds that we couldn't do it."

"But what a campaign!" said one businessman. "Frankly, I thought they were crazy even to try and raise a bond issue at a small election like that, but they had everyone and his dog out working. Sometimes it seemed as though they could win if all their workers remembered to vote!"

Guided by lists of all registered voters, mothers again visited other mothers to discuss the issues personally and leave a mimeographed reminder that "February 4th is Vote Day." School officials and members of the L.E.P.C. explained the need and the cost of schools in a special series of fifteen-minute radio broadcasts. Public-speaking students from the Lower Columbia Junior College earned classroom credit with similar talks to any local organization contacting a speakers' bureau run for the campaign by the L.E.P.C. And members of these organizations in turn spread the word at home and among their friends.

No real opposition to the bond issue ever materialized. Though there were consistent rumors that "the lumber mills don't like the idea because, as the largest property owners, they'll be paying the bulk of the tax," many mill officials got out and worked to see the bond issue passed. Other voters, worried for fear the new buildings would be temporary structures like those put up in other parts of the state to meet emergency needs, were reassured by school directors that "We realize our population boom is not temporary. The people are here to stay, and so are the schools we're building." The cost appeared to be the least of anyone's worries.

"We want our children to get the best schools and the best education possible," one father said, "and we'll pay any amount for it as long as we feel it's necessary."

"That was the miracle," a businessman said. "We have lots of young people here and at least eighty per cent own their own homes. Each mill levy cost them in the neighborhood of thirty dollars, depending on the evaluation on their land, and the bond would cost them around five dollars and twenty-five cents a year for ten years. Yet they felt they had to have the schools."

Even the children agreed on the need for more schools. Social-science and English classes discussed "Why it would be better if we had fewer pupils in the room," and "Ways we can help get good election results." In arithmetic classes children subtracted the number of pupils they should have in schools of this size from the number of pupils they do have. Junior-high-school students acted out their own original scripts for classroom programs—a boy telling the woman next door why more schools are necessary, two girls planning to baby-sit for their neighbors so they could go vote.

Each student, under the direction of his teacher, located in colored crayon on a small mimeographed map the polling place nearest his home, and gave it to his parents with complete directions on how to get there. A six-year-old boy, overcome with enthusiasm, made a door-to-door canvass on his street urging everyone to "vote for schools." Little girls passed out handmade red cardboard V's as another reminder that "February 4th is Vote Day."

THE problem remained: everyone wanted more schools, but would they remember to get out and vote? With this constantly in mind, Mr. Milligan planned a maximum, all-out effort for February fourth—a maximum effort which was needed even more than anyone anticipated when a freezing rain covered sidewalks and roads with a thin coating of ice so slippery that walking and driving were almost impossible.

"You couldn't have found a worse day in the whole winter," Mr. Milligan said. "When my wife and I went down to vote, our car skidded off the road, and lots of men couldn't get to work. We were all terribly discouraged."

Anxiously Mr. Milligan and a few wor watched the weather. Voting was light— lighter than usual for a school election. W at noon, the sun came out, and ice began to break up, walking was difficult; "but if you bundled up for r weather and gave yourself lots of tim skid to the polls and back, you could i it—we hoped," Mrs. Van Sickle said. got to work immediately."

PTA mothers, who had arranged with telephone company earlier to put on operators, began calling every home in L view with the reminder that "You get out and vote if you want more scho Sixty teachers and mothers, workin shifts, provided cars for voters who coul to the polls no other way, and high-sc girls went along as baby-sitters for mo with young children.

A SOUND truck, manned by Paul Bil ton and Dallas Dedrick, two ex-college fessors "with good vocal cords," set after voters in the afternoon. "We pr cally roped them in," Mr. Billington "I'm afraid sometimes we were a little but the people voted. We even sent chil chasing into the house after their par not a political technique I thoroughly prove of, but we needed the votes— good cause."

Every hour Mr. Milligan, who was op ing a "nerve center" at the high schoo ceived a report on voting from worke each polling place, and the sound truck off for areas reporting the lightest vo The effects were immediate.

All life is an experiment. What if you do fail, and get fairly rolled in the dirt once or twice? Up again, you shall never be so afraid of a tumble. —EMERSON.

Children didn't f either. "The minute daughter got up that m ing, she wanted to k if the polls were ope and when I was goi go," one mother said. other said, "My brought the map of ing places to the brea table. 'This is ex where you go,' he said, 'and you have to was planning to go anyway, but I cou have faced him if I hadn't."

Even so, at six o'clock, with the polls for only two hours more, the situation looked serious. A local news commen warned on his six-o'clock broadcast th thousand more people must vote, "or els drive will fail," and the sound truck out to catch men on their way home work. "We crossed our fingers hard," Van Sickle said. "We really though didn't stand a chance."

Their worries were in vain. People ha forgotten. In these last two hours, 2000 ple voted—1000 more than necessary— when the votes had been counted, 9 cent of all voters had agreed to increase own taxes for ten years in order to have schools.

Volunteers, justifiably thrilled with victory, were even more thrilled when Olympic School held an open house so children could show their parents just they liked most about the new school.

"See?" one little boy said. "We've lots of windows and new desks and a sink right in the room where we can our hands. And each kindergarten ha own playground too."

"Come on down this way," another boy said, pulling his mother's hand. "I to show you our toilets. They're swell. work real fast. And instead of having a w bunch of them in one room, we've got a bathroom next to each classroom— know, like having your own private toi "And look at the piano!" a little girl to her father. "Just our size. Isn't this s wonderful?"

"It made all our work worth while t how much the children love the school," Spence said. "They beg to dust and help things up, and they stay so late after sc that the janitor practically has to push t out the door when it's time to close up

"Yep," a little towhead said, "I d even mind being kept in in a place like t

THE

Englander alone makes a mattress of Airfoam* by GOODYEAR

America wakes up to THE NEW SLEEP

ON AN Airfoam MATTRESS

WITH A RED-LINE* FOUNDATION

—when used together—both are guaranteed for 20 years

Also available in wood rose stripe

This is the wonderful new mattress that is sleeping the country! It's genuine Airfoam, yet it costs no more than a good innerspring mattress. That's because Englander and Goodyear teamed up to develop it—put their heads together to bring America a brand-new standard of sleep. And what glorious sleep it is! Airfoam's millions of tiny air cells cradle you, suspend you, soothe you into the soundest, sweetest sleep of your life.

An Airfoam mattress requires a special type of support that ordinary box springs just cannot provide. To fill this need, Englander engineers have designed a special foundation—the Englander Red-Line Foundation—made for Airfoam and only Airfoam. So scientifically matched are they that we guarantee them for 20 years against any defects in material or workmanship when used together.

All the proof you need. Just press down on Airfoam. Feel how it molds itself to your hand, responds with a buoyant "uplift."

No other foundation works like this. Joined only through the middle by flexible steel bands, each spring in the upper half is free to adjust individually to every move. Lower part acts as a unit, supports body in the firm, healthful manner doctors recommend.

Englander
SLEEP PRODUCTS

★TM The Englander Company, Inc. *TM The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company © 1950, The Englander Company, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

"WONDERFUL!—the way Sofskin smooths my DRYSKIN HANDS!"

"Crazy about Sofskin Creme! It makes my hard-working hands look younger!" says Mrs. Leonard Winters, Hollis, Long Island.

Wonderful new cream softens 3 Kinds of Dryskin!

Soapy-water chapping . . . Dishwashing makes hands look older. Use Sofskin for a younger look!

Hard-water dryness... Hands feel dry, drawn! See how Sofskin softens your dry, surface skin!

Cold-weather roughness . . . Hands rough, red? Sofskin's creamy richness beautifies!

YOUR DRYSKIN HANDS FEEL SMOOTHER, LOOK YOUNGER...IN SECONDS!

The moment you smooth on Sofskin Creme, your hands feel the difference! Dry surface skin seems to lap up its creamy goodness. For this amazing cream penetrates . . . doesn't just slick the top. Made with true skin-softeners, it smooths 3 kinds of dryskin . . . cold-weather roughness, soapy-water chapping, hard-water dryness. Suddenly you, too, have 'Sofskin' Hands . . . lovely to his eyes, thrilling to his touch!

So successful, 3 out of 5 who try it, buy it! Available at all drug and cosmetic counters.

Sofskin Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. CREME

GET BIG 25¢ JAR luxurious Sofskin ONLY 10¢

MAIL TODAY! Send coin — no stamps
Sofskin Co., Dept. 102, Bloomfield, N. J.
Please send me big 25¢ jar of luxurious Sofskin Creme. I enclose 10¢ in coin.
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ Zone _____ State _____

OUR OWN YOUNG MARRIEDS

(Continued from Page 44)

rest of it, it's ingenuity that counts. An open mind, for instance, for inexpensive surprise fabrics for draperies and slip covers—like turkish toweling, ticking, gaudy felts; an X-ray eye that sees through the gingerbread and crackled paint of junk-shop bargains to clean, sturdy lines.

The ideas sketched and photographed on pages 44 and 45 are some of our most prideful and successful budget innovations—all originated, revised or refurbished by our own hands.

Take the matter of draperies, for instance. A room without them has about as much dimension and expression as a face without eyebrows—but good-looking drapery materials for even a small apartment can add up to a nightmare of expense. When Nancy and Fred Russe moved six months ago (Nancy is assistant to Ruth Mills Teague in her Conversation Piece features), their new apartment had three more rooms and six more windows than their old one. They channeled most of their furnishing funds toward a new sofa, and rugs to cover all the floors—for the benefit of the people in the apartment below as well as for themselves. So (see the sketch on page 44) they decided to dress up their nine bare windows in colored muslin sheeting-by-the-yard, an easy, graceful fabric for windows that lets the light in, launders beautifully, denies its humble origins amazingly. It costs about $1.98 per yard, for 90″-wide material (double-bed width), and is generally to be had in blue, pink, pale yellow, as well as white; 81″ and 45″ widths, of course, are even cheaper. These sheeting draperies couldn't be simpler to make—a wide hem at top and bottom, and no lining. If your windows are narrow and you want them to look wider, extend the draperies, as the Russes did, a foot or so beyond the window's actual measurement. They used two 3-yard lengths of 90″ material, hung them on brass rings, strung them along a thick brass portiere rod, 60 cents per foot at most department stores. Total cost for one pair of draperies plus rod, about $15.

THIS same sketch shows a second of the Russes' budget innovations—a coffee table made from an old Jacobean bench base, which cost $7; the booty from a Saturday afternoon's stroll through neighborhood junk shops. After sanding and lacquering the base, Fred fitted a wooden top into the base, pasted it over smoothly with Chinese silvery tea-box paper, using regular wallpaper paste, which comes in a powdered form and must be mixed with water. Any attractive paper—plain silver gift-wrapping paper, for instance—or a good-looking wallpaper might be used. Just be sure the paper is heavy enough so the paste won't come through. Fred and Nancy had a glass top cut to fit, and now it's a family stand-by and as good as it is beautiful—impervious to cigarette burns, and the rings from wet glasses wipe up easily. You might also use a coat of lacquer on the paper, instead of glass—rub it down with powdered pumice and linseed oil, and lacquer it again. (Try the lacquer on a small piece of the paper before you begin, to make sure it doesn't come through and blotch.) The finish will be satiny rather than shiny, and very durable, though not so impervious as glass.

Speaking of windows, another good idea for them is sketched on page 44. An ordinary blind of split bamboo is used, the inexpensive inside-bark type, which over the years has gracefully screened the sun from every kind of room from a tropical patio to your grandmother's sun porch. These blinds are generally available in department stores, cost about 45¢ a square foot. If your windows are a usual size, you can do with the stock blinds a 4′-wide blind costs about $3; a 6′ one, about $4. The trick here is to thread it through with gay-colored ribbons, tapes, anything that has color and seems to you to look well. The range of possibilities is as wide as ingenuity (a discreet one) can make it. The

April Show

Finest impor
talcum po
3 pl

by CHERAMY perfum

MATERNITY DRESSES

Fall Styles

Dresses & suits for morning, street, afternoon or sports, $2.95 to 22.50. Also maternity corse & lingerie. (Catalog mailed in plain envelope CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A729 Balt., Kansas

INGROWN N Hurting
Immed
Rel

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed reli tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO ens the skin underneath the nail, allows the be cut and thus prevents further pain and fort. OUTGRO is available at all drug co

SITROU TISSUE
...buy SI softer, finer, stronger than ever or that SHADE of difference ether your window (or your budget) s large or small, Hartshorn has a ade to fit it. Yes, even picture windows or tiny dormers!

HARTSHORN WINDOW SHADES
FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.
ART HARTSHORN LTD., TORONTO, CANADA

ooms Smell Nice Quick with VAPAIR
TRADE MARK
ROOM DEODORANT
Bomb or Wick

VAPAIR BOMB — For instant killing of odors. Just press the button. Now Two Sizes $1.59 98¢
VAPAIR WICK — For continuous killing of odors. Just pull up wick. Full 10 oz. 69¢
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Buying a MATTRESS?
Be Sure It's REINFORCED with LONGER-LASTING*
PERM-A-LATOR® Wire INSULATORS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
LOOK FOR THIS TAG!
Tests prove wire insulators last more than twice as long as other insulators. Insist on PERM-A-LATORS and get greater comfort . . . longer-lasting mattresses and upholstered furniture.
Write for Free Booklet!
FLEX-O-LATORS, Inc. Carthage, Mo.
Factories in Carthage, Mo. and New Castle, Pa.

blind in the sketch might go well with a Victorian type of décor; we've used colored tapes, ribbons and strands of knitting wool, and heavy rug-knitting cotton from the dime store; it's finished off with a cascade of woolen tassels on either side, like the ones on children's knitted caps—several short strands of the knitting wool doubled over, tied near the top with a piece of the yarn. The same blind might look wonderful woven through with silver and gold Christmas ribbon; or the brightly striped silk ribbon that belongs to military decorations. For a bedroom, you might run the blind through with old-fashioned white silk-taffeta ribbon, printed with wispy-looking pastel roses and daisies; finish it off at the sides with clusters of ribbon loops in different lengths. Whatever you use, you'll need a flat bodkin (the same kind that's used to thread ribbons through eyelet lingerie) and you should make sure that your ribbon is really sturdy, or else it'll be frayed before you get to the top of the blind. The ribbon should also be the same on both sides, or double-faced, as the underside will show when the blind is rolled up. You'll have to be able to get at both sides of the blind, so it's a good idea to hang it in a doorway while you're weaving. You can use the blind's strings as a guide to get ribbons and tapes straight.

It's hard to find good-looking lamps these days whose price tags don't look as if they belonged on a trip to Europe. The two on page 45 were John and Mary Adele Morris' idea (John is the JOURNAL'S picture editor)—really handsome jobs executed at home by Mary Adele. Following in her footsteps, to make the block-shaped modern lamp on the left, your first stop would be your local lumber company, for a 6″ x 6″—preferably good hardwood. (If you can't get a 6″ x 6″, two 3″ x 6″ may be glued together, after sanding, of course. This works out just as well.) Pine is the least expensive—the block lamp in the photograph is pine, cut across the grain. Walnut, mahogany, oak and birch cost more (a little or a lot more, according to your locality). If there is a shop in town where they do millwork you can have your wood sanded there; otherwise, rent or borrow a sanding machine, assume a solid stance, and sand it down yourself. (It should be a big belt sander, if you want it to be quick. It goes like the wind and all you have to do is keep it from pulling you into the next room.) Doing the sanding yourself has its rewards; it's really exciting to see the whiskers disappear, and the beautiful satiny grain of the wood come to life. Leave your timber in one piece. It's much easier to sand that way, and anyway, you can't tell what grain patterns your piece will have till it's sanded down far enough to see them. When it's finished, mark off the lengths you need for your bases and saw them off (it's a good idea to go by the measurements of lamps you already have), being sure to make the most of the knots, color changes and pattern of the grain in your wood. Drill them for wiring, or have an electrician do it—one hole about ½″ in diameter straight through the center, and another from the side halfway through to meet it at the base. Let your local electrician struggle with the wiring and mounting of the light socket and harp for the shade. You can get all the electrical equipment at any hardware store. The lamp on the right was made from a sawed-off stair baluster purchased from a local carpenter. The procedure (minus sanding, of course) is exactly as described above for the other lamp, wiring and all.

A talent is formed in silence, but a character in the stream of the world. —GOETHE.

You can suit yourself as to finish. Perhaps the simplest is a coat of clear shellac rubbed down with fine steel wool, and waxed. Or you can have a high gloss with several coats of lacquer, or a pickled effect with paint rubbed in and then rubbed off again, or an exotic black stain with white or pale gray paint

Everybody come and see WOOLWORTH'S
Gumdrop Goody Tree

LARGE 13″ TREE—Use it as a dinner centerpiece, as a canape server. Clear plastic with bon-bon dish base. each 49¢

COLORFUL CANDY for decorating (as shown). Big 12-oz. bag of pure spiced gumdrops. 20¢

13″ tree with 12-oz. bag of gumdrops. 69¢ complete

All prices slightly higher in the West

7″ TREE—Put one at each child's place at parties. Use for place settings at dinners. each 10¢

CANDY for decorating (as shown) 5-oz. bag of spiced gumdrops. . . . . 9¢

7″ tree with 5-oz. bag of gumdrops. . . complete 19¢

Don't wait another second to see Woolworth's exciting plastic tree with its colorful gumdrop ornaments that look good enough to eat—and are! For children's parties . . . birthdays holidays Christmas it's a fairy tale come to life. For grown-up entertaining, the 13″ tree is a smart, conversation-making canape server or dinner centerpiece idea . . . the smaller 7″ tree makes an ideal individual place marker. And you're sure to think of dozens of other clever year-'round uses. Come—see the wonderful Goody Tree at Woolworth's—now!

F. W. WOOLWORTH CO.

Sandman's Choice

KANTWET
now brings you the best in both leading types of Crib Mattresses

KANTWET Fomat
100% LATEX FOAM RUBBER

Good care means good rest. And here's a crib mattress that helps your baby get more of the really restful sleep he needs. The KANTWET Fomat is cool and comfortable, sanitary and non-allergic. Genuine KANTWET cover—wet-proof, washable and flame-retarding — conveniently zippered so you can easily replace it for the next baby in the family. For the finest foam rubber crib mattress, choose KANTWET.

KANTWET Posturized
INNERSPRING CRIB MATTRESS

It builds good posture for your baby, right from the start. Only KANTWET has every important posture feature — including built-in Dorsal Pad for permanently firm, level support, and improved, patented FLEX-O-LOC innerspring construction. Genuine KANTWET cover. For the finest innerspring crib mattress, choose the Posture-Perfect KANTWET.

Look for this label — ask for Kantwet by name rubbed in afterward. For a good-looking shade, you might get a ready-made parchment one and wrap around it a split-bamboo place mat (or two, depending on size of shade), tacking it carefully in place around the top and bottom edges by sewing through to the lamp-shade frame. You might try a colored opaque shade, and paint the bamboo mat in a contrasting color—before you tack it to the shade, of course!
Rose Derry Co., Newton 58, Mass. • Chicago • Los Angeles

Brick-and-board bookcases are claimed by Polly and Todd Cooke as their most successful budget idea. "We have no desire to endow our apartment," says Polly, "with built-ins which we'd have to leave behind us when we move. But books are pointless unless they're easy to get at, and a nuisance if stored in packing boxes." So the Cookes sanded and primed 2" x 10" unfinished pine boards, cut them cautiously to fit the shallow recesses beside their fireplace, and painted them light gray to match the walls. The supports were well-scrubbed building bricks, piled in a wall-like pattern, but without mortar (see sketch, Page 45). Polly warns all takers, "Since there are evidently hundreds of different kinds of brick, be sure that they're all the same kind!" This type of bookcase can be made to fit neatly into nooks and angular halls, if you're accurate in cutting board lengths. And the shelves have an Alice-in-Wonderland affinity for growing with your library, stretching to fit your twelve-inch records. Variations on this theme, incidentally, might be to use glass brick instead of building brick, or to paint your bricks the color of the walls before you stack them, which is more of a bother, but gives a very finished effect.

HANDSOME and homemade storage gadgets are Ellie and John Simmons' forte. (Ellie, incidentally, did the sketches which illustrate these ideas on Pages 44 and 45.) The old lacy-legged grade-school desk sketched in the upper-left-hand corner of Page 45 was the seed of one of their ideas. John spotted the desk one afternoon in a junk shop, paid $3 for it (including delivery). Painted, and the inside lined with tarnish-resistant blue cotton flannel, it has become an easy-reach home for the family silver. Candles or flowers go in the inkpots on either side, and the shelf underneath is handy for cookbooks, since there's no room for them inside their Pullman kitchenette, off the dining room.

An heirloom from their first pocket-sized apartment is a china cabinet invented to save floor space, and multiply storage space. The base, an unpainted four-drawer chest; the top, an inverted bookcase with a scroll-sawed top (nee bottom). The chest of drawers, painted to match the dining-room walls, houses linens, casseroles, everyday dishes, and the top, which they papered on the inside with a patterned, contrasting color, holds pretty dishes, goblets, bowls.

The Simmonses also made for their living room a two-story table-of-all-trades from a 6'-long student table, cut down to 14" high, and a small square typing stand bobbed off at 16". "We took the drawers out, and use the emptied drawer space for a king-sized influx of monthly magazines," says Ellie. "The cave under the typing stand is for records, and its top is a stand for our record player. There is plenty of room on the table top for our after-dinner coffee tray, and with a couple of bright cushions, it can serve as a perch for several guests at crowded parties."

To keep order in a child's room, if you are the proud parent of a small bronco buster, as Mary Adele Morris suggests, you can lend a bit of Wild West atmosphere by suspending his Gene Autry and Roy Rogers pictures from rawhide shoelaces tied with important looking knots. Another stunt is to get him a large chest of drawers which will hold cowboy boots and chaps, as well as more conventional attire, and make drawer pulls for it from 2" strips of leather (see sketch on Page 45) looped and held in place by a screw and washer (to prevent splitting); make a handle for his toy chest with another strip. Hang a board with 3" pegs in it at a convenient height for him to hang up his guns and holsters. They will be just as decorative on his wall as on his person, and it should keep them out of your kitchen. THE END Mothers prefer Curity Diapers an praise them because they are comf on baby and they . . .

Wash Easier—Open weave permit quick, thorough cleansing in suds o pure Ivory Flakes, Ivory Soap or Dreft Dry Faster — Indoors or out, drying air acts faster on the open weave.

Resist Wrinkles — Special proces reduces after-laundering wrinkles . . eliminates size distortion.

Absorb Fully — Thirsty surgica weave permits greater absorption.

Feel Softer — As wonderfully sof as they feel.

Fold Easier — Exclusive woven-in Foldlines show Mother how . . . readily adjustable as baby grows.

Small wonder that Curity is the larg est selling gauze diaper . . . used an endorsed by mothers, medical author ities, leading hospitals. Your favorit infants or department store has then . . . modern diaper laundries use them For dress-up and gifts see the new Curity Diapers in pastel pink, blue maize or mint green.

NURSER PADS • BIBS • FLUFFS • MASKS
PAT. NO. 2,146,137

MAIL THE COUPO

KENDALL MILLS — Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J110
Enclosed is 25c (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____
Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

Adolescence is a time of uncertainty, of self-consciousness and an overemphasis on good looks. It is also a time of skin problems that no drug can cure.

What to Do About Acne

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

I could say of the acne of adoas it has been possible to say any diseases which plague the that some marvelous new agent ound that will wipe away the ons in a treatment or two. For type of acne usually disappears rity, it is a great burden to the while it lasts. Coming at a time and girls are intensely conscious earance, it can cause acute men- to the sensitive. It is not hard and why I am asked so often if something that will banish this asily.

reply that, unfortunately, progng a sure cure for acne has been ne cases, large doses of vitamins, especially vitamin A, have been found helpful. Of course these large doses must be given under a doctor's care.

Much experimental work has been carried out and is still going on, involving the use of glandular extracts. These, too, have helped many youngsters with acne. Scientists feel that they are getting closer to a specific that can be counted on in all, or at least in the great majority of, acne cases. So far, however, this substance has not been forthcoming.

Probably the biggest news on acne is the therapy for skins that have been left permanently scarred or pitted by acute attacks of the disease. A surgical operation similar to sandpapering is done while the patient is under an anesthetic. In order to be effective, it must go deep into the skin—naturally a difficult and painful procedure. In some cases it is necessary to do the operation in two or three separate steps before the appearance is definitely improved. So far the method has been tried with a limited number of patients, so that it is too early to promise that it will help all those on whom acne has left its mark.

But all this is not to say that there are not ways of lessening acne and perhaps of avoiding it altogether. The fact is that if adolescents, guided lovingly and tactfully by their mothers, would only carry out the things we have known for a number of years, most youths could keep the unsightly blotches to a minimum, and perhaps dispense with them altogether.

I must confess here that the cause of the acne of adolescence is not included in this knowledge. The disease, however, seems to be associated with the fact that at puberty great changes occur in the glandular system. One phase of this is an excessive production of fatty secretion, sometimes containing dead tissue cells, from the little glands in the skin. Skin blemishes proceed EFUL young mothers from to California tell us that Bundesen's baby booklets een of the greatest help to caring for their own babies. st eight booklets cover your first eight months. They sell cents. The second series of s covers the baby's health ine months to two years—booklets for 50 cents. A te book on the care of the necessary supplement to nthly booklets, OUR BABIES, 45, is 50 cents. A booklet ast feeding, A DOCTOR'S DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. ells for 6 cents. Information atal care is given in BEFORE BY COMES, No. 2383, which d at 50 cents. Address all s to the Reference Library, HOME JOURNAL, Philadel- Pennsylvania.

Can you see your baby at these important ages?

At 3 months, don't you hope your baby will be round and rosy as apple-cheeked Johnnie Davis was? Well here's one way to make sure: give your baby the iron-rich Clapp's Cereals that helped Johnnie thrive. (Clapp's Cereals will bring your baby 3 times more iron than unfortified cereals.)

At 7 months will your cherub have the bright eyes and strong little body that tell you Johnnie is blooming? One secret to Johnnie's success was his nourishing diet of Clapp's Strained Foods. (Pressure-cooked to bring babies extra nourishment.)

At 12 months. Did you ever see a happier, healthier toddler? Johnnie tipped the scales at 22 pounds. Stood 31 inches tall. He gave his new teeth plenty of exercise on Clapp's Junior Foods. (They're specially chopped to help teethers learn to chew.)

At 12 years. That's not as far off as it seems! So, mother, make the best of these important baby years. Give your baby the world's finest baby diet. Start him thriving on Clapp's Foods today. Like Johnnie's mother, you'll always be glad you did!

DOCTORS HAVE BEEN RECOMMENDING CLAPP'S BABY FOODS LONGER THAN ANY OTHER BABY FOODS

Product of American Home Foods

FOR naturally BEAUTIFUL HAIR...

"Pure Castile is the Best Shampoo!"

LOVELY MRS. ROBERT INCH of Queens Village, Long Island, says "I like Conti because it leaves my hair soft, easy-to-manage and glowing with highlights." Mrs. Inch is typical of the attractive young wives all over America who agree with beauty authorities that pure castile is the best shampoo. "There's no shampoo like Conti," says Mrs. Inch, "for naturally beautiful hair!"

For Entire Family "Of course, I never use anything but pure Conti Castile Shampoo on Betsy's delicate hair. I know it's mild and gentle . . . contains no alcohol or harsh chemicals. I always make sure there is enough Conti in the house," says Mrs. Inch. "It's the economical shampoo for my entire family!"

Groom-up Time "Being busy is no excuse for neglecting your hair. I shampoo regularly with Conti . . . its olive oil keeps my hair soft and radiant."

For lovelier hair... today... tomorrow... and always

Conti THE PURE Castile SHAMPOO

from the fact that the fatty secretions just mentioned often harden in the little ducts leading from the glands to the skin surface. Dirt becomes mixed with the fatty secretion, forming what is commonly known as a blackhead. Inflammation may develop around the blackhead, and then infection results. Pustules are formed—the ugly, red, fluid-filled bumps or pimples which come in clusters on the face, neck or back of the acne victim. In severe acne, the infection is deeper, so that tissue is destroyed. When healing takes place, craters are formed that may be permanently disfiguring.

Why do some children get acne and not others? The answer to this question, too, is not fully known. It is thought that perhaps there may be some disturbance in the glands of internal secretion. A vitamin deficiency has been suggested as a possible cause. Diets high in sweets, particularly chocolate, and in starchy foods such as bread, cereal and potatoes, are thought to be a contributing cause. If the fatty secretion is allowed to remain on the skin, this, too, will contribute to keeping the pores blocked.

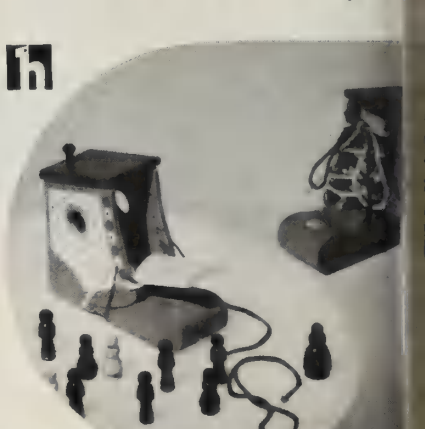
THERE are some adolescents who consume too many candy bars and chocolate drinks, and many are inclined to carry out their daily ablutions indifferently if left to themselves. In these youngsters it is not hard to understand why acne cases get such a good start.

What is the mother's job in all this? First, when a child starts the changes of puberty, she should explain the situation clearly to the boy or girl, and particularly so if blackheads appear. Work together to see that a well-balanced diet is eaten, including plenty of fresh vegetables. Chocolate, coffee and tea should be eliminated from the diet, if the youngster is consuming these things. Bread, cereal and potatoes should be eaten in small amounts if at all, and the "filling up" so necessary for the hollow leg of this age should be done on fruits, vegetables and milk.

A boy I knew wanted to reduce his weight so that he could enter the Golden Gloves tournament for amateur boxers. Under medical supervision, he did this by cutting out all sweets and starches and consuming large quantities of lean meat, eggs, vegetables, fruit and milk. By the time he had reduced his weight, without losing strength and energy, his formerly blotchy skin had become as clear as a baby's!

Second, it is the mother's job to see that skin cleanliness is strictly observed. The daily bath or shower is a must for youngsters in puberty and adolescence, and mother should make sure that the face and neck especially are scrubbed hard with a soapy washcloth. Where acne has already started, it often helps to wash the face and neck with soap three times a day.

Blackheads should be removed, but this should never be done by forced squeezing with the fingernails. Instead, the area should be washed thoroughly with hot water; then hot towels should be applied for five or ten minutes to soften the skin and loosen the plug so it can be removed easily. This operation should be performed with a blackhead remover, a small, flat instrument with a hole at one end, on sale at drugstores. Afterward, the hot towels should be applied again to diminish the inflammation that may have been caused by the pressure.



If bumps and pustules break out in clusters, it is time to consult the doctor. Attempts to remove or open the pustules at home will not improve the condition and may result in scars.

But probably the most important job of mothers whose adolescent children have acne is the prevention of severe emotional disturbances. The child with acne has a particular need to know that he is loved and esteemed by his parents. A special effort should be made to encourage acne sufferers to take part in school and social activities. In this way they will learn that they are accepted for their qualities of mind, character and personality, rather than for their appearance. And with the end of adolescence, or shortly thereafter, in most cases the acne disappears of itself.

THE END

Choose the toys that help your ch progress! Holgate's famous educatio toys fit the age needs of every pre-sch child. Approved by pediatricians a educators. At better stores everywhe

LACING SHOE. Beloved by youngsters—t nursery rhyme toy quickly develops laci skill. They love to practice on this charmi shoe which holds the Old Woman and h many children. From 1½ to 5 yrs. . . $3.

ROCKY COLOR CONE. How it fascinates! spindle with six rainbow-colored discs stack in order, unstack or tip over. Repeat play develops eye-hand coordination, a perception of size and shape. Chew-sa color-fast. From 6 to 18 mos. . . . . $1.

HOLGATE TOY

TRAIN AS WELL AS ENTERTAIN

▪ NOW MADE FOR SALE IN CANADA BY HILL-CLARK-FRANCIS, LTD., NEW LISKEARD, ONT.

FREE Folder showing large assortment of Holgate Toys. Or send 10¢ (to cover mailing cost), for complete 24-page catalog, including selection chart showing toys suitable for each age from 6 months to 8 years.

HOLGATE BROTHERS CO.
Kane, Pa., Dept. L-110

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ Zone _____ State _____

I WOULD . . . I WOULD NOT

(Continued from Page 39)

s you go somewhere afterward, but if is, remember—you might make an idiot of yourself and embarrass Anne. nless you've done a lot more experi- ng than I think you have, you'd better ave a cigarette, either."

h, honestly, mother, you think of the est things!"

t she didn't mind mother's little lec- She sort of liked them, really; they her feel looked after and secure in a hat didn't damage her self-respect, and weren't too hard to take, especially they were about things she didn't in- to do anyway. Bubbly drinks made roat tickle and she had always hated, e same reason, the few cigarettes she een compelled by custom to smoke at . on the damp slope behind Crafts Hall. t a cigarette made you look so sophisti- , she thought regretfully. When she pic- herself moving with beauty and assur- through one of her daydreams, it was st always in a ball dress and she was al- always gliding across a polished floor one hand on the arm of a tall man in while the other hand held a glowing ette like a wand between two slender t-tipped fingers. Maybe, she thought tively, she could accept one, just take puffs to start it burning, and then sort ry it around until it burned out.

d, as if having the braces off and Anne's ation weren't enough, Thursday after- , coming out of Latin, she had run right Chuck Manson's arms! He had put out ong red-wool-checked arm and said, -tut, sugar foot! You wouldn't want wl me over, would you?"

e'd worshiped him from afar ever since started high school last fall, but she'd r thought he even knew she was alive, naybe he still didn't, but he had touched nd he had spoken to her! She'd had to duck around the corner and sit down on the stairs up to Lab for a second, her knees were so jellyish.

The rest of that day, and Friday, by means of notes and verbal communication, she had discussed with Margery and Connie, her two best friends, future possibilities arising from the accident, and they had agreed in the happy conclusion that anything might happen. Of course Chuck was just about the most popular senior and unarguably he did have a girl of his own, but —— "I think she's a mess," Connie had said comfortingly. "Honestly, I bet her waist measures twenty-six inches if it measures an inch!"

"Oh, Connie, that's mean! It couldn't!" Elizabeth had protested, drawing a deep breath and feeling her own twenty-two-and-a-half-inch waist diminish to nothingness.

And now here it was Saturday and she was almost there. Already she could see Anne, her small square face with its near-sighted frown intent on the approaching train, her small square figure firmly attached to the platform by her cute, funny, short legs that still toed in. Elizabeth felt a rush of affection to the heart, increased by her enormous relief at actually having got here. She hadn't fallen onto the track, nobody had snatched her pocketbook, she hadn't lost her ticket, she hadn't done one thing that might have betrayed her less-than-fifteen years.

The porter handed her down her suitcase, with a grin that was not so much for the tip she had given him as for her fresh, gentle prettiness. Elizabeth had this effect on men of all sorts and ages. She was quite aware of it, but never worked at it, not at all from strength of character but because it seemed to be so effective by itself.

Anne saw her now and they ran to each other and touched cheeks. "Cutie!" said

(Continued on Page 137)

By Munro Leaf

This stubborn creature sitting here with its forehead all wrinkled up, getting squintier and squintier, is a Wrong-Reader. It has been told a thousand times that it should read with the light on the pages of its book. But do you think it will listen? Oh, no. Wrong-Readers read in the worst positions and places they can find; and if they strain their eyes badly someday, it will be their own faults. Foolish, foolish Wrong-Readers!

When "Childhood Constipation" makes your 10-month-old peevish...

When your baby is peevish and tearful because of "Childhood Constipation," give her Fletcher's Castoria . . . the mild yet thorough laxative that's made especially for her delicate little system. Your doctor will tell you Fletcher's Castoria does not contain a single harsh drug. So gentle, it cannot cause griping, diarrhea or discomfort. So pleasant tasting even very young babies take it willingly.

or your 10-year-old moody...

When your child acts moody and mopish because of "Childhood Constipation," remember this: Strong, adults' laxatives . . . even in reduced doses . . . may be too harsh! Give Fletcher's Castoria! It's thorough and effective, yet so gentle it will not upset sensitive digestive systems. And children really like its pleasant taste. So play safe, keep Fletcher's on hand at all times.

give Fletcher's Castoria

The laxative made especially for infants and children . . . children of all ages!

Chas. H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

"From high chair to high school!"

Wallace creates the only Sterling Silver patterns with Third Dimension Beauty

You can own a work of art . . . proudly possess sculpture in Sterling Silver . . . have a treasure at your fingertips. with your Wallace Sterling "Third Dimension Beauty" pattern. For. Wallace Sterling is truly precious silver . . . like sculpture . . . lovely from every possible view. Only Wallace Sterling has "Third Dimension Beauty"—an exquisite design not only in front. but in profile. and back as well.

Like every masterpiece a Wallace pattern grows more beautiful each time it graces your table. Top to bottom: Romance of the Sea. Rose Point. Stradivari. Grand Colonial. Sir Christopher and Grande Baroque. Six piece settings priced from $27.40 to $37.50 including tax.

WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, WALLINGFORD, CONNECTICUT · Since 1835
WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, TORONTO, CANADA

COPYRIGHT

WALLACE
STERLING
Silver

(Continued from Page 135)

ıbeth, smiling and patting Anne's face one gloved hand.

ıne gave the annoyed, admiring laugh could never deny her sister's airs. zabeth, honestly! That's a darling suit. 've got too much lipstick on, though."

izabeth laughed lightly, turning her and lifting her chin enough to feel the ht of her hair shift and drop. "Don't be ! Is that the way they're wearing their down here? Yours isn't quite long gh for it, is it?"

aving thus re-established mutually satis- ›ry relationship, they moved along the orm and into the cab Anne had waiting, ng very fast and laughing a great deal. happened every time they had been rated for a while, but at the end of a few s together they would be able to sit in same room all day, reading or playing ·ds, and not say a single word.

Your dress came. It was hardly mussed l. I hung it over the shower rod to take vrinkles out."

There was a boy on the platform where anged. He wasn't very tall, but he had utest smile. He saw me looking at him ıe whistled. It was a riot. I couldn't hear but I could tell the way he held his th. Honestly, I just sat there and ned!"

ou're awful. Look, we're on campus There's Montague, where I have most y classes. And there's Miss Harmsen. woman crossing just ahead of us. See! she distinguished-looking? She's just back from Lon-" izabeth agreed, cing Miss Harmsen y and terribly old. the dark stone lings that framed campus, where the dils in bloom under great trees looked dently young and of place. No wonder Anne was crazy t her college. In a funny way, every- about it was exactly like Anne, and they went inside the dorm the dark lwork, great stone fireplaces and thread- Oriental rugs were just what Anne d choose.

ıe girl next door to Anne had gone away he week end and Elizabeth was to have room. Unpacking her bag, Elizabeth, had been hoping Anne would open the ect, finally yielded up dignity to curi- .

Well, now, tell me who you've got for or tonight. Is he cute?"

Oh, didn't I tell you? You're going with roommate of the boy I'm going with— lie Armstrong."

s Charlie the roommate?"

Oh, goodness, no! Charlie's my date. sort of goony, but all right, I guess. -John's your date. John Holmsen. 'll like him. He's awfully nice. He's not most boys we know. His father is a or and they used to live in China. He's so very good-looking, but he's very sen- . He doesn't think you're crazy if you about things like politics and music."

Oh, golly! Is he a Brain?"

s he! Charlie says everybody thinks going to be a genius or something. He's teran. He was a marine and he was nded and everything and it made him serious. He's going to be a lawyer. rnational law."

How old is he, for gosh sakes?"

Twenty-two, I think. Or maybe it's nty-three."

H, golly, Anne, what'll I talk to him ıt? Why didn't you ask him for your- and let me have this Charlie character?"

ıne went red. Her small face had that -peeled look it got when one of her secret ghts had been found out. Well, thought abeth, for goodness' sake, Anne's finally d herself a guy!

ther girls would have fibbed to protect prestige, but Anne, being Anne, said painful honesty, "I've asked John to things twice, and he's only asked me once. And only a dance, not a movie or anything like that."

Elizabeth nodded. In their world, a boy asked you to a dance for a lot of reasons, not necessarily connected with liking you, but he asked you to the movies for just one reason—because he liked being with you.

SHE was cross with Anne for asking somebody whom she herself liked and had gone out with, even if he didn't like Anne in return. Now tonight would be like going on a guided tour when you had thought you were going to explore. But she felt sorry for her sister, too. Anne was an awful innocent about boys. She never had known how to act with them or what to say to them, and now that she had finally found one she liked, she probably scared him off by talking philosophy or acting stuffy about even a courtesy kiss. Elizabeth longed, as she had often longed before, to give Anne some practical tips, but Anne would only turn embarrassed and cross. She had an absolute thing about pretending to be something she wasn't. And perhaps she was right. Maybe someday somebody would get to know Anne the way Elizabeth and mother and daddy did, and then he would love her "as is." But how was Anne going to find him, if she didn't experiment? It was really very worrying!

She said kindly, "That's the way it is with me and Chuck. You know—he's the one I wrote you that all our class is so crazy about. A senior and so wonderful in sports. Only I've never even got to go anywhere with him. But listen—last Thursday ——" And she told the whole thrilling story.

There are no unions that have not their dark days; but, when we have loved each other, we remember it always, and those sweet remembrances, that the heart accumulates, survive like twilight.

But Anne was such an unsatisfactory person to tell things like that to. She just said, "He probably thought you were somebody else. Anyway, Elizabeth, you oughtn't to be thinking about going out with seniors. Whatever happened to that nice boy you liked in dancing class?"

Anne would bring that up. Elizabeth wriggled in embarrassment. "Oh, honestly, Anne, that was ages ago. I didn't have any sense then. Why, he's only fifteen and shorter than I am! You know a boy that age doesn't have the mentality girls have. Why, if I told you some of the babyish things those kids do!"

The rest of the time before dinner went quickly. They'd take their baths after dinner, Anne said, because the dance didn't start until nine-thirty. Anyway, they couldn't have taken them before, because three or four girls piled in to talk and put Elizabeth at ease. Elizabeth, who was already more at ease than some of them would ever be, gave a charming imitation of "little sister away from home for the first time" while she watched and listened. All weird characters, she thought with a not unkindly amusement. How any female with legs like that could even think of wearing knee-length woolen stockings! And she would dearly love to get that dark girl's head over a basin with a jar of cream shampoo handy. But they were really awfully nice. That tall thin girl who had lived in Egypt and Turkey was very funny, and Elizabeth was interested in the English way she pronounced certain words. She toyed happily with the idea of saying to Mr. Dillon, "My grandmother is an invaleed"—Mr. Dillon being her English teacher and a man of fascinatingly affected speech.

Dinner was awful—unidentifiable meat in library-paste gravy, cold globes of mashed potatoes that looked like golf balls, and underdone beets. Everybody complained bitterly and everybody took seconds, even Elizabeth, who had a horror of seeming odd, though by this time the familiar "plucked violin string" feeling in her stomach was tuning up. She loved parties so, and yet she had never approached one without this deliciously awful disturbance.

She longed for, but was ashamed to suggest, a nap after dinner. Mother always tucked her in bed with shades down and the Change Danger spots to Beauty spots—

WITH Rubbermaid HOUSEWARE

It's smart to make your bathroom safe the popular Rubbermaid way. Rubbermaid gives lovely-looking, long-wearing protection . . . won't warp, crack or soften, even in hottest water.

NON-SKID SURFACE. Rubbermaid Safti-cup bathtub mat is firmly anchored to the bottom of your bathtub by dozens of vacuum-cups. Assures sure-footed safety for the whole family.

FIRM FOOTING. Rubbermaid reversible floor mat beside your bathtub or shower provides non-slip surface for every step . . . helps prevent dangerous falls.

SOAP SAVER. Rubbermaid reversible soap dish does double duty. One side catches drippings; reverse side drains them away. Both sides ridged to keep soap high and dry.

SMART STORAGE SPACE. Rubbermaid toilet top tray has safe, spill-proof rim. Fits any toilet top, gives extra bathroom storage space.

All in beautiful bathroom colors—

See the complete Rubbermaid line wherever housewares are sold in the U. S. and Canada. Send for free folder.

Rubbermaid HOUSEWARE ®

The quality, home-engineered brand that assures long-life resistance to heat, soap, grease and wear.

THE WOOSTER RUBBER COMPANY, Dept. L-4 Wooster, Ohio

radio playing softly for an hour or so before a late date. But tonight someone suggested a couple of hands of bridge and they were politely insistent that Elizabeth play. She didn't mind playing—she was quite a whiz at bridge—but the night was stickily warm, and she hated having to get dressed at the last minute. Even on school mornings she liked having so much time that if her hair didn't go right or she didn't like the way she looked she could start all over again.

But finally, at eight, the game stopped and the rest of the time went by like one of those silly movies that are run off too fast, to make people laugh. Nine-thirty and she was actually ready, standing before a tall, dim glass set into the wall at the end of the corridor.

Because she was nervous and cross from being hurried and sleepy, she would have liked to find something wrong with the way she looked, but she couldn't. Above the folds of pale-blue net, held into place with tiny bunches of moss roses, her shoulders glowed with a pearly iridescence, and the wide full skirts of her dress, looped up with roses and held out even farther at the hem by a hoop, made her waist look fabulously small. I look seventeen at least, she thought smugly. I bet I even look older than Anne.

She was already taller than her sister and—one of her greatest prides!—took a larger bra size. Her brown hair, that looked as if someone had swooshed a brushful of gilt radiator paint through it, waved where Anne's curled, and her wide-set eyes, classic nose and serious, sweet mouth had nothing in common with her sister's features.

She half circled in a waltz step, watching critically, over one smooth shoulder, her moving reflection. John Holmsen, she said under her breath, trying to make herself feel romantic, but all she could think of was Anne's vulnerable face and that she wished Chuck Manson could see her.

Anne came out of her room in her plaid taffeta, looking perfectly darling in spite of the slap-dash way she had got herself together—no nail polish, just powder and lipstick and not enough of either, but her hair looked so cute sitting up on top of her head and she had a perfect face for earrings.

"You look very French," said Elizabeth approvingly.

But Anne was looking into the glass where their reflections wavered as if cast upon water. "Oh, Elizabeth!" she said softly. "All you need is a Confederate officer with a sash, saying good-by forever."

Elizabeth was pleased and reinforced by the compliment, but a dreadful thought had just occurred to her. "Anne, did you tell him how old I was?"

Anne looked unhappy. "No. The second time we went out we were talking about painting and I said I had a sister who went to art school and when I asked him for tonight he asked if you were the one and I said yes." She hesitated. "He's so old, I just couldn't tell him you weren't even fifteen!"

ELIZABETH whooshed out a relieved breath. "Well, gosh, I do go to art school. I haven't missed only one Saturday at the museum." She swished her skirts elatedly, feeling all the golliwogs of nerves coming together and rushing up in a freshet of anticipation. "Oh, golly, listen! There's the music!"

From below the gallery a voice shrilled up, "Anne! Anne Patterson! Your dates are here!"

"They're here! Come on, Elizabeth!"

Anne, her skirts awkwardly bunch one hand, scurried for the stairs, Elizabeth lingered to look at herself more before she turned to follow slowly had spent two evenings in her room, she got this dress, walking back and for time to music on the radio, until she mastered the model's trick of moving s and gracefully. She drifted down the stairs, not smiling, instinctively aware t gentle gravity suited the ante-bellum of her dress.

"WELL, here she is, finally," Anne with typical softened exasperation. sister Elizabeth—Charlie Armstrong, Holmsen."

"Hello! Hello!"

She smiled radiantly at Charlie Armst having summed him up and dismissed h one glance as what Anne had described, more so. She smiled, but not radiant John Holmsen, seeing at once that he neither be summed up nor dismiss easily. For one of Anne's beaux, he w too bad. He was short, but still dec taller than she, slight and dark, with a face, unremarkable except for the eyes were dark, deep-set and burningly tho ful. He answered her conventional with one of his own, a singularly sweet

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

These Enduring Young Charms

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

Such beauty as may brave my flaws
Admire, beloved. Enjoy it,
But never let it be a cause
For love. Time will destroy it.

And love me not for wit, my lord.
For though it please you Sunday,
Remember wit's a fickle sword,
And it may pierce you Monday.

Nor more my virtues, dear, exalt;
They tend to waver badly.
But love me for each sturdy fault,
And you'll love long and madly!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

for a man, as th in smiling he d just move his muscles in a p of politeness. brought forth gave away some of himself.

The goon Anne's hand enthusiastic m that he obvi thought very da "Come on, my s Let's not wast music!"

John took beth's hand g "Shall we?" As walked toward long drawing ro said rapidly, "I to warn you I'm much of a da They didn't cat young enough. did not have a cent, but he ha odd way of leng ing vowel sound was not at all American. "The only I'm any good at is waltzing," he wen "My mother taught me that."

"Oh, but I love to waltz! I always they'd play more waltzes at dances."

He looked so pleased and relieved Elizabeth quite warmed to him. She known immediately, as she always knew things, that, for her, John Holmsen never be a Heartbeat, but there was thing very simple and likable about him didn't act like a Brain at all. She was fortably sure they would get along; something of suspense and romance had left out of her evening, at least being a with her date would leave her free to herself in other minor ways.

The music had stopped and the mus were just disappearing through the F doors to the terrace. Elizabeth looked the room, assessing girls and dresses and with a womanly and artistic eye.

"You go to art school, Anne said. Di design your dress?"

"Oh, yes, I did. How did you know

How unexpectedly noticing of him to that! Elizabeth had had an awful time old Miss Henke, who had made it Elizabeth's design and who had kept ing to add a puff here, a ruffle there. Elizabeth, so gentle, so sweet in other t had been all cold decision in this.

"Because it's so simple, so beautifu so like you."

She was startled. The boys she knew have said something like that and it

(Continued on Page 140)

Why risk her health with temporary disinfectants?

"Lysol"® Brand Disinfectant germ-fighting action continues between cleanings!

IN A SPLIT SECOND, disease germs can strike. So guard your family with the disinfectant that helps protect them with an anti-bacterial blanket, not just temporarily, but continually!

PUT "LYSOL" brand disinfectant in your cleaning water every time and everywhere you clean, in baby's room, in your bathroom and kitchen . . . on floors, walls. furniture and fixtures, all through your house.

UNLIKE BLEACHES, which call for thorough cleaning, before disinfecting—and which even then act only temporarily, "Lysol" kills germs as you clean—all in one operation. Its potency is not weakened by dust and dirt. And regular use of "Lysol" leaves a continuing anti-germ blanket between cleanings!

HAVE THIS FAST-ACTING, continuing disinfection in your home! Use "Lysol," the world's largest-selling germ killer. Highly concentrated, economical! Only 2½ tablespoons to each gallon of cleaning water! Get "Lysol" today!

Your gift will be admired, appreciated and used—all year long—when it's a Cosco gift. All-steel construction, with rounded edges. Finest chromium and/or tough, baked-on enamel finishes; washable, all-plastic Duran upholstery. Give Cosco for Christmas. Get yours right away—at your favorite store. Write for valuable, new, 12-page booklet, "How to Lighten Your Work and Brighten Your Home with Cosco." Send 10c to cover mailing to Dept. LH11.

2-D Kitchen Stool: 24″ seat. Chromium finish. Upholstery: red, black, blue, green, yellow.

3-G Kitchen Stool: 24″ seat. Chromium finish. Upholstery: red, black, blue, green, yellow.

7-B Folding Utility Table: 24″ x 34″ top, 29½″ high. Chromium legs, enamel top: red, blue, green, yellow, white.

10-A High Chair: Removable tray, adjustable footrest. Seat 22½″ high. Chromium finish. Upholstery: red, blue, yellow.

14-A Youth Chair: 21″ seat. Wide-flared legs. Chromium finish. Upholstery: red, black, blue, yellow.

9-F Posture Back Chair: 25″ seat. Two-way adjustable back. Chromium finish. Upholstery: red, black, blue, green, yellow.

8-C Utility Table: 17″ × 24″ top, 31″ high. Chromium-enamel finish: red, blue, green, yellow, white.

4-D Step Stool: 24″ seat; "swing-away" steps. Chromium finish. Upholstery: red, black, blue, green, yellow.

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION, COLUMBUS, INDIANA

For the best in quality look for the COSCO Trademark. Accept no substitutes.

COSCO

Household Stools, Chairs and Utility Tables

Sold also in Canada and South America

(Continued from Page 138)

have sounded ridiculously exaggerated and pleasantly wolfish. She would have answered lightly and derisively and that would be all there was to it, but the way John Holmsen had said the words they sounded completely serious and sincere. Elizabeth was momentarily at a loss. But not for long. She said, "Thank you," with a soft modest inclination of her head. It was the way she thanked middle-aged friends of mother's when they said, "And is this Elizabeth? Why, what a lovely big girl you're getting to be!"

She asked a few unimportant questions about his courses and then the orchestra started to come back, kidding among themselves. With a lovely dark swoop the music began, and Elizabeth and John turned to each other in excited smiling pleasure. It was Tales from the Vienna Woods.

He held her awfully close, but it wasn't the wolfish kind of closeness. It was more as if he thought of her as something very precious that he had to hold extra carefully so that it wouldn't get broken. She could tell, on the first reverse, just from the very perfection of his waltzing, that he wouldn't be a good dancer, ordinarily. But that didn't matter now in this lovely circling moment. Oh, how she loved to waltz! Everything that she dreamed about and could not yet express or experience seemed to be said for her and lived by her then.

They did not speak until the dance ended, and then they stopped reluctantly, smiling a little shamefacedly, as though aware that each shared the other's secret of having enjoyed something almost too much to be safe.

"Oh, that was heavenly!" said Elizabeth softly. "I could waltz forever, I think."

"So could I—with you."

There it was again—the corny words said so gravely. It wasn't a line. She was certain it wasn't a line! And then the goon came dashing up with Anne.

"Where'd you dig up this orchestra?" he was teasing her. "Anne, if you'd only told me, I would have worn knee britches and white silk stockings."

Anne whispered to Elizabeth reassuringly, "You have the next dance with Charlie, and then Peggy Blye and Nancy said they'd exchange dances. After this next one I'll introduce you."

"O.K.," said Elizabeth calmly. "Don't worry about me. I'll get along all right. Your John is quite nice, Anne. Good luck with him next dance."

Anne said crossly, flushing, "Don't be silly." She turned with relief as a girl touched her arm. "Oh, hello, Jane. Who're you with? Have you met my sister? Elizabeth—Jane Taylor. And this is ——"

Under the confused give-and-take of introductions, John whispered, "Don't let A give away all your dances. I wish I c have them all."

Elizabeth was so glad Anne couldn't him. She said untruthfully, "I'll try to as many as I can."

Surprisingly, Charlie could dance like Astaire, and the orchestra, as though it heard his comments and resented them, g out with a lively jitterbug arrangem After that, Anne introduced her to the she had spoken of, and their dates. Elizabeth got an absolute horror who wor her arm à la pumphandle, and next a dar boy with football shoulders, freckles an crew haircut. But the catch was that, b Elizabeth's kind, he saw through her once.

"How many years before you go college?" he asked first thing, and a startling an honest answer out of her, trea her with a nonchalant patronage reserved kid sisters and their friends. He wa sophomore at Yale, too conceited and old enough to conceal his boredom over tacky atmosphere and music. But it tur out a sister of his had gone to the same c as Elizabeth and that they had both s summers on dude ranches, so they had eno to talk about. He wasn't a good dancer, he had that inimitable faculty, so mad ing to those who haven't got it, of assum that what he didn't do well was not w doing well. When the dance ended and winked at her, saying, "Be seein' ya," E abeth was humbly pleased.

John came back for the next dance. It a fast fox trot and he did badly enou though not quite so badly as he evide thought, looking crushed every time stepped on her toes or bumped into anot couple.

"I wish they'd play Did You Ever S Dream Walking," he said once.

"Is that a new one?" asked Elizabeth. haven't heard it."

"No, it's an oldie, but I didn't think it that old."

"Oh, like Al Jolson! Didn't you th he—or anyway, both of them—were m velous? In the movie, I mean."

"I don't go to movies very much, afraid. I ——"

"You didn't see The Jolson St Neither did Anne. What a shame. You ou to try to see it when it comes around agai Now that's a good hint if I ever gave one, thought complacently.

"May I remind you that I offered to buy you a bag, too, and you said you didn't care for any?"

Make this delicious Soup the Quick'n Easy "Herb-Ox" Way!

QUICK-TRICK SOUP—Dissolve HERB-OX Chicken Cubes in 4 cups boiling water. Chop and add ½ cup ery, 1 tablespoon onion, 1 oz. egg odles. Cook about 10 minutes.

nd for The Money-Saver—recipe d menu booklet showing how HERB- flavors up lower cost meats and in dishes, makes delicious soup and ivy base. The Pure Food Co., Inc., amaroneck, N.Y. Dept. (LHJ-11)

Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUBES

EAVERS Write for low prices—carpet warp, rug filler, Looms, parts, inexpensive beam er. If you have a loom, give make and width please.
RUG COMPANY, Dept. NO33, Lima, Ohio

©CRESCENT MFG. CO., SEATTLE

enuine "SIFT-CHINE" With Triple Screen
The Standard of Flour Sifter Perfection For More Than a Quarter of a Century

Insist upon a GENUINE "SIFT-CHINE" for guaranteed satisfaction

"T-CHINE" is the truly ational SIFT-ing ma- NE which foremost cook- uthorities have used and ighly recommended for s. One hand holds and ates. "Just squeeze the le"—stir as you sift. A st" for better baking. No scattered flour. No more y cakes or biscuits. Su- quality—designed and for years of service. ly polished finish with encircling bands of yel- red or green. TRIPLE n, one operation sifts flour 3 times, $1.65. DOUBLE n, sifts twice, $1.35. SINGLE screen, sifts once, $1.10. s postpaid if your dealer cannot furnish. Stamps ac- ed. MEETS-A-NEED MFG. CO., 2929 Utah Avenue, tle 4, Washington.

John said suddenly, "Come out on the terrace and talk, Elizabeth, please? Give your toes a chance to get over me."

Elizabeth considered the suggestion. He seemed to be very much taken with her, but he was definitely too much "older generation" to make a pass she couldn't handle. Besides, it was awfully hot in here and fresh air would taste good.

"Will I need a coat?"

"No. It's as warm as summer out there."

There were stars but no moon, and the wind lipped Elizabeth's cheek with a moist warmth that promised rain. Beyond the flagged terrace, steps went down to a small formal garden, enclosing a sundial.

"Let's go down to where we can see the river. Smoke?"

"No, thank you."

"Mind if I do?"

"Oh, no, I love the smell outdoors at night!"

They passed one couple holding hands on a bench and another by the sundial, but when they came to the low stone balustrade beyond which the college grounds dropped to playing fields and the river, they found themselves alone.

John dropped the cigarette from which he had taken only a few puffs and ground it into the flagstone with his heel. Something drifted out of the night and touched Elizabeth's hair.

John said quickly, as she lifted her hand, "No, don't take it off! It's only a magnolia petal, and it looks as if it belonged there."

She tried to achieve lightness. "You and Anne! Anne said tonight my dress made me look as if I ought to have a Confederate officer saying good-by to me forever."

"She was right. Will I do instead? I was an officer once, only I'm not saying good-by. I'm saying hello, Elizabeth!"

He wanted to kiss her, she knew. And she didn't mind. It would have been unkind on a night like this, to refuse him one kiss. She held out her hands and lifted her head, smiling gently, just as she had done dozens of times, practicing, before her mirror.

"Elizabeth! Elizabeth darling!"

Except for her father's, it was the first man's kiss she had ever had, and it was so very different from the adolescent variety that, to her great annoyance, she found her mouth trembling under his.

He let her go immediately. "I'm sorry. I'm awfully sorry."

She shook her head reassuringly. "It's all right."

He put his hands out and she thought he was going to kiss her again, but instead he cupped her face in them. "You are a gentle sweet darling, aren't you? You know if I said I loved you the minute I saw you it wouldn't be true. I've always known you were there, somewhere, and by the time you came down the stairs tonight, I'd loved you for a long, long time."

She didn't know what to say, what to do. The sudden pressure of an emotion so intense, and focused directly upon her, disintegrated her ability to improvise.

She faltered, "You shouldn't say things like that. Someday you'll really fall in love and then you'll be sorry you said them, not meaning them."

"Not meaning them!" He dropped his hands and turned from her violently, then swung around again. "I'm doing this all wrong. I must be if you don't believe I'm serious. Oh, I know I ought to have concentrated tonight on just making a good impression so I could get another date with you, but—look, I learned one thing in the war if I didn't learn anything else. I learned you can't count on a second chance. When you see something you want, you'd better speak right up for it. And I want you, Elizabeth—more than I ever wanted anything in my whole life. I love you. Can't you see that, just by looking at me? I love you."

"But it's so silly!" she cried. She felt a quick resentful hostility. "I mean, you can't just fall in love with me like that when you don't know me. I mean, for instance, you're awfully bright and all that, and I'm not—I'm not a bit. And I probably don't like any Toast'n Jam-boree!

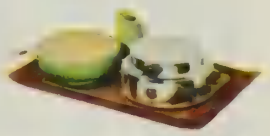
It's New! What an after-school snack—when there's a new "Toastmaster" "Toast 'n Jam" Set on the table! What a breakfast-brightener for the whole family. Answer to the teatime hostess' prayer . . . the winning "bid" at bridge . . . a late-evening standby with oldsters home from the show.

Amazing, the cheery companionship you share over the crisp golden slices, oozing hot butter, and ladled with jam or a spread. And what a good thing you share when you give this set as a gift!

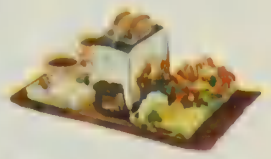
Handsome, hand-rubbed tray of walnut veneer neatly nests two gay colored jars and a toast plate of fine Franciscan Ware—and the famous "Toastmaster"* Toaster.

So see your dealer now. Get one of these new "Toastmaster" "Toast 'n Jam"* Sets home and get set for the biggest Toast 'n Jam-boree you've ever seen!

Handsome tray doubles as beverage and sandwich server. Resistant to fruit acids, alkalis, alcohol.

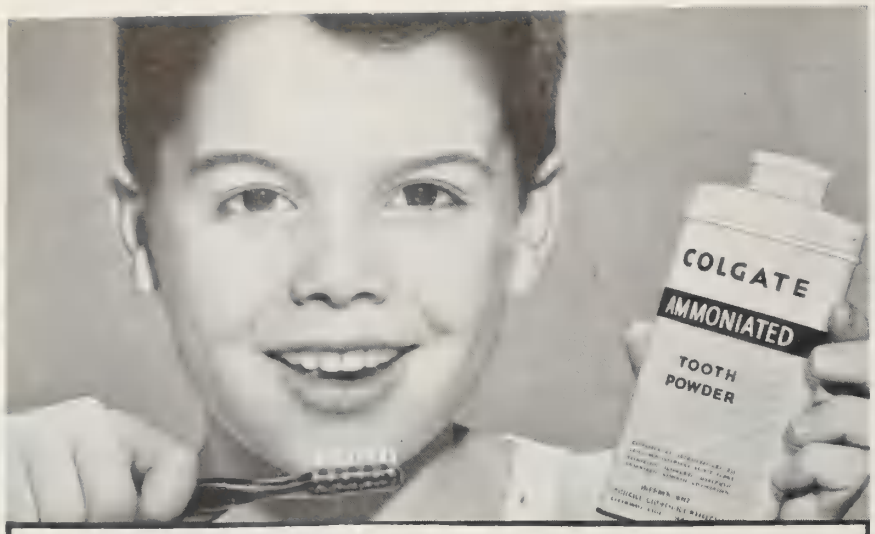


Toast plate has a host of extra uses—butter plate, candy or nut dish, cookie or cake tray.



Two matching jam jars also do table duty as sugar bowl, relish cup; are covered for refrigerator use.

The "Toastmaster" Toaster makes perfect toast at breakfast, luncheon, or after school.



TOASTMASTER Waffle Service, a real party-promoter! Walnut-veneer tray. Bowl and pitcher in sprout-green Franciscan Ware. Chromium ladle measures exactly one waffle! With "Toastmaster" Waffle Baker.

TOASTMASTER "Hospitality"* Set, for parties that almost give themselves! Invites self-service, frees the hostess for fun. Walnut-veneer tray. Four party plates, three relish dishes of hand-made crystal make the simplest snacks exciting. With the "Toastmaster" Toaster.

New TOASTMASTER
"Toast 'n Jam" Set

*"TOASTMASTER," "HOSPITALITY," and "TOAST 'N JAM" are registered trademarks of McGraw Electric Company, makers of "Toastmaster" Toasters, "Toastmaster" Electric Water Heaters, and other "Toastmaster" Products. Copr. 1950, TOASTMASTER PRODUCTS DIVISION, MCGRAW ELECTRIC COMPANY, Elgin, Ill.

Dental Research Indicates You Can Help

Prevent Tooth Decay With COLGATE Ammoniated Tooth Powder

DENTISTS THEMSELVES USE and recommend ammoniated dentifrices as an aid in controlling tooth decay, especially for growing youngsters. For cavities already formed, and to safeguard mouth health, visit your dentist regularly.

Colgate's Scientific Dentifrice Does Remarkable Job of Removing Film, Cleaning Teeth . . . And Tastes Delightful!

Even the "small fry" will like Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder. It tastes so minty, refreshes the mouth and breath. You'll like its foamy action. It removes clinging film, gets teeth so clean you can feel the difference! Most important, laboratory tests indicate that using it regularly, as directed, may help you avoid pain, worry, and expense of needless tooth decay.

Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder, a product of Colgate-Palmolive-Peet research laboratories, is based on a formula developed by University of Illinois scientists. Contains the wonder-ingredients: Dibasic Ammonium Phosphate and Carbamide. Large-scale clinical tests are now being conducted to confirm its full benefits in preventing new cavities. Buy it now, at any toilet goods counter.

3 Definite Benefits
TO HELP PREVENT TOOTH DECAY

1. Using Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder after meals and before retiring helps neutralize destructive mouth acids considered by many dental authorities a leading cause of tooth decay.
2. It inhibits growth of acid-producing bacteria, Lactobacillus Acidophilus.
3. It helps dissolve and remove from teeth gluey film in which acid-producing bacteria thrive.

GUARANTEED BY COLGATE: Try Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder. If you don't agree it's the finest ammoniated dentifrice you ever used, we guarantee to refund your purchase price in full plus postage. Just return the unused portion to Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., Jersey City 2, N. J.

4oz. 43¢ 2oz. 25¢

COLGATE
Ammoniated Tooth Powder
With a Flavor the Whole Family Will Enjoy

of the things you like. All the articles you read about marriage say you should marry somebody who has the same interests you have—like, like Anne, for instance." It was a measure of her collapse that she could betray her sister without even being aware of it. She babbled on, "Like you're a Brain and so is she. Things like that!"

He smiled at her and now she saw that the singular sweetness of his smile had been because of her and for her, alone. He was lovingly amused. "But 'things like that' aren't poetry," he said gravely.

For that, she could almost have loved him in return—she, whose thoughts still came and went on the tides of a dreaming heart!

And he saw the quickening of her face. He said urgently, "Elizabeth, darling, listen! I'll be as patient as you like. I won't be a nuisance, I promise. Only—let me see you once in a while, won't you?"

See her once in a while! When mother didn't even like her going out with seniors! She didn't want to see him again, ever! Why, golly, she even thought kids in her class who got themselves Constant Companions were crazy. The awful suck-and-pull of his feeling for her made it difficult for her to breathe. Oh, she must say something, anything, to stop him!

"Please! Please, you mustn't. Honestly, you mustn't. I'm not old enough for you to talk that way. I'm only"—but even now she could not bring herself to the final indignity—"I'm only fifteen!"

But it was no good. He still looked at her with that drained lost look. "Fifteen! Only fifteen? Was it Beatrice or Juliet who was fifteen? Come to think of it, you're a lot like Juliet. That same gentleness, that same sweetness. And with it so much love, so much love."

Most of us know how to say nothing; few of us know when. —ANON.

The soft musing words were like hands touching her in supplication, but she was too frightened for pity. She wanted her mother more than she had ever wanted her before.

"Oh, please, John, don't say any more! You don't understand. I'm not like Juliet a bit. I mean I'm not really grown up at all inside. Why, I only had my braces taken off last Tuesday!" She stood stripped of pride and shivering. But she had drawn him back out of his dream; she had made him understand.

He put a hand on her arm carefully, as a man does to a strange and frightened child. "You poor kid! Why didn't you stop me? Why didn't Anne tell me? Why did you have to be the one who's fifteen and Anne the one who looks it? Oh, Elizabeth!"

She had thought tragedy was the sweetly aching feeling she got, listening to the Rachmaninoff Concerto, the tears that came so readily to her eyes when she thought of that poor imaginary Confederate officer bowing over her hand. But it wasn't. It was Anne's face when she said "not to a movie or anything like that"; it was the careful way John Holmsen had just put his hand on her arm.

"Oh, I wish I hadn't come! If I only hadn't come!"

He did not offer her comfort. "I know. But it's no good. Wishing won't change anything. Maybe," he added sadly, "now that you know you can't ever go back, you won't want to go ahead so fast."

She could feel the tears pressing steadily and awfully upward in her throat. Under John's hand, the flesh of her arm went prickly the way it always did when she was about to cry.

John felt it too. He peered down at her. "You're not going to cry, are you, Elizabeth? Please don't."

She shook her head, afraid to speak.

"The night's still got a long way to go and you don't want Anne to know anything's wrong, do you? Look—I promise every time I look at you to remember you've just had your braces taken off. How's that?"

Springfoot Sox
FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY

FASHION AFOOT FOR BOYS & YOUNG MEN

He's first in foot fashion in smart, colorful SPRINGFOOT SOX with Nylon-reinforced toes and heels. For lasting good looks and long wear—it pays you to choose his sox wardrobe from the attractive assortment of SPRINGFOOT SOX Popular styles in sizes 6 to 13 . . . 39¢ to $1.00 pair . . . at leading boys' and young men's departments and specialty stores.

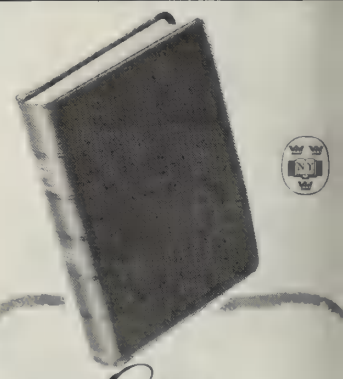
Style Illustrated "TARTAN PLAID" Sizes 9 to 13 65¢ a pair



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

For the name of your nearest dealer write:

WILMINGTON HOSIERY MILLS, INC.
WILMINGTON 17, DELAWARE

IT'S DYNAMITE
To Neglect Minor CUTS, BURNS In Children

Great risk lies in neglected small cuts, bur scratches, scalds as germs may multiply by millio Apply tested Oil-O-Sol at once. This germ-arrest antiseptic helps control infection, ease pain, sp healing. A favorite in first aid for 50 yea Mosso's Oil-O-Sol – today at your drug store.

Give an OXFORD BIBLE
at Christmas

to put a boy's or girl's feet on the right path . . . to bring peace of mind to a dear one sorely troubled . . . to delight one who loves the Bible, but has never owned an Oxford. (Illustrated) Scofield Reference Edition. The authorized King James version with many reading helps. 2,000,000 already sold. At your bookseller's; $2.00 to $30.00.

America's Gift Bible since 1675

By Welsh
The Original and Only "BOODLE BUGGY"

Mom and Sis share the fun when Each has a "BOODLE BUGGY"

A DOLL CARRIAGE...A BABY CARRIAGE, BOTH HAVE THE SAME FEATURES...CONVERT INTO A TRAVEL BED OR BASSINET. EASY TO FOLD, PACK AND STORE!

☆

Other! SEND DATE OF YOUR BABY'S BIRTH WELSH CO. FOR AN INTERESTING HOROSCOPE

AT LEADING STORES
WELSH COMPANY
Largest Manufacturer of Folding Baby Carriages
535 S. Eighth St. St. Louis 4, Mo.

ATERNITY CLOTHES
don't look Maternity - reasonably priced!
REE CATALOG ANTICIPATION SHOPS
Dept. L 11—343 N. RODEO DRIVE BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA

ich Doll The ni?

Toni Dolls Only Have Washable Nylon Hair
Nylon hair actually improves with washing.
Toni dolls in 4 sizes.
11.98 • 13.98
16.98 • 19.98
Made by Ideal
Toni play-wave kit with every doll.
AT BETTER DOLL DEPTS.

Pro·tek·tiv for children's normal growing feet

Style 5966

REE
llustrated folder about ro-tek-tiv Shoes that conform to the contour of the oot in every size. Write today... Dept. J tis, Stephens, Embry Co., Inc., Reading, Pa.

DERN AGE and OFFICIAL GIRL SCOUT SHOES

That was another awful thing about being grown up: you couldn't even cry when you wanted to. She stood rigidly still, pressing her nails into her palms and pressing the tears down with them. It was, she thought with a forlorn inner giggle, like sitting on a camp trunk that was too full. It was the giggle that sat on the tears finally, once and for all. She swallowed to make sure they weren't there any more and then she turned her head and lifted her chin enough to feel the weight of her hair shift and drop.

"Good girl!"

Oh, how good the night smelled, she thought, taking a deep breath. She still felt sad, but now the sadness had moved away so that it was like remembering a pain.

There was only the rest of tonight and tomorrow to be got through and then it would be Monday. She would wear her blue-and-brown plaid skirt and the raspberry sweater. Her silver name barrette, or maybe a plaid ribbon. If Chuck should be coming along the hall when she got out of Latin, maybe —— Oh, she could hardly wait!

ON LIVING DANGEROUSLY

(Continued from Page 12)

material achievements, but around the great spiritual inheritance. To guard the spiritual inheritance of the nation and the civilization is the noblest human task in a time of troubles, such as the one in which we live.

A very young American, more acutely aware than most, wrote me last summer from Stratford on Avon: "I walked by myself along the Avon and into the cemetery where Shakespeare lies buried, and I thought to myself: How rich I am! What a wonderful language has been given me; what beauty and grandeur of thought I have inherited from all my spiritual ancestors. I do not deserve it, and I have not made myself capable even of fully appreciating it, and sometimes I am untrue to it and hate myself. But I shall go on trying. For, I think, perhaps there is a new Dark Ages coming, as there has been before. And I think: Cannot even an individual be an island, as it were, in which no matter what happens, he stores this treasure of beauty and of knowledge, and passes it on to others, if even in a whisper? At any rate, to do this is my life's pledge and aim."

The young man had discovered the secret of living dangerously, which is to encompass, within the area of possibilities, the realization of death; and to accept as equally real that death, too, is only an incident of ever-continuing and unfolding spiritual life, to which, at all times, every conscious person contributes, to preserve and create, or to destroy.

Perhaps he did not realize the magnitude of the challenge to remember and pass on, which is made by societies adept in mental "reconditioning." It is impossible to "know" whether a spiritual inheritance can be utterly obliterated by the methods used by the Soviets, if pursued over a sufficient number of years. Nothing of the kind has ever been tried before, on such a scale. Yet I doubt it. For even were most of civilization overrun, and its noblest heads deported in more columns of boxcars to Siberia and the Arctic—as they certainly would be—and their cities filled with Mongolians, Russians and peoples from Turkestan, germs of remembrance would still live. I am sure.

At any rate, it is not the American past which has yet tested this nation. It is the imminent future, which is likely to give us more of pain than of pleasure; more of defeat than of victory; more of sacrifice than of compensation. But it can also give us more of wisdom than of impulse; more of humility than of arrogance; more of charity toward one another than of competition; and greater realization of what we live by, than of what we live from.

And in these things there is also joy.

In the spiritual sense, to live dangerously is to live more securely. For it is to live in greater reality.

THE END

Everyone Loves the "Wonder Tree"!

Here's something new to add sparkle and charm to the traditional Christmas celebration. A Christmas tree that is as beautiful as it is "different"... crystal-like... all a-sparkle and a-glow with its own charmingly fashioned, unbreakable tree ornaments in a rainbow of shimmering colors!

Even if you prefer the age-honored pine for your main tree... you can delightfully high-spot the WONDER Holiday TREE in other rooms or use it as an unusual table decoration. Perfect for apartments and small homes, too.

The WONDER TREE will prove attractive and decorative throughout the year as well. Trim it with hors d'oeuvres, canapes, candies if you wish... or make it a gorgeous, eye-catching centerpiece for your table... perfect for parties—unique for home decor.

Both the Tree and ornaments are made of plastic that will give you many years of service and pleasure. Get yours NOW... see how it lends a joyous, sparkling spirit to any and every festive occasion!

19" plastic crystal WONDER TREE $7.00

The WONDER TREE with 40 multi-color, unbreakable ornaments $2.00

At better dept., chain and syndicate stores EVERYWHERE or Order Direct

USE THIS HANDY ORDER FORM IF YOU CANNOT BUY YOUR WONDER TREE AT YOUR LOCAL STORE

LAPIN PRODUCTS, INC. Dept. A
164 Delancy Street, Newark 5, New Jersey

Gentlemen: I enclose money order or check. Please ship prepaid:
19" Wonder Tree(s) at $7.00 each Tree(s) with 40 plastic ornaments at $2.00 each

Name (please print)
Address
City Zone State

No C.O.D.'s please — Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Refunded

Baby's 9th Month: GROWIN

Photographed by Dana's father, WAYNE MILLER

AT nine months a baby is on the threshold of a great adventure: learning to walk. He's not quite ready to try it yet, but everything's pointing ahead to the day when he will. For example, he loves to stretch—and never more than when his clothes are off. He sits up and gives the world a good look in the eye. And his legs have strengthened to the point where he can just about hold himself erect. True, he must keep his feet wide apart and brace against the play pen's rail or his mother's hands, but that's all part of learning that in life he must take a firm stand.

At this time, his humor is generally excellent. Kiss him—he'll kiss right back. Hug him—he'll want more cuddling and play that easily slips into a romping roughhouse. He more or less knows when older people are teasing him and probably will respond to his mother's nursery-game jokes with peals of laughter. He can be so stimulated by fun with the family that he isn't always ready to simmer down for the more prosaic task of eating.

It's possible the nine-month-old will show decreasing enthusiasm for his bottle—a sign that his sucking needs are slackening. He may fret unless he can hold it, or find a cup more fun for both table play

Taps and temper may go together when a nine-month-old feels wide-awake. Some refuse to sleep without a familiar toy or if the crib is moved from its usual position. Daytime naps may cut down to one long morning or afternoon snooze.

Dana can roll, creep and sit for about ten minutes with her head and trunk erect. She's also able to stand up by herself, but often needs help in getting down again.

By nine months, your baby's character is showing. You can tell if he'll be placid or up-and-doing, fearless or timid, friendly or shy. Usually, he knows his name.

Pounds and inches: the average nine-monthe weighs 17 to 23, measures from 27 to 28. Als he's probably the proud possessor of 4 to 6 teeth

Brother's Christmas train is no obstacle when Dana's on the crawl. Nursery games will divert her, however, and she'll laugh at thumbs and peekaboo jokes.

Mischief is fun and punishment is useless, since Dana, like any baby her age, can't remember what she should or shouldn't do. Toys to bang keep her good and happy.

Table manners are growing up. Dana feeds her cracker, picks up candies with her thumb and finger. She can tilt her bottle like a trumpe and drinking. In these last four months of the first year, a baby's body grows at a slower pace. His nervous system, of course, is still immature, his brain nowhere near developed enough to control his actions fully. Thus, he may not take easily to any training routine. Just as his hands need practice in grasp and release, so do his sphincter muscles. He'll do best if you wait till his fifteenth month or so, when he's standing and has words to express himself.

P–JUST AROUND THE CORNER

He may also object to maintaining a two-nap-a-day schedule, deciding that he can part company with the A.M. or P.M. snooze. When it comes to napping, he likes to call the tune on when he'll be around and when you can count him out. But in his waking time this much is certain: all the rest of the family take a back seat to his mother. In the care of someone else, he's likely to have a tantrum. Above all else, the nine-month-old is that rarest of creatures—a one-woman man.

Eager to learn the touch and tastes of things, nine-monthers like to play with their food. But grubbiness and wriggles are temporary trials and show that the mind is bright. Some very active children soon eat best while they're standing.

Jeanette comforts Dana for an afternoon alone. Over-stimulated by the older children, she became ill at this time, had to be kept in her pen apart from them.

na likes to watch other people, can wave bye-bye, ens with interest to familiar words. She makes thmic motions to music, stops crying to listen.

vs how to take it out of her mouth, also how to put ack again. Company makes mealtimes gay, but, ally, she refuses to eat or drink for strangers.

PRINTON Gaytees for teens and children are so gay there'll be no "sass" about putting on storm boots. Ankle straps tighten so boots won't pull off. Checks, in brown, red or green.

SNO-VALE Gaytees snoot snowdrifts with warm, hearty style. Fleece-lined, shearling trimmed. Flat soles accommodate loafers or party shoes. Brown, black, green.

wow the Weather Man!

BOBBY BOOT Gaytees are smart with tweeds, have plenty of slacks appeal. Fleece-lined for girls and children; net-lined for women. White, black, green, brown, red.

WEDGE KWIK Gaytees are light as gloves, sternly waterproof, fit over every type of heel. Slide-fastened; gay linings. Black, brown, red, green, white.

U.S. Gaytees
Fashion Over the Shoe

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

PLANNED FOR PERFECTION

(Continued from Page 63)

The JOURNAL immediately suggested moving the kitchen area to the window side to give sunny working hours for cooking. Then by building a narrow half-wall the laundry and kitchen areas were divided, leaving a compact U-shaped kitchen space with the range on one side, refrigerator on the other and the sink at the base of the U.

The eating center was built along the dining-room wall. When the panels behind this casual counter are dropped, it doubles as a pass-through for dishes from the dining room or for buffet service in the dining room. With the panels raised, the kitchen scene is closed off from the dining room.

The laundry area has room for all the laundry equipment plus a freezer, a shelf and closet for extra storage. Supplies can be easily carried in through the outside entry without interfering with cooking activities. I especially like this arrangement, for nothing is worse than to be frosting a cake just as the delivery boy bumps in carrying the groceries.

In the kitchen area, a food-preparation center between refrigerator and sink has space for the mixer, attached and ready to use. Cupboards next to the refrigerator take the baking supplies, mixer attachments and utensils. All cabinets are durable metal with baked-on enamel finish. A hardwood counter top at the left of the refrigerator is just right for chopping, cutting, slicing, and a knife rack above has the tools for it. The juicer lives there, too, right by the oranges!

The new refrigerator is a honey. For one thing, the cold compartment goes clear to the floor, which gives more refrigerated space, so saves shopping trips. And a wide glass-topped drawer keeps fruit and vegetables crisp. Planned place for tall bottles is a big help, and I am particularly interested in the egg compartment, which holds sixteen eggs and tips them out one or two at a time!

The sink is another jewel. A new type of dishwasher is built in, with a glass porthole at the top so you can watch what goes on. A tower in the center spins and swirls jets of water over all surfaces of the racked dishes and glassware inside. But the special feature to me was the booster thing that heats the dishwater extra hot so you need not keep all the water in the house ready to sterilize you! What won't they think of next!

An open counter beside the sink makes room for the step stool, wastebasket and sliding towel bars right where you need them.

The range has one full-sized and one small oven! This is a marvelous feature, because no matter how smart you are, you always struggle to get the oven right for a roast and a meringue at the same time and always fail to do it. At least I do. Also a big roast or turkey takes up all the room there is in one oven, so where does the pie go anyway?

THE range has a well-cooker, fine for slow cooking. It comes into its own for making stew or pot roast, yet isn't so useful when there is a gang to cook for. But this one can be lifted out and a fourth surface unit is there, and that is something I wish I had.

Maybe with all this, it is too much that the lights that gleam behind the push buttons when the heat is on are a different color for each heat. But they are. Something like the Emerald City of Oz, the range is, I thought. It does not mix the cake or slice the potatoes, but that's next, I dare say.

A full-height cupboard by the eating center accommodates tall cleaning supplies. And all the odd corners have their day here, with a tray rack recessed in the low wall, and extra shelves and cupboards. Over the refrigerator, the cabinet opens at the end so you don't have to stretch over the box when you want something from it. The clock, a new one with silhouetted numbers, is recessed in the front of this cupboard, and a ventilator draws stale air from both kitchen and laundry area.

The laundry equipment is just as dazzling in its way, for the automatic washing machine is a model which has a measuring gauge so you know how much of a load you are putting in. The door lets down to form a shelf, and the clothes are "weighed in" on. This is the first time I've ever really known how much a six-pound load was.

THE dryer tumbles and fluffs dry the clothes and the control can be set to give clothes just right for ironing or to completely dry towels and underwear. The dryer is vented directly to the outdoors, too, so heat and moisture are not directed into the room.

An automatic gas water heater fits in a corner of the laundry and supplies hot water for everything at the turn of a faucet.

The ironer fits next to the water heater, and has its own cabinet. It slides under open shelves in the entry when not in use. An ironing board for fussy things like ruffles and specialty pressing fits into a shallow cupboard at the end of the laundry space. The board is adjustable for sit-down ironing and a special gadget clamps to it to keep the iron cord from getting under the iron. Ironing-board covers now come in colors and are held snug and unwrinkled not by the old-fashioned carpet tack but by springs underneath. A gay chair on wheels with adjustable back is used for ironing, in case you want to coast between ironing board and ironer.

The freezer is handy to the kitchen and is a fine top-opening model with racks in the top for packaged foods, and baskets that fit in the lower section. In my old-fashioned freezer you bend and hunt and pull and then forget you have the green beans when you really wanted a box of raspberries.

The lighting is recessed at strategic points in kitchen and laundry areas, with extra lights over eating and food-preparation places.

Even the walls and floors are new design. The linoleum pattern is a lovely variegated green, and a washable paper with a charming bamboolike pattern covers the ceiling and one laundry wall. Split-bamboo shades at the windows echo this, and bamboo poles painted white divide the kitchen and laundry. The chairs are metal with a bamboolike design and they have bright red washable seat covers. The walls are soft avocado green, and the counters, which are new resistant plastic material, are a clear dramatic red.

The whole effect is gay, bright and as modern as the shiny new machines that carry the work or the new radio that starts instantly without waiting for a warm-up period.

But even as I marveled at all the automatic devices that make this a kitchen planned for perfection, I thought of the family living that would center in this kitchen, the children growing up, wedding cakes baking in the double ovens, gingerbread cookies cut out on that hardwood counter for hungry grandchildren. None of this is automatic, but it, too, can be the larger part of the perfect kitchen.

As I reluctantly moved to the door, hating to leave, I wondered dreamily as I paraphrased Omar Khayyám, what can the makers of kitchen things buy that's half so precious as the stuff they sell? THE E

MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL . . .

And to all a good gift. What a happy holiday idea it is to send the JOURNAL as a Christmas gift.

THROUGHOUT the year, because of your thoughtfulness, the sparkling pages of the JOURNAL will keep friends and relatives advised on the latest fashions, foods and fiction. And a beautiful greeting card with your name on it will announce each gift.

Use the handy order form in nearly every copy of this issue to send joyous Christmas wishes!

New!

Exciting!

This Genuine STEERHIDE Handbag by MEEKER

Here's a perfectly stunning g for casual or sports wear, with adjust-e straps for either shoulder or over-arm
. Beautifully made of brown steerhide, nd-colored, with rich, distinctive handled design. Smart, mannish, leather draw-ng around sides. Four inside pockets, one pered Matching coin purse. Nylon lined.
s and other lovely MEEKER Handbags,
2.50 to $40, at Dealers everywhere.

The Latest in Billfolds

's popular,
an-size" MEEKER crea-is thin and compact, yet has nty of room for bills, checks, etc. Remove pass case, gusset coin purse, secret ket, snap fastener. Custom-fashioned of ious fine leathers, in popular colors. $5 up.

For HIM!

e famous MEEKER
0 — with maximum capa- but minimum bulk. Smartlyled in many rich, fine leathers. $5 to $10.

IE MEEKER CO., INC., JOPLIN, MO.
w York: 347 Fifth Ave. — Chicago: 36 S. State St.

MEEKER MADE Fine Leather Goods

I TOOK IT LYING DOWN

(Continued from Page 43)

thumpings. But I was sure he was wasting his time, and told him so. He said he hoped I was right and he'd let me know in the morning.

Next day he came around with the verdict. The X-ray plates and laboratory had confirmed his suspicions.

"It's just about what I thought," he said. "You have a moderately advanced lesion in the upper portion of your left lung, but I think we've caught it in time."

The room began to spin around me. "Are you trying to tell me I've got ——" I still didn't believe it, but I couldn't make myself say the word.

"Yes." His voice was sympathetic but firm. "You've got tuberculosis."

Once when I was a little girl I was way out on the Atlantic Ocean, riding a big heavy plank. My father was swimming alongside. A giant wave came up and knocked me off the plank, which came squarely down on my head, blacking me out completely. Next thing I knew my father was carrying me up the beach in his arms. Hearing Doctor Marvin say the word I couldn't say had the same effect on me as that plank coming down on my head. I went into a complete psychological blackout.

In the course of time Doctor Marvin came to be a sort of second father to me, but at that moment, emerging from the blackout he had hurled me into, I saw him only as an enemy.

He had said I was sick, and I refused to be sick. Besides, I couldn't afford it. I had, among other personal responsibilities, a mother to support; and it was a point of honor with me to do it by myself.

THE very thought of being sick sent me into a violent storm of rebellious weeping which ended in a great racking cough. The point is, of course, that beneath the surface of my mind I recognized the truth of what he had told me. I was a mighty sick girl and I knew it.

But I wanted to handle it my own way, as I had always wanted to handle (and usually did) everything that happened to me. I wanted time to collect my thoughts, to follow up a vague plan that had begun to form in my head. So I dried my tears and said it would take me a little while to get used to the idea, but I would try, and please could I be alone now?

He said I was taking it very well and he'd come back in the morning. Meanwhile I was not to get out of bed and I was not to worry.

Strange as it may seem, since I was usually the world's long-distance worry champion, I didn't. Not then. I got busy thinking about my plan. When I was pretty sure I had myself in hand, I repaired my ravaged face, put on some lipstick and asked for Harlan.

Harlan came in and sat on the edge of my bed, holding my hand. He tried to comfort me and I tried to console him, but words came hard. Words have never come too easily between us in times of stress.

For quite a while we sat there, thinking our separate thoughts. What Harlan's were I don't suppose I'll ever know. Mine were about me. And my plan. But to get my plan started, the first thing was to get Harlan out of the house for the evening. We were supposed to go out for dinner. Quite naturally Harlan felt he should stay home with me. But I pointed out that if he turned up alone my absence could be easily explained, while if neither of us appeared, it would look strange. And I didn't want people to suspect anything.

After some persuasion he agreed to go, but said he'd come home early. By seven-thirty he had left the house. I had a light dinner on a tray. Nothing had been said to the servants beyond the fact that I wasn't feeling well.

When I was sure the coast was clear I slid out of bed and across the room to my desk. There was something in that desk I wanted.

You Can't Beat

Inter®woven Socks

INTERWOVEN ARGYLLS
SHRINK-RESIST WOOLS

Just a few of more than a thousand different Interwoven Socks from which to choose.

For a truly lovely floor - see California Originals

the new linoleum by Pabco styled for every room in your home

Nineteen exclusive linoleum designs and truer, richer colors . . . plus Pabco Soil-Sealed quality for easy-cleaning* and superior wear.

Illustrated: Sonora Green

Send ten cents in coin for big, new, full-color "Pabco Floor Decorating Guide." Style Desk , nearest office.

PABCO PRODUCTS INC. New York 17, Chicago 54, San Francisco 19

Styled in California.... Approved by all America!

My insurance policy. That was part of my plan. Anyone who thought I was going to subject myself to the slow living death of a tuberculosis cure just didn't know me. I remembered a friend of my newspaper days in New York. She had been stricken with TB and shipped off to an Adirondacks sanatorium. When she came back to New York, apparently cured, we met and talked.

"It may hit me again," she said. "But if it does I'll stay right here and I won't go to bed and I won't be careful. If it kills me, all right. I'd rather go out fast than flicker along half alive for years."

Well, it did hit her again and she wasn't careful and it did kill her. Sitting there at my desk, I recalled thinking how right she was, and telling myself that if ever such a thing happened to me (which of course it couldn't), I would do just what that girl had done.

Now it had happened to me, and I couldn't do what she had done. She had been alone in the world. I was surrounded by people who wouldn't let me behave like a Scott Fitzgerald character, however much I might want to. But I had no intention of flickering along half alive either. That's why I wanted the insurance policy.

But I couldn't find it. My desk, as usual, was all in a clutter. Also, as usual, looking for one thing, I found another. I found a short story, all written but the last few pages. I began to read it and got quite interested. Too bad it wasn't finished. It had a good chance of selling, I thought. Besides, the title had a certain ironic significance. I had called it Fadeout.

My room was cut off from the rest of the house, which was lucky. Nobody could hear the typewriter. It was just about midnight when, exhausted but triumphant, I typed a row of asterisks under the last line.

I had become so absorbed in the story that I forgot all about the insurance policy, and I was back in bed before I remembered it. Well, there wasn't that much of a hurry. The morning would do.

That night I slept fairly well, but when morning came I found I literally couldn't drag myself out of bed. I called my secretary, Stella Loudon, at the studio and asked her to come out and get Fadeout, copy it and send it to my agent in New York.

Not long after that Harlan came into the room with Doctor Marvin. The doctor was so nice it was hard to think of him as my enemy.

"I have good news for you," he said.

He had decided to let me take the cure—or at least start taking it—at home. I could stay right there in my own pleasant room, with my family close at hand. I wouldn't be able to see much of them—the children n at all—but still they would be there.

In most cases, he explained, it's far bet for patients to go away to a sanatorium. N so much because they must have a change climate—that's been a highly debata theory for a long time—but because it is much safer, both for the patient and for t rest of the family.

Because of the way our house was ranged, with my room in a wing of its ow the doctor felt he could set up what amount to sanatorium conditions right there. He w willing to try it, at least for a while.

I'm not at all certain, looking backwa that it was such a good idea. But then leaped at the offer. Staying home wou make it much easier for me to go ahe with my plan. So I crossed my fingers a promised complete co-operation.

Doctor Marvin began to outline his pla the first and most essential point of wh was absolute rest. It meant lying flat on t back twenty-four hours a day, seven days week. Not even lifting my head from the p low except to be fed by Miss Rose, the nur who by that time had arrived.

To Doctor Marvin it was rest; to me spelled sheer unadulterated torture.

"How long will this be going on?" asked. But the doctor was noncommittal.

"That's impossible to guess right now. have some idea in three or four months."

"Well, anyway," I murmured, "I'll ha lots of time to catch up on my reading."

"Not for a while," the doctor said. " reading at all the first few weeks. You c listen to the radio. Quiet programs, course."

That was the end! I couldn't stand radio. I buried my face in my hands and loose another flood of tears.

Doctor Marvin sat down on the edge my bed. "Try not to cry," he said. "Cry aggravates your cough, and that's bad your lung. Any exertion, however small bad for you. For the next few months yo have to remember that every single mome Your whole body has been depleted by its fort to help fight the enemy in the lung. Yo energy's overdrawn. You can't draw upo until it's been replenished. And only the k of rest I've been talking about will acco plish that."

But I wouldn't have to do it alone, he sa He was going to help me by giving me som thing called pneumothorax. Pneumothora collapsing the lung by artificial means.

"There's a tiny vacuumlike space betwe the lung itself and the surrounding ch wall," he told me. "By injecting air into t space, which is called the pleural cavity,

"Here it is! I knew I had it with me!"

it's a miracle

at any water conditioner can be easy on your hands
d so hard on dirt!

on® makes any soap or detergent sh anything cleaner in hard or soft water on, Inc.

URGH, PA.

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINES
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

"Clever idea!"
SURETY
TURN-CUFF
HOUSEHOLD GLOVES

CUFF UP — No dribbles on arms, no trickles inside gloves.

F DOWN — Two-inch longer protective auntlet.

like the Turn-Cuff idea, and you'll find our hands and nails stay prettier when ear Turn-Cuffs for scrubbing and clean- aundry and dishes, too.

and-10's, and at hardware, drug, and tment stores. Or send $1.00 for two pairs red postpaid. State size. DEPT. J, SURETY RUBBER COMPANY, lton, Ohio.

EXENE PERFECT FOR ANISH RICE"

George N. Svee
Chicago, Ill.

sh rice, long a favor- those who love good is doubly delicious n seasoned with ne, according to Mrs. Svee, who also uses ll-purpose seasoning to add flavor to stews baked dishes. Mexene, a unique blend of peppers and spices, is equally good to brighten spaghetti, meats, fowl, soups, vegetables, salads and seafoods.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Walker's AUSTEX Chili Co.
CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STEW
BRAISED BEEF HASH • SANDWICH SPREAD
SPAGHETTI and MEAT BALLS

lung is relaxed and given a chance to rest. This is often spoken of as a collapse. It's the same principle as putting a splint on a broken arm. The splint immobilizes the arm, which helps it heal faster. The pneumo does the same thing for the lung. It's really quite simple—if it works."

The catch was that in some cases adhesions have formed, gluing the chest wall to the lung itself and thus eliminating the space into which the air must be injected. And there was no way of finding out except by exploring. The doctor assured me it wouldn't hurt a bit. Well, hardly a bit, thanks to a shot of Novocain in the area to be explored. The next thing I knew I was lying on my right side, a pillow under my arm and a long sharp needle in my back, holding my breath with fear and anxiety, waiting to find out if the doctor had discovered what I later came to call the Northwest Passage. He did. He found a clear space on the second try.

Before that year was over I had so many needle marks in my back that I could easily have qualified for a job as a tattooed lady. Pneumothorax is not a one-time treatment. The injected air gets used up, the collapsed lung re-expands, and the whole business has to be repeated. These repeat performances are called refills.

But I'm running ahead of myself. At that moment all I wanted was for Doctor Marvin to take his infernal machine and go away.

And presently he did, with instructions that I was to lie perfectly still, without changing my position or moving a muscle, for half an hour. After that I was to turn over on my back—with the aid of Miss Rose; I wasn't even allowed to roll over alone—and go to sleep for two hours.

For thirty minutes which stretched into eternity I lay there, face buried in the pillow, alone with the bitter truth. Everything that gave life any meaning for me—husband and children, work and fun, my precious independence—everything was gone. There was nothing now between me and my thoughts. Nothing but the idea of the Big Out, to borrow a phrase from Fitzgerald.

Meanwhile Miss Rose was moving about, making me ready for my nap. I assured myself fiercely, I would not go to sleep.

But I would be cunning. I would pretend to go to sleep, and then when Miss Rose left the room I would sneak out of bed, get the insurance policy and check up on the sleeping-pill situation.

Two things interfered. First, Miss Rose did not leave the room. Second, I did go to sleep.

I slept the prescribed two hours. When I woke, some kind of change had taken place in me. Maybe while I slept the inner recesses of my mind began to accept the doctor as friend instead of enemy. Amazed to discover I'd been sleeping, I still thought I had a plan to outwit him, a plan I would carry out the moment I got a chance.

Meanwhile, though, I would have to cooperate, to go through the motions of submission. So when Miss Rose, who was a pretty brunette with a strong will under a mild exterior, outlined my routine, I gave every sign of acquiescence.

It was a fascinating routine. Full of stimulating activities like taking my temperature and counting my pulse four times a day—upon awakening, at noon, at four in the afternoon and at eight in the evening. I greeted this program with silent scorn, and yet it wasn't long before the gradations of that fever and the fluctuations of that pulse were matters of overwhelming concern to me.

But that was later. Right now I lay torn between rage and boredom, listening to Miss Rose lay out my days for me.

Eight o'clock: wake up, have pulse and temperature taken.

Eight-fifteen: have teeth brushed.

Eight-thirty: have sponge bath.

Eight-forty-five: have breakfast, without coffee, and with milk. I loved coffee, and I loathed milk.

Nine o'clock: say hello (but practically nothing more) to Harlan on his way to the studio.

(Continued on Page 151)

Lovely to look at!
Marvelous to use!

the beautiful 1951
Whirlpool
AUTOMATIC WASHER

Ready for you with all these famous exclusive features—

Suds-Miser AND THE Seven Rinses
Re-use good, hot sudsy water; get clothes sparkling bright.

Ultra Violet
GERMICIDAL LAMP
Sanitizing rays flood your clothes with sun-fresh fragrance.

Aqiflow Action
For thorough top-to-bottom washing. New "Perma-Smooth" agitator.

Cycle-Tone SIGNAL
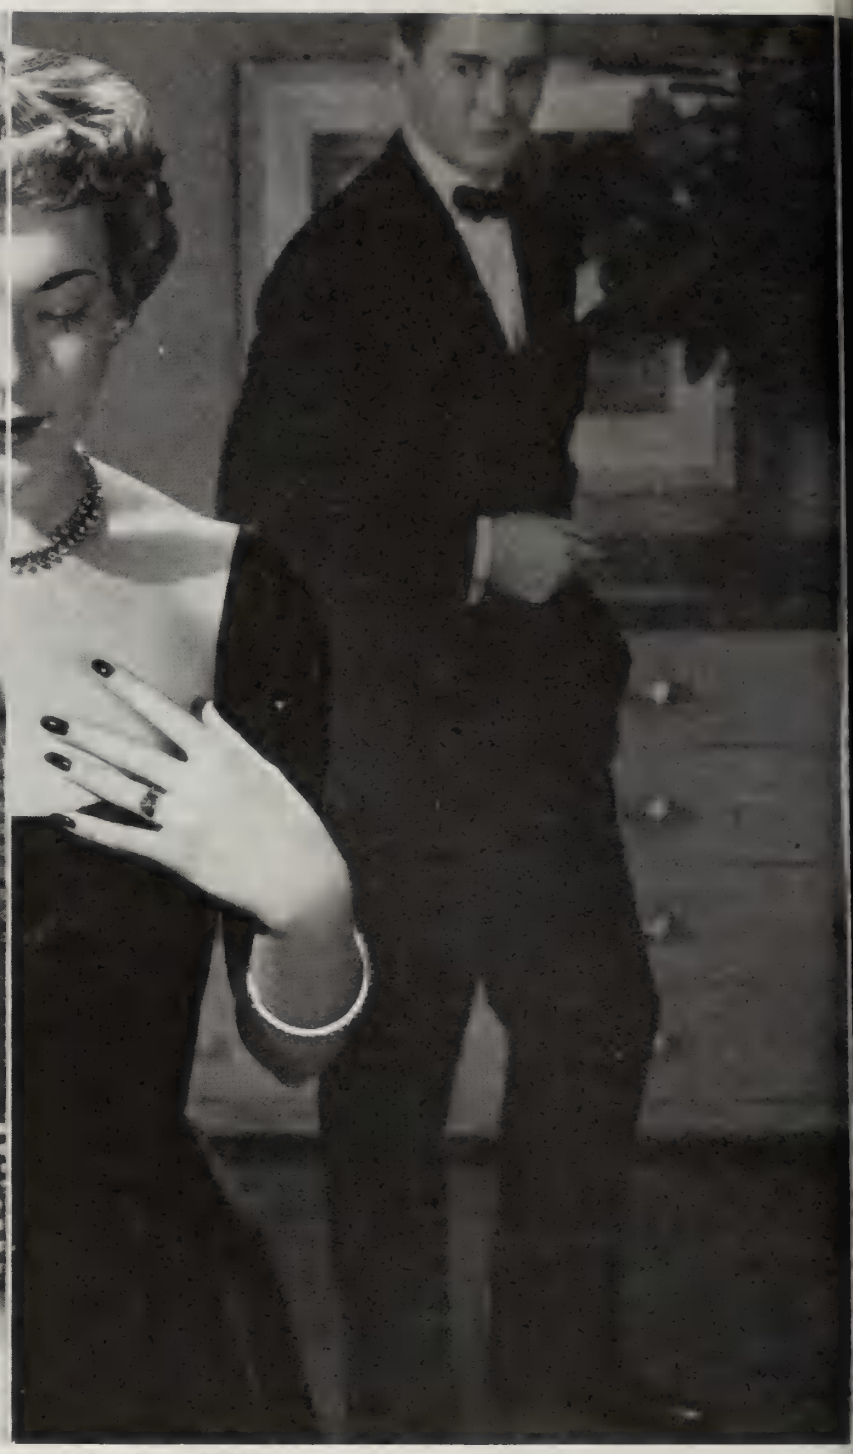
Tells you when washing's done . . . saves precious steps.

© 1950 W. C.

The sensational, fully-automatic 1951 Whirlpool combines extra thorough washing ability and trouble-free service with the most beautiful lifetime cabinet ever made. Whirlpool, with its score of famous features, pays for itself while it works for you . . . saves money and clothes as it washes Clinic Clean. Whirlpool is today's Big Difference in automatic washing! See it now!
WHIRLPOOL CORPORATION, ST. JOSEPH, MICHIGAN



The Beautiful 1951 WHIRLPOOL AUTOMATIC DRYER
Today's Greatest Advance in Home Laundering
. . . Be sure to see it at your dealer's!

For every woman who leads a double life...

DEPENDABLE YOU! Dishes washed shiny-bright, undies dunked every night! You do it all—and now with never a fear of rough, red hands! Because you can stop the damage before it starts—with Trushay, the "beforehand" lotion. Unlike "ordinary" lotions, you use Trushay before you begin. Then, when stepping out, it's . . .

DELECTABLE YOU! His queen of hearts—your hands so creamy smooth—protect by Trushay. Wonderful-working Trushay—applied BEFORE everyday washing chores protects your hands in hot, soapy water. It's marvelous "beforehand"—it's a wonderf lotion to use any time. Begin today to use Trushay.

TRUSHAY... the "beforehand" lotion... guards your hands even in hot, soapy water!

A "smoothie" too, for elbows, heels, knees, [illegible] Trushay makes it delightful, [illegible]

A "quickie" powder base! No "masky" look with Trushay, powder clings evenly! Trushay wards off chap that comes with blustery weather, too!

An "after-shave" miracle! Oil-rich Trushay smooths away dryness and flakiness—leaves legs and underarms satin-smooth after shaving!

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYE

(Continued from Page 149)

ine-fifteen: rest until the doctor comes.
first few weeks he came every day.)
even o'clock: a glass of milk.
ter that, rest till noon.
welve o'clock: pulse and temperature welve-thirty: lunch. With a glass of ne o'clock: go to sleep.
.
three, if I'd been a very good girl, I have another glass of milk, and after four-o'clock thermometer reading I turn on the radio.
six-thirty Miss Rose would give me er, which would include a glass of milk.
re used to be a theory that people with ad to be overfed. That theory is pretty in the discard, although doctors like to the patient put on an extra five or ten ds. Good, simple, easily digested food, gh but not too much, seems to be the
At least it was with me. The only abe must was that loathsome quart of a day.)
ter dinner, I was to rest until tempera-time, then good night to Harlan, and s out.
The important thing is to be cheerful," eerful indeed! But my new and hateful ne was not to begin until tomorrow. It still today and there were things to be
Rose said.
. I had to call Stella, my secretary, h I did while Miss Rose was downstairs ng a glass of milk. Just this once, I told lf couldn't hurt. Stella said Fadeout already gone off to New York, and what arth was wrong with

You're so mysterious!"
said. "What's it all t?"
fore I could think of
. I heard Miss Rose ng up the stairs. I bled something about ng back, and hung up.
en I had to see the people who ran my e: Ethel, the cook and housekeeper;
ie, in charge of the children; and Joe, ouseman. Although my staying at home nded largely on their continued pres-in the house, it seemed only fair to offer a chance to leave. No matter how care-e might be, there was some element of er. But they never even considered ng; or, if they did, they never let me it.
d then there were the children. Of se they couldn't come near me—I knew —but I had to see them just once more.
ter some discussion I prevailed upon Rose, who prevailed upon Mamie, who and stood, Tommy at her side and in her arms, at the open door of my
. It was late afternoon and the sun was ing through the curtains at the window.
there photographing them on my mind, my with his straight blond thatch and ly frame, Eric with a little fuzz of yelcurls along the middle of his otherwise head.
eing the boys for what I honestly bed was the last time, plus the physical n of my phone call to Stella, left me y thoroughly knocked out.
lidn't have to pretend to co-operate with Rose that night. I didn't have the gth to do anything else. I didn't even anything to help me sleep.

Venetian blinds in my room were al-drawn, the room was kept dim so that ing would distract me from the busi-of remaining physically emotionally mentally inactive.
hen I think back to that time it seems it had all taken place under water. Not e ocean, but in an aquarium, with that eful, green, subaqueous light that you in no place but an aquarium.
hen one day I wasn't under water any
. I wasn't in an aquarium; I was in my
. And the illusion, or delusion, or what-it was, of green had vanished. octor Marvin was there, accompanied man who had come to take pictures of my chest with a portable X-ray machine. This was a tremendous undertaking, since it involved sitting up, which I did with the aid of Miss Rose.

As if that were not enough excitement, there was a letter from my New York agent. The Saturday Evening Post had bought Fadeout. Very neat, I thought, with a little surge of triumph. Now I'd have my epitaph. But of course I'd have to wait until the check arrived, so I could endorse it.

My mind, suddenly out from under its wraps, began to race. And my tongue too. But Doctor Marvin stopped me. Because of the exertion involved in sitting up for the X ray, he wouldn't let me talk at all. In fact, after giving me my pneumo he left instructions that I was to be even quieter than usual, as if such a thing were possible. How I hated that man that day!

Well, I told myself, after he'd gone and Miss Rose had bedded me down again and left me alone, he could stop me from talking, but he couldn't stop me from thinking.

I BEGAN to wonder about Harlan. What had he been doing all those weeks? How was he possibly solving all his problems without my aid? And the Paramount story department? Were they really managing to struggle along without me? I decided I'd find out, and reached for the forbidden telephone.

I can still remember how my heart pounded as I dialed the number. When I got the studio I asked for Stella, but my voice was so low from weakness and fright that I couldn't make the operator hear me. Wild with frustration, but scared that Miss Rose would catch me, I hung up.

When she took my temperature at four o'clock, it had hit a new high.

I got away with it that time; she thought it was due to the X ray. But it meant that Harlan's visit was cut to a minimum that evening, and all I could learn was that Harlan was getting along fine and Paramount was getting along fine. They were getting along fine without me. Fine!

That night it was hard to sleep, but in the morning Doctor Marvin came back with good news. The X ray had shown some improvement in my lung, and he could reduce the pneumo refills to twice a week. My month of complete rest was showing results. Nothing to get excited about, he said, but definitely encouraging.

As a result, the doctor granted me a handful of tiny privileges. Like sitting up in bed for all my meals. And having Harlan's visits upped from five to fifteen minutes in the evening. And reading for a little while in the afternoon if I stayed away from anything overstimulating like the newspapers.

There was another privilege, a wonderful one. Doctor Marvin let me have a brief glimpse of the children. In the afternoons, when they got back from their walk, they'd come and stand at the open door.

It was thrilling to see them, but it was tantalizing too. To have them so near and yet so far. To watch Tommy take a tentative step into the room to show me a drawing he'd made, only to be pulled back, gently but firmly. I knew Mamie had to do it, but I began to brood. Then one day I blew my top and cried and coughed until my fever chart jumped and they had to send for Doctor Marvin.

Now Doctor Marvin was a patient man, but when he had to he could talk like a Dutch uncle. This was one of the times. He reminded me I was staying home only on trial, and that if seeing the kids made me act like that he'd stop letting me see them at all.

After that I kept my tantrums to myself, but I didn't stop having them. Someday I'd show him, I kept telling myself. I still regarded him as my enemy.

About a week later the check for Fadeout arrived. My hand shook as I endorsed it; it was more than a month since I'd made so much as my mark on a piece of paper. Mamie, who always helped me with my accounts, made out a deposit slip and mailed it

To practice what one preaches is comparatively easy. Most people would find it more difficult to preach what they practice.

DISCRIMINATING PEOPLE PREFER

HERBERT TAREYTON

MISS NATASHA BOISSEVAIN, beautiful young debutante of the 1950 season, makes her bow to society. Discriminating in her choice of cigarettes, Miss Boissevain says: "I find Herbert Tareyton's cork tip particularly nice, and so many of my friends do, too."

Discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton. They appreciate the kind of smoking that only fine tobacco and a genuine cork tip can give. The cork tip doesn't stick to the lips . . . it's clean and firm. And discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because their modern size not only means a longer, cooler smoke, but that extra measure of fine tobacco makes Herbert Tareyton today's most unusual cigarette value.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT THEM YOU'LL LIKE

Copr., The American Tobacco Company

Madame Henri Dewavrin, outstanding beauty of Parisian high society, carries her favorite scent scheme through all her cosmetics. Her chic vanity, her purse flacon of perfume, and her handsome gold-colored lipstick case all reflect the excellent taste and lovely fragrance of romantic Evening in Paris!

Evening in Paris Perfume, $12.50 to $1.00
Vanities, $6.75 to $1.50
Other wonderful Evening in Paris Gifts, $17.50 to $1.00
All prices plus tax.

Wear Evening in Paris the way French women do*

This Christmas, give lovely gifts of Evening in Paris. It's the world's best-beloved fragrance, the choice of the smartest French women. In Gift Sets, holiday-wrapped Perfume and Eau de Cologne, and lovely vanities to thrill the most sophisticated!

Mlle. Renée Jeanmaire, première ballerina of the Ballets de Paris, says, "The fragrance of Evening in Paris follows me everywhere—for I touch the lovely perfume to the tips of my ears, the curve of my arms and legs. And, often during the day, I use the refreshing Eau de Cologne."

Madame Charles Citroën, of the famous automobile family, says "Joyeux Noel!" to her friends with Evening in Paris. "These beautiful vanities make such cherished gifts. And I'm never without my vanity and its indispensable treasure of Evening in Paris Face Powder!"

Bourjois Evening in Paris is compounded here in the U. S. A. from the same French formula that makes Evening in Paris the largest-selling fragrance in France.

to the bank. Together with that insurance policy—if only I could manage to crawl out of bed and find it—there'd be a tidy little nest egg for mamma when I got around to my own fade-out.

But I couldn't do that—not quite yet. Because with the check was a note, saying the story had been scheduled for an early issue of The Post. A set of galley proofs was being sent me; would I please correct them and send them back as soon as possible. Well, naturally, I'd have to wait for that.

Looking back at it, it seems to me that the days immediately following were the toughest of the whole course of my illness. The period of complete rest had made me feel stronger than I was.

If I'd still felt very ill, or had been in pain, submission might not have come so hard. But there was no pain, and I told myself over and over that they could not do this to me. I'd find some way of getting round them.

I'm not excusing myself. I know perfectly well how fortunate I was within the bounds of my misfortune, how many thousands of people there are whose physical suffering and problems are infinitely greater than mine were. I knew it then, and the knowledge should have given me the patience and fortitude I lacked. But it didn't. I was sick, trapped and rebellious. One small consolation is that most T B victims go through a similar period of the sulks. Or so I'm told.

I remember the first thing I did to show myself I was still my own boss. In terms of healthy people it was such a little thing that it may seem ridiculous.

> We see things not as they are, but as we are.
> —H. M. TOMLINSON.

Miss Rose had gone to sterilize my breakfast dishes. I was waiting for Doctor Marvin and glancing through a new magazine. All of a sudden I began to wonder what I looked like. On the night table next to my bed was a small mirror. Slowly I edged over and got it, and peered at my reflection.

What I saw was hardly reassuring. My face, though not quite so gaunt as it had been a month ago, was still too thin, and my skin had a kind of prison pallor. In the absence of lipstick my mouth was white and bloodless. Worst of all was my hair. It coiled around my shoulders in limp strands. I could have been a stand-in for Medusa.

Damn Miss Rose, I said to myself silently, for letting me look like that.

In the night table I found comb and brush. Inching up to a sitting position, I went to work with the brush on my snaky locks. Brushing the hair, even when you're perfectly healthy, is a pretty tiring thing, and active movement of the arms was almost No. 1 on the taboo list, but that didn't deter me.

I couldn't have been brushing more than two or three minutes when I heard the doorbell ring. Doctor Marvin! Guiltily I hid the evidence, and fell panting back against the pillow.

DOCTOR MARVIN was puzzled by my unusual shortness of breath. "What's going on here? Anything bothering you?"

"Oh, no," I assured him, looking, I hoped, the picture of girlish innocence.

I got away with that swindle. Flushed with victory, I went on to new bits of cheating. Like writing letters with a pencil on a scratch pad I'd found in the night table, and smuggling them out via Ethel. And reading the forbidden newspaper, left by accident on the foot of my bed. Writing was a physical strain and reading an emotional one.

But this was nothing compared with the next step in my war against authority. That involved the telephone. There it sat, right at my elbow, a constant, tormenting reminder of the world outside. I wanted to talk. But this had to be timed carefully. Not only was it necessary for Miss Rose to be out of the house; Mamie had to be gone too. Every afternoon between three and five she went to the park with the boys.

My first thought was the studio and Stella. This time, by a prodigious effort, I was able to make myself heard. We had a big emotional reunion and for the first time in all those weeks I laughed. Really laughed. Bu the laughter quickly turned into the eas tears of illness. And before the tears coul turn into a coughing spell I managed a wea good-by and hung up.

For a few minutes I lay still, while m trembling subsided. I was exhausted, but was triumphant. This was more than just telephone call I had made. This was a ste back into my world. I'd show them the couldn't keep me down!

That afternoon both pulse and temper ture were up. Miss Rose didn't say so, na urally. But I'd been studying that pleasan noncommittal mask of hers and I could te Besides, the reaction had set in. My eyes we hot and glassy, my heartbeat staccato—th price of exertion and a guilty conscience.

WHEN the children came to the door could barely manage a greeting, and lat when Harlan settled down for his evenin visit it was a strain for me to talk at all.

"What's the matter?" he asked anxiousl "Have you been coughing?"

"Oh, no, not a bit." Well, that was tr enough. But I must be more careful, I to myself, and not spoil things by arousi suspicion.

Harlan left me early. He had work to d "Good night," he said, and then solicitous "Take it easy."

In the morning time dragged out int minably; the dull routine was duller than ev and I thought Miss Rose would never through and leave me my devices. Just befo noon, when her back w turned, I sneaked a gla of cold water. In case m temperature was still hig which I suspected it mig be, that would bring down. An old trick, a stupid trick, but worked.

At lunchtime I wasn't hungry, but I a I mustn't do anything to make Miss Ro suspicious. She carried the tray to the h outside. She pulled down the Veneti blinds. She gently helped me to lie down f and pulled the cover neatly up around m

She bent over to pick up something th had fallen between the bed and the nig table—a book, maybe, or a napkin from m lunch tray. In order to get whatever it w she had to pull the night table away fro the bed. And she was gone before I disco ered that she hadn't pushed it back.

It was a round table, a couple of feet diameter, laden with all the paraphernalia the sickroom. On the far rim of the table s the telephone.

A few moments went by before I came the realization that I could not reach it. It c curred to me that maybe that table had been moved entirely by accident. May Miss Rose—yes, of course, that was it.

Well, I'd show her! Propping myself on my left elbow, I struggled to a sitti position and stretched out my right arm its furthermost limits. No use. There w still a space of perhaps a foot between m finger tips and the telephone.

All right, then, I'd drag the table ba where it belonged. First removing as ma things as I could reach and putting them the bed, I grasped it with my two han and pulled. But the table wouldn't budg

For a few moments I lay back against t headboard, fighting for breath, battling t hot tears of rage.

Suddenly it came to me! I'd get up. It w only a few steps from the bed to the tab I'd walk to the table, pick up the telepho and carry it back to bed.

Slowly I pushed the covers away. It w a shock to see my legs; I hadn't realized ho thin they were. Trembling with the effort stood up, holding to the headboard for su port. But I hadn't known what six weeks bed can do to a pair of legs. One totteri step and my knees gave way. I slumped the floor like an old rag doll.

That's where I was when Doctor Marv came in. Next thing I knew I was back bed and the doctor was sitting beside m taking my pulse. I wanted him to scold m

(Continued on Page 155)

AT CEIL CHAPMAN'S OWN HOME. When this celebrated fashion designer entertains, you see her sure brilliant touch in every detail. Example—fresh new Congress decks appear at every game. "It's such a pity to strike an off-note with soiled, shabby cards," Ceil Chapman says. "And everybody loves a game that begins with the crackle of cellophane!"

One touch tells you—

WHAT A DIFFERENCE CEL-U-TONE FINISH MAKES!

It's that rich gleam and glide no other cards have . . . that smoother Congress "slip," that livelier Congress "snap." CEL-U-TONE FINISH does it!
And see how gemlike their colors flash against the gold and silver glow of their edges!
To offer such cardplaying luxury is the finest compliment you can pay your guests.

FREE! — Complete 1950 rules for CANASTA, the new game millions are playing! With valuable strategy hints. Just mail a self-addressed stamped envelope to Dept. 28, The United States Playing Card Company, Cincinnati 12, Ohio. (In Canada, The International Playing Card Co., Windsor, Ont.)

Wake up, darling!

YOU DON'T NEED A FORTUNE TO SLEEP IN THE LAP OF LUXURY

You don't need money in the bank—just in piggy bank—to have luxurious combed perc sheets. Lady Pepperell Fine Combed Perc give you all the luxury you've ever dreamed o extra smooth texture, extra softness—at no ex price! Ask for them at your favorite store.

RIGHT OUT OF A DREAM! Yes, that's the way you'll feel about these trousseau-lovely combed percales. Lady Pepperell Fine Combed Percales are so smooth and soft, you'll marvel at their texture. They feel luxurious, look luxurious, but aren't luxury priced. They're a treat for you and your budget! Be sure to have at least six for each bed.

SOFT AS A CLOUD? Not soft enough for Pepperell! Thes the short fibres combed out of the yarn for just one Pepperell Fine Combed Percale Sheet! Only the smoo longer-staple fibres go into exquisite Lady Pepperell Shee YOU'LL BE SURPRISED! Lady Pepperell Fine Combed Percales are amazingly sturdy, long-wearing! They're lightweight—money-saving on laundry-by-the-pound, work-saving if you do your own. And these sheets need practically no ironing!

FRESH FROM A FLOWER GARDEN—like the colors of Lady Pepperell Fine Combed Percales . . . pink, blue, peach, maize, rose, spring green, aqua. You'll find your favorite, because they're everybody's favorite. More Pepperell colored sheets are in use than any other brand!

LADY PEPPERELL Fine Combed PERCALE SHEET

PEPPERELL FABRICS

REMEMBER, PEPPERELL IS A PROMISE . . .
OF TOP QUALITY IN COMBED PERCALE AND MUSLIN SHEE
PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, BOSTON, MASSACHUSET

(Continued from Page 152)

could lash out at him. But he didn't.
ly I had to break the silence.
ll right," I said in sulky defiance, "why you say it and get it over with?"
shook his head. "If you want to play s way, that's your business. Most pago through a cheating period, but I ht you were smarter."
ıst tell me one thing," I demanded.
came here this afternoon because Miss squealed on me, didn't you?"
liss Rose didn't squeal," he said qui-"It was your chart that squealed. A is rather like a lie detector." He stood d closed his bag. "And your husband vorried. I should think you'd want to im a break, even if you don't care how you set yourself back. This is hard m." Doctor Marvin glanced at his . "I'm due at the hospital. I'll be back e morning to give you your pneumo."
oice was completely impersonal. "Oh, he said, turning to go, "here's your I picked it up on the way in."
a long time after he left I didn't look e mail. I lay there, licking my wounds brooding. So I cheat and a liar.
fool. And I was ng life miserable arlan. That one home, all right. I do something to ıis rotten situa-simply couldn't it another day.
tlessly I shuffled
gh my mail and once my heart
a leap. Among tters was an ene with a Phila-ia postmark. In-
I knew, were galley proofs of out.
ore open the ene and pulled out heets. First I'd t through to see t stood up, then ake the correc-
It stood up well, I thought.
as a neat little
; not important,
un. I wondered would illustrate wondered if they'd put my name on over. Too bad I wouldn't be around the magazine came out. Of course, I wait to see what it looked like, and at's when I heard the voice. It was a small voice, but not of conscience. It from somewhere inside me and it filled oom with silent mockery.

top kidding yourself," it said. "You want to die. You want to live!"
cing the fact that I hadn't the slightest tion of dying was my first turning point e battle of the bugs. In that moment I oted consciously what I had known sub-iously almost from the start: that or Marvin was not my enemy, but my d and ally.

RE were other things I recognized that noon. The business of dying, for instance.
ıs clear to me now that, except perhaps he first moment of shock, I'd actually intensely anxious to live. I could see eagerly I'd awaited the outcome of that pneumo, how I'd searched Miss Rose's ommittal eyes for a clue each time she ed my temperature on her chart.
ıd I saw with painful clarity how utterly entered I'd been, how preoccupied with rash of my little private world. Not till very day had I thought what my illness doing to Harlan, what it must be costing in strain and worry, to say nothing of the y financial burden.
ıd the children. Each afternoon when 'd come to the door for their brief visit I indulged in the same little drama of self-
The theme had always been how hard it was on me, never the harm it might be doing them. Not so much the physical harm—that was being guarded against—but the emotional harm.

There were others. My mother, who had worked so hard and sacrificed so much for me when I was young; my father, whose warmth and love had brightened my own childhood; my sister. What right had I to run out on them, to quit, to do anything but bend every effort toward recovery?

AND I could do it! I knew I could. I'd fight the disease instead of the doctor. Whatever he wanted, I'd do. Whatever he forbade, I'd renounce. That part would be harder. But I welcomed the test.

Bathed in a rosy glow, I felt like a sinner who'd just hit the glory trail.

I was still in this state of grace when Miss Rose came in, thermometer in one hand, glass of milk in the other.

"Hello," I said, fixing my eyes on her. "Miss Rose, I want to thank you for what you did for me today. I'm really grateful."

She straightened and regarded me with a lifted eyebrow. "What do you mean?"

Under her cool, level gaze I felt foolish. "I mean pushing the table away so I couldn't reach the telephone. If you hadn't done that ——" I smiled pleadingly, trying to establish a liaison between us. But Miss Rose wasn't having any.

"I didn't push the table away," she said. "Or if I did, it was quite by accident."

That's as far as I got with her on the subject, then or ever.

There was nothing to do but wait for the doctor. Most of the night I was on a flying trapeze, swinging between anticipation of his approval and fear that he might not believe me. He did, though.

"That's fine," he said warmly. "I knew you'd get around to it. You'll have your bad times now and then. But between us we'll get you out of here."

"When?" It came out before I could stop myself.

"That's the one question I can't answer. I think you'd see why if you really understood what was going on in your chest."

"Why don't you tell me?"

"All right," he said, sitting down on the edge of the bed.

For maybe ten minutes Doctor Marvin sat and talked. His language was clinical but perfectly clear. Obviously I can't quote him exactly, but I remember what he told me and I would like to sum it up as best I can.

Think of your lung as a bellows, he said. It expands and contracts with every breath, rising and falling countless times a day. Every physical activity increases both the rate and the depth of the breathing. The greater the activity, the greater the increase. On the other hand, any reduction in physical activity reduces the rate and the depth of breathing, and keeps the lung more quiescent.

This in turn does two things: it hastens the healing process inside the lung itself, and it cuts down the flow of blood and other fluids from the tuberculous area to other parts of the lung, or the rest of the body, and tends to localize the infection.

The infection starts when lowered body resistance gives a chance to the tubercle bacilli, which in a vast number of people have been lurking in the system, waiting for just such a chance to attack.

This tubercle bacillus is a pernicious little organism, very sturdy and very stubborn

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Prayer and Correction

By Elizabeth Chesley Baity

The Prayer:

"Now I seek my little bed
While the stars shine overhead,
Father, guard me through the night,
Keep me safe till morning light."

Correction, in the Interests of Accuracy:

Now that they've been dragged to bed
Shrieking murrains on every head,
Ringing the welkin miles around
With their outraged, rebellious sound,
"For heaven's sake," the parents pray,
"Keep them asleep until the day!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The beautiful color scheme in this attractive room was inspired by the floor. It was planned with Texfloor* tile . . . the new, long-wearing, low-cost linoleum with the textured look. Pattern Nos. 601 and 602 are used.

Decorating Made Easy!

Create Your Own Perfect Color Schemes This New Way!

Be your own decorator! It's no trick with Sloane-Blabon's ingenious new Design-A-Floor Kit. Design-A-Floor shows you how to start the way professional decorators do . . . with the floor. You plan your own custom-designed tile floor . . . then color-coordinate the whole room. And, you even get a preview of how your ideas would actually look in a room! It's fun . . . so utterly simple . . . and so helpful!

Helps you get new and unusual color ideas!

Kit contains booklet with many pages of decorating hints and suggestions in full color. Shows 65 different tile colors and patterns. Includes room-plan diagrams, unique planning transparencies, even a complete set of colored pencils!

SLOANE Quality LINOLEUM PRODUCTS

*Trade-mark

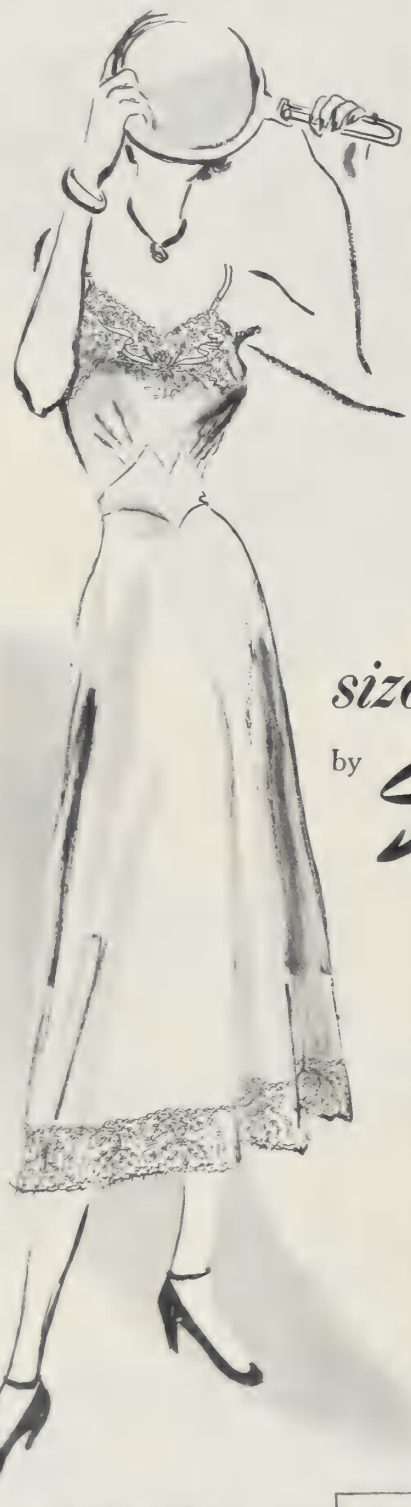
ASK YOUR DEALER OR SEND FOR YOUR DESIGN-A-FLOOR* KIT ...ONLY 25¢!

Sloane-Blabon Corporation
Dept. LH-4
295 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Send ..... Design-A-Floor Kits, at 25¢ each. I enclose coin, stamps or money order to cover cost.

Name .....

Street .....



City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Do you know your exact slip size?

"SIZE 34 USUALLY FITS ME."

"I GUESS THE LENGTH IS O. K."

You don't need to when you buy size-u-matic slips

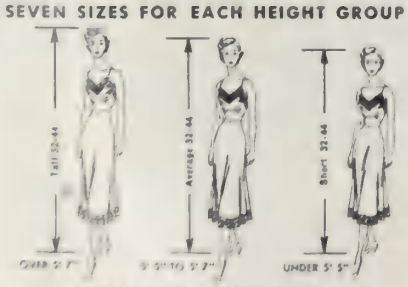
by Seamprufe®

Here's a sure way to a faultless slip fit! When you buy a size-u-matic slip, made exclusively by Seamprufe, simply give your height and bust measurement. As if it were custom made, your Seamprufe slip fits you everywhere, automatically, whether you're tall, average or short. That's because size-u-matic slips are scientifically sized for three height groups, with seven sizes in each group—your own exact size included!



LACE and GRACE

Alencon type lace, with embroidered applique, enhances the dainty scalloped bodice—hemline highlighted with deep matching lace. Of Bur-Mil multifilament rayon crepe in White, Pink, Navy and Black.

About $4.00.

TRIM and TAILORED (not illus.) About $3.10.

SEVEN SIZES FOR EACH HEIGHT GROUP

SLIPS • PETTICOATS • PAJAMAS • GOWNS

SEAMPRUFE INCORPORATED • FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

Though work is constantly being done in this field, no specific has yet been found which is strong enough to kill the TB germ without seriously injuring the body that harbors it.*

On the other hand, the TB bug has absolutely no power of locomotion, which makes it possible for healthy body cells to collect persistently around the focal point of infection. And while they are not able to kill the germ, they are often able to wall it off.

A protective fiber is formed around the diseased area; in the early stages this fiber is fine and weblike, quite weak and easily dislodged. Anything which tends to move the germs around retards the walling-off process. And anything which limits the movement of the lung makes it easier for the protective wall to grow strong.

That is why the principle of absolute rest is so important. With co-operation on the part of the patient, with complete rest, that protective wall will, in most cases, grow in density and strength, until it securely seals off the tuberculous area. That is when the disease may be considered as under control.

"So you see," Doctor Marvin said, "why I can't tell you now just when you'll get out of here. That depends on how fast the disease comes under control. And that depends for the most part on you."

"Oh, I'll be good now," I assured him. "But, doctor, why didn't you tell me all this before?"

"My dear girl," he said without reproach, "I tried to tell you, but in the beginning you couldn't listen, you were too stunned and sick. Later on you wouldn't listen."

"But that's all over now," I said.

After Doctor Marvin had gone I found I was quite content to lie perfectly still, letting my thoughts drift idly. I began to appreciate the healing quality of solitude, and the peace that comes when you stop fighting it.

Everything took on a new light that day. When Mamie brought Tommy and Eric for their regular visit to my door, it was as though they had been restored to me after a long absence. How beautiful they were, how charming, how infinitely precious.

As for Harlan, he came in presently bearing gifts: a dozen yellow roses and the news that as a special dispensation he was to have dinner with me that night.

"You've talked to the doctor?" I asked.

He had. "I hear you're a reformed character." He smiled.

"Well, that's going a little far. But I've come to the conclusion that crime doesn't pay."

THAT was all we said on the subject of my great transformation. But there are other means of communication. Everything necessary was said in a glance.

Dinner was a great event that night. Miss Rose helped me into my best bed jacket, did a nice job of brushing my hair and tied it up with a yellow ribbon. When I looked into the mirror it appeared as if I might, after all, still be a member of the human race.

In the morning I still felt wonderful: rested and relaxed and ready for my career of obedience.

That first day was pretty easy. After breakfast I spent an hour correcting the proofs of Fadeout. The rest of the morning I studied the radio section of the paper and started a radio log in an old black notebook Miss Rose dug up for me. After lunch and my rest, I listened to a few programs—some music and even a couple of soap operas.

The music was pleasant, the soap operas fascinating in a gruesome sort of way, and somehow the day passed without incident. But I knew by nightfall that it wasn't going to be enough. It was made work—boondoggling, I think they called it then. If I were going to make good my determination never to cheat again—and I certainly wanted to

*That was true in 1937, and although some advances have been made, it is substantially true today. Streptomycin stops the germ's growth, but does not kill it; and this effect may be for only a few weeks or months.

More persons, on the whole, are humbugged by believing in nothing, than by believing too much.

—P. T. BARNUM.

I would have to get some extension of privileges.

When Doctor Marvin arrived the n morning I put it to him. "Won't you let read the paper," I begged him, "and liste the news? I'm beginning to feel like Man Without a Country!"

"Well," he said, "what you read in paper is hardly designed to keep you c and serene, which is the way you must le to be if you really want to get well. On other hand, lying here fretting over what don't read isn't any better for you."

"Believe me, doctor, it's worse."

"ALL right, then. Suppose you give whirl and see how you take it. But you n remember that too much mental activit as bad for you as too much physical activit

"I will remember," I promised. "And if tell me it's setting me back, I'll give it u

"That seems fair enough," he said. "Y can start tomorrow."

And so I took another step back into world, via the Los Angeles Daily News and New York Times For a while it worked all right. I read the papers and listened to news—most of which bad—with no untoward sults. But it wasn't simple; life keeps on h pening, to paraphras remark of Lorelei L

There was the time didn't come to my doo a whole week. It was a cold, they assured But I didn't believe them. He was serio ill, I knew it, and they were afraid to tell I brooded over that and nothing could me till I saw Eric again, pink and bou

There was the time my parents, some fifteen years of separation, came to legal parting of the ways.

There were these things, and many oth that made me brood and agitate. Every heaval was recorded on Miss Rose's c as plainly as an earthquake on a seis graph.

Once when Doctor Marvin came in I s "I know I'm acting like a fool. But I can't put myself in a mental isolation w I can't turn my mind off as if it were a l switch."

"No," he said, "you can't put yourse a mental isolation ward. But you can your mind off like a switch. You can cultiv a set of emotional stop signals. If you h something, or read something, or even if just catch yourself thinking something turbing, stop it and turn to something el something pleasant."

I was dubious of my ability to perf this feat of discipline. Still, it was a challe I promised Doctor Marvin I would try.

That night when the lights were o thrashed about in futile agitation. Then, skeptically, half sheepishly, I ordered m to stop. I'm not at all sure I didn't say word "stop" aloud.

To my amazement, I stopped. And tu my thoughts deliberately toward a plea scene from long ago and far away. My A Claire's wedding, with me done up in accordion pleats, strewing roses. . . . Rebe of Sunnybrook Farm, the first real pl ever saw, with Edith Taliaferro in the role. . . . Tit Willow, the way my fa sang it to me before I went to bed, and private version of Hansel and Gretel, wh never have been lost if only they had membered to take the Madison Ave car. . . . It might have been any one of th things—or any one of a thousand oth Whatever it was, for a moment or tw worked.

After that, whenever something distu ing came along, in the news, in the hous the recesses of my own mind, I switche off and switched on something pleasan worked on it like an athlete practicing a ficult stroke. After a while it became aln an involuntary habit.

I was helped tremendously by a coupl books Doctor Marvin brought me. One, e tled Recovery Record, by a pair of lung

(Continued on Page 158)

FAMOUS BEAUTY BANS COMPLIMENTS AT HOME!

Mrs. Robert Sweeny refuses to be complimented on her loveliness these days—for a very good reason!

As deb Joanne Connelley, she was lauded—and loved it.

But now Joanne has a daughter!

Being a wise mother, she knows how wrong it is to steal the attention that belongs to her child. Both she and her husband are determined that little Sharon shall get her rightful share of the spotlight.

That's why Joanne prefers to hear praise of her daughter. The talk in the Sweeny household is not Joanne's blonde beauty, but Sharon's amazing navy blue eyes.

Joanne is also proving how wise a mother she is by giving her daughter the best of skin care—Jergens Lotion.

Sharon loses no sleep on one problem—skin care, with Jergens Lotion to help prevent diaper rash and chafing. Doctors' tests on hundreds of babies prove Jergens 5 times better than skin cares frequently used in hospitals.

When Sharon is ready to make her debut around 1968, Joanne knows she'll be one of the prettiest debs of that particular year. Sharon can thank her beautiful mother for this—and her wise choice of Jergens Lotion skin care.

The hands that care for Sharon are silky and soft. For Joanne has long been a Jergens fan. Being a liquid, it quickly furnishes softening moisture thirsty skin needs. Yet it's never oily or sticky. (10¢ to $1.00 plus tax.)

Try this film test. To soften, a lotion should be absorbed by upper layers of skin. Jergens Lotion contains quickly-absorbed ingredients that doctors recommend—no heavy oils that merely coat the skin. Proof? Water won't form "beads" on a hand smoothed with Jergens Lotion (left) as with a lotion that leaves a heavy, oily film (right).

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

ORE WOMEN USE Jergens Lotion THAN ANY OTHER HAND CARE IN THE WORLD

NEW STIR-N-ROLL PASTRY FOR YOUR HOLIDAY PIES!

Betty Crocker's easy recipe gives Flaky Tender Pastry Every Time!

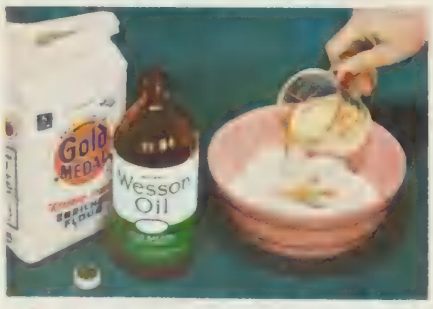
Now STIR-N-ROLL Pie Crust will give new goodness to pumpkin pie, mince pie, and all your bountiful holiday pies.

Here's a wholly new pastry recipe—so simple, so sure, you can make flaky, tender pie crust every time! Only 4 simple steps! Only 4 ingredients—including Wesson Oil. Light, mild Wesson Oil assures delicacy of pastry flavor. Wesson Oil stands up under highest baking heat, so your pastry is readily digestible.

STIR-N-ROLL Pastry is quick! No cutting in of solid shortening! No guessing about liquid. Just measure Wesson Oil and milk together and add to dry ingredients. Rolls out like magic between 2 pieces of waxed paper.

© 1950 by Wesson Oil & Snowdrift Co., Inc
"Betty Crocker" is a registered trademark of General Mills, Inc

Betty Crocker's STIR-N-ROLL Pastry Recipe for Pumpkin Pie



Preheat oven to 425°

1. Mix together
   1½ cups sifted Gold Medal Flour *1 teaspoon salt Measure into same cup and add all at once... 6 tbsps. (or ¼ cup plus 2 tbsps.) Wesson Oil
   3 tbsps. cold whole milk
2. Stir just until mixed. Round up dough; flatten slightly.
3. Place between 2 sheets of waxed paper (11-inch square). Roll out gently until circle reaches edges of paper. (If bottom paper wrinkles, turn, roll on other side.) Peel off top paper. If dough breaks, press edges together, or add patch without moistening!
4. Lower paper, with pastry clinging, over 8- or 9-inch pie pan. Peel off paper. Gently fit STIR-N-ROLL Pastry into pan. Trim. Flute edges. Add your favorite pumpkin filling. Bake 45 to 55 minutes in hot oven 425° until silver knife inserted into side of filling comes out clean. Cool. Add—

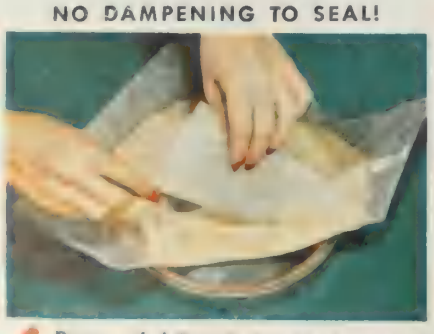
CHEESE TOPPING: Whip ½ cup heavy cream: fold in 3 tbsp. cheese spread softened with 1 tbsp. milk.

*If you use Self-Rising Flour omit salt. Reduce baking temperature to 375°.

NO CUTTING IN SHORTENING!

1. Revolutionary recipe! No guessing at liquid. Wesson Oil and milk measured exactly, easily. Just add to Gold Medal Flour and salt in mixing bowl.

NO RISK OF OVERHANDLING!



2. Child's play! Just stir lightly. Dough looks moist but isn't sticky. Shape dough into ball; flatten slightly. More pliable, easier to handle.

NO MESSY FLOURED BOARD!

3. Amazing! Roll out pastry between two 11-inch squares of waxed paper. Roll out gently until circle reaches edges. Peel off top paper.

NO DAMPENING TO SEAL!

4. Pan-ready! Dough clings to paper until you gently loosen and fit to pan. Mends easily without moistening. Trim. Flute edges.

(Continued from Page 156)

cialists named Webb and Ryder, had been published in 1923; the other was the autobiography of the pioneer of modern tuberculosis treatment in America, Dr. Edward Livingston Trudeau.

Recovery Record is just what its name implies. Following a brief account of the disease and what must be done about it is a set of chart sheets on separate pages—enough for a couple of years—covering pulse, weight, temperature, remarks to the doctor, plus a nugget or two of admonition and advice on every page.

Any parent who has ever set up one of those brightly colored behavior charts in a child's room and noted the improvement in his conduct when he is allowed to grade himself will understand what Doctors Webb and Ryder were after. As far as I was concerned, they succeeded. Once I had that little book, it became more than ever a point of pride with me to be a good girl. I wanted straight A's on my report card.

Hating bed was not something that developed only as a result of my illness. I had always hated and scorned it. And waking had always been an instantaneous process with me. One moment I'd be asleep, the next moment awake. It was always early, too—six o'clock or before—no matter how late I'd gone to bed.

That's the way it had been, always. Then a strange and wonderful thing happened. It was a soft bright morning in May—a balmy morning and very fair. From a garden down the street came the plaintive murmur of mourning doves, and through the Venetian blinds I could see a spiral of rambler rose reaching toward the blue slate roof of the house next door.

Gradually I realized that I had been watching that rambler and listening to those doves for a long time without a thought in my head. This morning I had not been shot out of a cannon. Then it came to me that today was not the first time this had happened. The systematic campaign of rest and acquiescence had begun to bear fruit. It was only two months since I'd been condemned to solitary confinement, and I was quite reconciled to serving out my sentence. On the whole, I felt a measure of contentment I wouldn't have believed possible.

One of the things that helped me build up resistance to temptation was the working out of a schedule for the day. When I had begun examining the TB books Doctor Marvin brought me, my eye had been caught by the phrase "busy idleness." It was another way of saying what Miss Rose had said the first afternoon she came—that if you blocked off the day into little fenced-in sections, you'd be surprised at how painlessly the time would pass. So I blocked off my day.

In point of time elapsed, the longest part of my schedule was between waking at six o'clock and Miss Rose's appearance at eight to get me started for the day. But in point of time felt, it was the shortest. Indeed, during those two hours I had no sense of time at all.

Almost before I knew it Miss Rose would appear and begin her ministrations.

Waiting for breakfast, I'd read the morning paper; after breakfast came Harlan's morning call. Then the radio with the ten-o'clock news, and about the time that was over the mail would arrive.

Then it was time for Doctor Marvin to arrive, if he was coming. By now he came only every other day and had reduced the pneumo refills to once a week. If he didn't come I'd use that time to note the contents of whatever magazine had arrived that morning, or go through The New York Times and mark stories to be clipped later. Or maybe I'd answer a letter, and in that department I limited myself to one a day.

The letter-and-magazine period, together with the newspapers, brought me up to the twelve-o'clock temperature-and-pulse [illegible]. This had assumed a vast importance, bec[ause] now I was setting down the results in [my] Recovery Record myself.

Mostly, because I was behaving sen[sibly] these days, both pulse and temperatur[e] haved sensibly, too, seldom rising ver[y] above normal. But it is one of the mystif[ying] characteristics of TB that there will b[e] occasional upset even when the patie[nt] giving complete co-operation. Now and t[hen] for no accountable reason, my pulse or [tem]perature, or both, would soar. This was [one] of the hardest things to take calmly, but [one] of the most necessary, because fretting w[ill] only make them higher.

After this procedure came lunch. And a[fter] lunch for an hour and a half, I read. Th[en] was time for that rest which in earlier [days] had caused me such anguish. Sometim[es] even fell asleep, though not often. An[d it] didn't matter. One of the things I lea[rned] from Doctor Marvin was that the ac[tual] business of sleeping was of minor importa[nce]. When you rest as much as you do in a [day] case, you can't possibly sleep a great [deal]. And the only thing bad about that is [the] worrying about not sleeping.

From four o'clock, when Miss Rose a[nd] went through our temperature et al rou[tine] and I had my milk, until five, when [the] children came in [from] their walk, I w[ould] through the aftern[oon] mail, listened to [the] radio, did a little w[ork] on the radio log I [had] begun to keep.

> Let us discard all this quibbling about this man and the other man, this race and the other race being inferior and therefore they must be placed in an inferior position. Let us discard all these things, and unite as one people throughout this land, until we shall once more stand up declaring that all men are created equal. —ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Promptly at [five] Mamie would c[ome] and take up her pos[ition] the door, Eric in [my] arms, Tommy stan[ding] docilely at her s[ide]. After the children [left] I'd look at the evening paper or listen to [the] radio.

The radio kept me occupied till din[ner] time. Then, if Harlan had no plans for [the] evening, he'd join me for dinner, taking hi[s] a small table facing me halfway across [the] room. After dinner he'd settle in a big [easy] chair—also halfway across the room—[and] we'd talk. Mostly he'd talk; I was still s[up]posed to use my voice as little as possi[ble]. Small talk it was: studio gossip, reports [on] his projects, news of our friends. And I wo[uld] nod and smile and ask a few questions.

Harlan had, like most nice people [I] fronted with this sort of situation, a str[ong] sense of obligation. And because he k[new] how much I loved fun, he was reluctant t[o] off and leave me alone. But just becau[se] loved fun so much, it was easy for me to h[ave] him go. It may not be very noble of me, [but] it's only honest to say that I wouldn't en[joy] sacrificing myself on the altar of anybo[dy's] illness, and I never wanted anybody to d[o] for me. I detest the odor of martyrdom.

As a matter of fact, one of the s[ur]but steady pleasures I had during t[his] period was the vicarious one that came to [me] through his accounts of the places he w[ent] and the people he saw. It was one wa[y] bringing the world into my room with[out] bad effect on me.

Somehow the days were filled, e[ven] crowded, such was the virtue of this b[lessed] idleness I had embarked upon. And t[hen] suddenly it was almost June.

Almost June, and my own private w[orld] moved on, too, mostly for the better. T[he] protective web around my lung lesion [was] growing stronger. A blood test, a sput[um] test and a new set of pictures by the porta[ble] X-ray man all bore evidence of a marked [im]provement. When the results came in D[oc]tor Marvin fairly beamed.

"You're coming along," he said. "If [you] keeps up you won't need a nurse m[uch] longer. I might even let you ——" I di[d] find out what he might even let me do, [be]cause just then the houseboy appeared.

"There's a lady downstairs," he s[aid]. "Miz Nugent. She was just passin' and w[on]dered would you like to see her?" J[ust] women are raving about from coast to coast!

(Continued on Page 160)

Here's that EXCITING NEW ELECTRIC RANGE

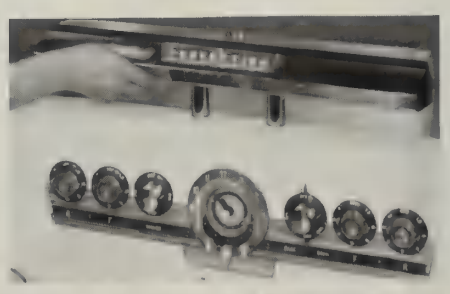
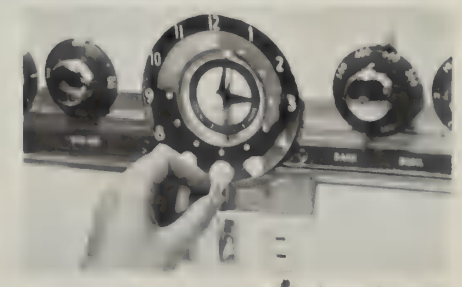
And no wonder! Just see what it does for you!

ep-well with a magic elevator! When you the handy deep-well, the fourth heating automatically comes up with it! You don't down" for it or wait for it to cool to have xtra surface unit! This versatile deep-well has a rack, a pudding pan and a deep-ry basket!

Gleaming-white oven—easiest-to-clean in the world! Rounded corners, removable racks and rack-guides give a surface as easy to clean as the inside of a mixing bowl! Bakes so evenly—no need to shift food from one rack to another! Has a handy-height, full-power broiler, too! (Blue oven available if desired.)





Here's a warming drawer to "warm a lady's heart"! Thermostat-controlled—just like an oven! No more worry about everything being done at the same time! If one dish is ready before the others, you can still serve them all piping hot! And it's big enough for dishes, platters and the food!

ning-fast, heating units! In a mere matter econds these speed-packed units become ot! Each gives you seven speeds controlled ne simple dial! Certain dial-settings heat the center coils for small pans. Saves elec-ty! And, these units clean themselves ou cook!

Just the lamp you've waited for! When you want to see "what's cooking", you slide this handy fluorescent lamp up . . . when through cooking, slide it down, where it blends beautifully with the modern lines of the range! It adjusts with fingertip pressure . . . and stays in any position!

It works while you relax! Set the beautiful automatic control dial. Oven turns on, turns off, all automatically!

For full-color, descriptive folder, see your dealer or write

PERFECTION STOVE COMPANY
7176-A Platt Avenue, Cleveland 4, Ohio
One of the world's oldest and largest range manufacturers

GAS OIL ELECTRIC

TWIN SPAM BAKE ...no frills, just good eating

EASY RECIPE... Place juicy, tender SPAM in shallow baking dish. Coat with sauce mixed as follows: ⅔ cup brown sugar, 2 tsp. prepared mustard, 2 tsp. water, 1 tsp. vinegar. Or merely pour on ⅔ cup fruit juice—peach, pineapple, prune. Bake 20 min. at 350°; baste twice. Serve vegetables alongside.

SPAM is a registered trademark for a pure pork product, packed only in 12 oz. cans by Geo. A. Hormel & Co., Austin, Minn.

You'll like HORMEL CHILI CON CARNE

THE DIFFERENT CHILI—the kind everybody likes because it's not too hot, not too mild, but just right. Lots of good lean beef . . . plump red beans . . . a rich lively sauce. Double your money back if you don't like Chili the way Hormel makes it. Merely send sales slip with comments to Geo. A. Hormel & Co., Austin, Minn.

Listen to MUSIC WITH THE HORMEL GIRLS — Saturday, CBS — Sunday, ABC

(Continued from Page 158)

words were addressed to me, but his eyes were fixed on Doctor Marvin.

"Would you like to?" Doctor Marvin turned to me. "Because you may if you wish. I think you're in good enough shape to see a few people now."

I suppose if anyone had asked me all those weeks what most I wanted beyond the simple fact of getting well and independent again, I would have said, "To see my friends." Yet now, confronted suddenly with this chance to have a visitor, I was oddly reluctant. But I was being silly. Norma Nugent was an old friend; she and Elliott had lived in the same apartment building with Harlan and me for years in New York.

"All right," I said to Joe, "bring her up."

A couple of moments later Norma appeared, looking springlike in a new blue suit. I introduced her to Doctor Marvin, who was packing up his pneumo equipment.

"You're Mrs. Thompson's first visitor," he told her. "Don't stay too long."

"Her first!" Norma exclaimed. "Oh, no, I won't." She took a few steps into the room, a box of flowers in her hands. "He's awfully nice," she said, looking after the departing doctor. "Your psychiatrist?"

"My what?" I said, voice and eyebrows rising in unison. "Did you say psychiatrist?"

"Yes. Isn't he?"

"Norma"—I was torn between amusement and indignation—"would you mind telling me what you think is wrong with me?"

"Well," Norma said uncertainly, "I thought you had a nervous breakdown. I mean that's what I heard and ——"

I cut in on her. "You mean you heard I'd lost my mind?"

"Oh, no. Just a nervous breakdown."

"Norma," I said, trying to keep the fury out of my voice, "I have not got a nervous breakdown. Doctor Marvin is a lung specialist. I've got tuberculosis!"

Norma showed no sign of fear or recoil. She moved her chair a tiny bit closer. "Tuberculosis?" she repeated. "But why all the mystery?" I almost felt I'd been robbed, she was so matter-of-fact about it.

When she'd gone, I lay very quiet and took stock of my conflicting emotions. A faintly shamed amusement that it had taken this blow to my vanity to blast the truth out of me. Mostly a great sense of relief, the feeling of a burden lifted. I had tuberculosis and I didn't care who knew it.

I had cleared the last barrier between myself and reality. There was no longer any reason why I shouldn't have visitors. It was all right with Doctor Marvin, and if Norma Nugent hadn't been afraid, maybe other people wouldn't be either.

THEY weren't. It was June when they started coming, carefully screened by Miss Rose. Never more than one visit a day and that was very short, fifteen minutes or half an hour. Anyone who excited me unduly didn't get by Miss Rose a second time.

Stella, my secretary, came, with her warm red hair and warmer smile. Ernst Lubitsch, Viola Brothers Shore, Nunnally Johnson; Lewis Gensler, the composer, and Bess, his wife; the Marches, Dick and Dorothy Rodgers and Charles Brackett.

There were others. They came and brought me books and flowers and news and gossip and a sense of coming alive again.

"You know," Doctor Marvin said casually one morning, "I think it's about time you tried walking to the bathroom."

I'll never forget those first halting steps, hanging on the arm of Miss Rose, as I tottered the interminable distance. To walk again, however slowly and shakily, after three weary months! From that time forward I made the trip every day, gaining strength and confidence with every step. And it was then I knew, without a shadow of a doubt, that I was going to get well.

Miss Rose went out of my life as unobtrusively as she had slipped into it. "I've a dozen patients who need her more than I do," Doctor Marvin said. And that was th She stayed a few days longer, rehearsing while I practiced taking my own pulse temperature. Then she packed her neat bl suitcase, bade me a farewell and vanis Meta Reis stepped into my life the after Miss Rose stepped out of it.

Though I didn't need a trained nurse longer, I was still in bed all but a few minu a day, on a highly restricted regimen. Th was still the matter of meals in bed, the exorable glasses of milk, the hundred-a one small but necessary things that must done for an invalid, especially one wh segregated from the rest of the househ and isn't supposed to reach for anything.

DOCTOR MARVIN suggested a practical nu but I was against it. What I wanted, besi the purely mechanical help that was still quired, was a companion whose intere were the same as mine.

Meta had done some writing and a hitch a bookstore, and was just back from a yea New York, where she'd worked for a liter and theatrical agency.

Within a week she was as much a par my life—and the life of the entire ho hold—as if she belonged to the family. (down through the years of her growing f girlhood to womanhood, of love and marr and a successful career as story editor writer's agent, Meta has never quite stop belonging to our family.)

She came in around midmorning ev day and stayed till dinnertime or after. brought me my meals and helped me n tiate the journey to bathroom and back, w letters and made teleph calls. During the aftern rest period, which I had to take flat on back, Meta would shop call for Tommy at sch or drive Mamie and to the park.

> Woman is the fairest work of the Great Author; and the edition being large, no man should be without a copy. —J. GILCHRIST LAWSON.

Those were the tangible things, the obvi things. But it was the intangibles counted, the lift I got from the sense youth and life she brought into my ro My strength increased slowly but surely, with the new strength came new privile

The telephone. When Doctor Marvin stored it to me—within limits, to be sure just sat there looking at it, not know whom to call. I'd lost the habit. (But not long.)

A bath, a real bath. Once a week in the When it was over, wrapped in a terry r until I was blotted dry—you must never yourself with a towel; it uses too much ergy—resting till sufficient strength turned to crawl thankfully back into bed

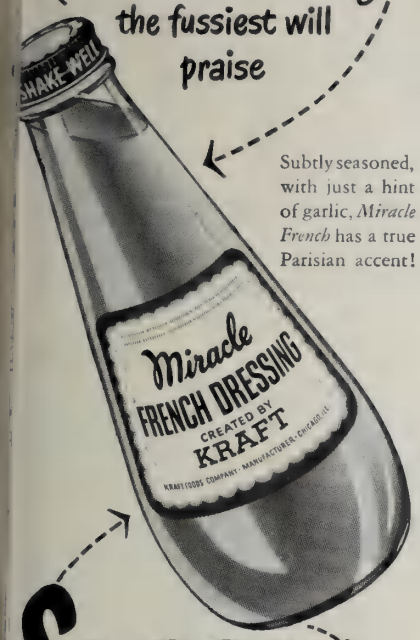
Sitting up, not just in bed. Walking slo a dozen steps to the chaise longue on other side of the room, where for an hou so I'd lie and read. When you've spent most six months lying in bed looking in direction, it's amazing how much del there is in the simple business of lookin the opposite direction.

Guests for dinner. Mostly when pe came they dined downstairs with Harlan visited me briefly afterward. But now then, as a special treat, a bridge table was up in my room and I could join the party remote control.

And so the summer slid by. Little by li my privileges grew. A cup of coffee with breakfast, an occasional glass of wine w dinner, a real shampoo. How grateful I as I got them back, and how soon I t them for granted again.

Labor Day was just around the co when the big break came. I was lying on chaise longue when Doctor Marvin peared, looking exceptionally pleased w life.

"Can you stand some good news?" asked. "I've just had the report on y guinea-pig test, and it's negative."



"Meaning exactly what?"

"Meaning there were no tubercle ba in your sputum."

"And that means I'm not an untoucha any more?"

So easy to Serve French Dressing the fussiest will praise

Subtly seasoned, with just a hint of garlic, Miracle French has a true Parisian accent!

So easy to vary it for special uses, special tastes

Try these 3 Popular Variations

1. For Fruit Salads: To ½ cup Miracle French, add ½ cup canned peach juice. Chill before serving.

2. To ½ cup Miracle French, add 1 tablespoon Chutney. Chill before serving.

3. To ½ cup Miracle French, add 1 clove garlic, chopped fine. Chill before serving.

45th YEAR

HIP-O-LITE
THE ORIGINAL
Marshmallow Creme

Adds a Tasty New Touch to These Old Favorites!

Cake Icings—Topping on Sundaes, Fruits, Salads, Gelatines—Candy-Making—In Cocoa and Hot Chocolate — on Crackers, Cookies and Peanut Butter Sandwiches. Ready to use. Keeps fresh indefinitely.

FREE Recipe Book of "Different" Desserts. Write HIP-O-LITE, Dept. L-4, St. Louis, Mo.

Amazing Offer—$40.00 Is Yours for selling only 50 boxes of Christmas Cards. And this can be done in a single day. Free samples. Other leading boxes on approval. Many surprise items. Write today. It costs nothing to try.

FREE SAMPLES PERSONALIZED CHRISTMAS CARDS STATIONERY NAPKINS

CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-37, White Plains, N. Y.

"That's right." He smiled. "As a matte of fact, I've thought so for quite a while You're definitely on the road back. Nex week I want you to come down to the offic for a complete checkup. Meantime you' better practice getting dressed for a litt while every day. Do it slowly, don't ben over. Above all, don't wear anything yo have to put on over your head. I don't wa you to raise your arms."

With Meta's help I spent the next wee carrying out those instructions.

Came the day for my visit to Doctor Ma vin. My first time down the stairs; the el scent was like a trip down a steep mountai side. The drive downtown was like a journe through an alien land. Even Doctor Marv seemed unreal and slightly forbidding, se for the first time away from the safe harb of my room.

When I got home again I tumbled grat fully back into bed, feeling as though never wanted to leave it again. As a matter fact, I didn't for several days, even thou I had come through the examination wi flying colors and Doctor Marvin had e tended my privileges still further. I cou have gone downstairs for dinner, for i stance. But now that I had permission, made excuses to put it off.

"I just don't feel up to it," I told Doct Marvin the next time he came to give me pneumo refill. "I haven't felt up to anythi since that trip to your office. I think it w too much for me."

"No," said Doctor Marvin, smilin "What's too much for you is the prospect returning to normal life. It's an almost evitable reaction. You've been a long time this room. You hated it at first, but th you yielded to it. And now you cling to As long as you stay here, legitimately, you protected. Every step you take from now is a step away from that protection, naturally you try to prolong that stay much as you can."

He was right, as usual. The momen heard his words I recognized their tru So I started moving back toward active l Slowly, carefully, always balancing the d ger of overtaxing my strength against opposing danger of retreating into limbo

There was the night when I first w downstairs for dinner, and the day I took first walk around the block with Meta. The day I drove to school to call Tommy. . . . The day that Eric, taking first unaided steps, tottered eccentrically full length of his room and wound up in arms. . . . The quiet, happy week end w Harlan at the Genslers' beach house . . . ting an idea for a story and starting, w Meta's help, to put it down. Almost wi out realizing it, I was living again.

And somehow or other it was Christm What a wonderful Christmas, downstairs whole day without getting the least tired. Well and strong with my family arou me, the whole ordeal like a dream, and even, in retrospect, like too bad a drea And then New Year's, celebrated quie at home, just Harlan and Meta and me.

And then it was time for her to leave She'd been offered a job and it was only ri that she should take it. Besides, I was j about ready to stand on my own feet.

We spent one final week together, M and I, at the B-Bar-H ranch near Pa Springs. We soaked up the balmy desert and screened ourselves carefully from brilliant desert sun. Meta because she dic like it, I because Doctor Marvin had war me against it.

"Contrary to the popular belief," he sa "direct exposure to the sun is not good pulmonary tuberculosis, in any stage of development or cure. For the bones a joints, yes, within limits; for the ch definitely no. Strong sun is capable of activating the disease, and at its best tributes nothing to your well-being."

His word was law with me. That's why his office a few weeks later, I sat with b breath waiting for him to answer a quest Could I go back to work? The subject come up suddenly. My boss at Paramo Harold Hurley, had decided to do a seri

Damask Rose* sings the lead in a melody of color

Theme-song of a happy marriage "We love each other . . . we love our home and each of its dear familiar treasures"—all this your beautiful Heirloom* Sterling says for you. Let its soft-shining grace carry a glow of welcome to every meal—for constant use will only make this solid silver richer in beauty, richer in family tradition. Ask your jeweler to show you Heirloom Sterling's three greatly loved, young-spirited patterns . . . famous for their freshness, originality. Start your Heirloom Sterling with two place-settings, if you like, and add more later—on easy terms.

6-piece place setting $24.75 fed. tax included

*Trade Mark. © 1950, Oneida Ltd., Oneida, N.Y.

Are you always Lovely to Love?

Suddenly, breathtakingly, you'll be embraced . . . held . . . kissed. Perhaps tonight.

Be sure that you are always lovely to love; charming and alluring. Your deodorant may make the difference. That's why so many lovely girls depend on FRESH Cream Deodorant. Test FRESH against any other deodorant—see which stops perspiration . . . prevents odor better! FRESH is different from any deodorant you have ever tried—creamier, more luxurious, and really effective!

For head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap . . . prevents body perspiration yet mild and gentle . . . contains amazing new soap ingredient Hexachlorophene (G-11), reported in Reader's Digest.

(Continued from Page 162)

was nothing in the world but my head, clamped tight in a circle of steel. I'd never had a pain like that before.

It was Tuesday when things got really bad. By Friday nothing had changed. No new symptoms had developed, but the old ones persisted with relentless fury. On Friday night Sam and Doctor Marvin came in together. They'd discarded the flu theory. But it wasn't my lung flaring up again, because the X-ray films had shown absolutely nothing. On the other hand, the laboratory report showed a high white count, which meant there was something toxic in my system.

"Isn't there anything else you can tell us?" Doctor Marvin urged. "Something that might give us a lead? Think."

I thought. Yes, there was something else. Slowly it came back to me, the awareness of that other pain I'd sensed dimly Tuesday morning but hadn't been able to localize. It was still there somewhere, all but drowned out by the violent torment in my head.

"It hurts down here," I told them, sitting up stiffly and putting my hand on my right hip, just below the waistline. "It's only a little pain, though; I don't suppose it could mean anything."

They asked more questions and prodded my back by turns.

"There's some tenderness there, all right," Sam said. "I think you might have picked up a slight kidney infection."

First they called a kidney specialist and made arrangements for him to explore that possibility. It would be something called a cystoscopy, they told me. Then they called the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital and engaged a room.

"Just for a day or so," Sam said, "till we see what it's all about." Then he gave me a shot of something that put me to sleep.

A torn jacket is soon mended, but hard words bruise the heart of a child.
—LONGFELLOW.

It was well after noon when the ambulance came. Harlan sat beside me, holding my hand all through the long screaming ride downtown. My head still ached, but there'd been a new shot, dulling the razor edge of pain. And something was happening, that was the main thing. Besides, riding in an ambulance was an adventure.

"This is fun," I mumbled to Harlan through stiff lips as the siren wailed and warned the traffic to one side.

That's all I remember until I swam foggily up from way down somewhere and found myself lying on a table looking up at the three witches in Macbeth. Their images wavered and after a while turned into Sam Hirschfeld, Doctor Marvin and the man with the cystoscope. I could tell from their eyes and the tone of their voices that there was trouble and I was in it.

LATER, in the maple-and-chintz room that tried so hard not to look like a hospital room, I found out why. There was absolutely nothing wrong with my kidneys.

"You mean we're right back where we started from?" I asked bitterly. "You still don't know what's wrong with me?"

Doctor Marvin shook his head. "That's it," he said. "In the morning we'll try another X ray."

The night nurse, a trim, tiny girl named Schulz, with straight yellow hair under her stiff cap, gave me something to make me sleep, though she didn't approve of sedatives, she told me. "People are too dependent. In the long run it makes them weak."

I started to answer her, and then it was morning again and the pain in my head was as savage as ever, but there was one change. The pain in my back was stronger, it had begun to move. I could feel it creeping like a slow fire up my body as though it had a rendezvous with the pain in my head. Strangely, I welcomed it—one fire puts out another fire's burning, and it gave me a little hope. Maybe the X ray would show something after all.

It did. A cloud no bigger than a man's hand had formed in my chest, on the right side, the good side. It had started very l which accounted for the pain in my b and its failure to show up on the first X r Its official name was pleural effusion.

"It's one form of pleurisy," Doctor M vin explained. "The familiar kind in reve That kind occurs when the two pleural w rub together for lack of moisture and ca friction. What you've got occurs when fl collects between the two walls and fo them apart. Laymen call it wet pleuris

"How did I get it?" I asked. "What d do that was wrong?"

"Nothing. It just happened sponta ously."

"Is it serious?"

HE weighed his reply. "Anything t produces this much fever is serious, but necessarily dangerous. We'll keep you h where we can watch you and give you ev help."

"How long will it last?"

"I can't tell you exactly," he said, " til the fluid starts to recede. I could dra off, but I'd rather not; it might lead complications, and every time you punc the pleura there's a chance of infection al the needle tract. You'll be pretty misera for a few days. But it's much safer. W do you say?"

"I say whatever you say," I told h "Only please can't you do something ab my head? Cut it off, or something. It's b doctor, very bad."

He said he'd do something about that went outside with the nurse. When he c back Harlan was with him, white and dra The New York office had called. T wanted him there and t wanted him right aw

"Don't look so trag I said. "It's no fun aro here anyhow."

"I can't leave you this," he protested.

The nurse came in pushed a needle into arm. I made a mighty effort to talk norma while I still could. "You can't help me staying. Doctor Marvin, tell him to go.

"You can go," Doctor Marvin s "She's not in any danger. It's simply a m ter of riding this thing out."

"Please go, darling. Please." The dropped down a very deep well and wh came back it was night and Harlan was g

After that there was nothing but pain confusion and terror; needles in my arm the steel hoop tightening around my h I lost track of everything.

It was twelve days from the time I ente the hospital to the time Doctor Marvin on the edge of my bed and told me t everything was going to be all right. Tw days of the fluid in my chest rising spreading and pushing inexorably against heart, twelve days in which Doctor Mar against some pretty strenuous opposi from other members of the hospital st clung to his resolve not to tap unless th was no alternative.

And then at the eleventh hour—virtu at the fifty-ninth second, when it looked though there was no alternative—his ju ment was vindicated. The fluid reached peak, stood still for a few moments slowly began to subside.

They kept me in the hospital another days, while the fluid continued to subs The process was slow. During those ten d the intravenous drip and I grew as close a pair of Siamese twins. The fever burned, though not quite so wildly, and t had to keep feeding water and salt back i my dehydrated body. What with the d and the opiates and the shots of vitamins make up for what I wasn't eating, and shots of something else to restore someth else, there was hardly an inch on my arm t wasn't black and blue. It was a long ti before I could face a hypodermic nee without a big internal crisis.

When the fever in my veins had simme down to a steady 100, and the pain was li more than a dull remembered echo in head, they took me home, and the l

(Continued on Page 167)

everything you ever wanted to slim you

...trim you

...and give you a lovely line

you'll breathe easier, look lovelier, feel more satisfied with yourself... once you're under the influence of these marvelous new Jantzen breathing-toppers... these rib-trimming, waist-slimming, hip-spindling girdles and panty-girdles that begin several inches above the waistline to put you in wonderful shape for your new fall clothes. They're in light-as-air elasticized nylon Leno or net... with light, supple boning knit right in the nylon top... the only top made with knit-in breathe-easy boning! Have it in Talon-fastened or step-in styles with two-and-one-half or three-and-one-half inch tops... 7.50 to 10.95... at most stores.

P. S. Jantzen has the most wonderful new bras... with concentric-stitched cups... all with forever uplift... 2.00 to 5.00.

Jantzen
truly marvelous figure-fixers by the makers of Jantzen swim suits

JANTZEN FOUNDATIONS, EMPIRE STATE BUILDING, NEW YORK

Wake Up to — America's Best-Loved Pancakes

Let your fork sink lightly into a stack of golden Aunt Jemimas, running with butter and dripping with syrup. See for yourself how really light and tender pancakes can be! Your first fluffy fork-full will tell you why women all over America vote Aunt Jemimas "Lightest Pancakes you can bake!"

See for yourself why...

More Women Prefer

AUNT JEMIMAS

than all other brands combined!

Get both kinds! The red box for Pancakes —the yellow box for Buckwheats. Both kinds for crisp, delicious waffles.

Quaker Oats helps grow "STARS OF THE FUTURE"

Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! They say that because a recent survey shows only 1 school child in 5 gets enough breakfast.

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition! Nourishing Quaker Oats helps grow "Stars of the Future." Your child gets more growth, more energy from oatmeal than from any other whole-grain cereal!

A GIANT in Value! Penny for penny, oatmeal is the richest source of all leading types of cereals in 4 vital food elements: Protein, Vitamin B_1, Food-Energy, and Food-Iron.

A GIANT in Flavor! Quaker Oats is the most popular cereal in the world because PEOPLE LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR!

Quaker and Mother's Oats are the same

Tomorrow morning serve hot

QUAKER OATS

Less than 1¢ a serving!

(Continued from Page 164)

eary trek across the wilderness started over ain.

A month from the day I came home from e studio with what I thought was the flu, I me home from the hospital with the ves- ges of the pleural effusion. And a nurse, out whom I remember nothing. Until the st of the fluid disappeared from my chest, e nurse remained and I was back on the l twenty-four-hours-a-day-in-bed routine. iat lasted six weeks. For three of those eks the fever kept burning, though with adually diminishing intensity. Doctor arvin came every day until the thermom- er finally dropped to normal and stayed ere.

What I remember most about the first few eks at home is waking up in a pool of ıter every morning just before dawn as the ver began to break. Then the nurse would b me with alcohol and wrap me in a cot- n blanket and I'd go back to sleep again. slept a great deal in the daytime too. But wasn't a good sleep, and I'd wake up enched and shaking from some fearful remembered dream.

There wasn't too much difference between eping and waking. More than six weeks of steady high fever can do a pretty thorough ecking job. I was completely burned out, ysically and mentally both, weak and list- s in a large and empty world.

Only one thing had the power to rouse me m that apathy. That was Harlan's re- rn from New York.

It was only a few days after I came home m the hospital that I got the news. It was ound dusk one evening. I heard the door- ll ring and Mamie came in and handed me telegram. It was from Albuquerque, ned Harlan, and it said Arrive on Chief ht tomorrow love. For the first time since tting home from the hospital I felt a spark hope, a connection with life.

Harlan arrived in the morning, and all that y I felt gay and strong. I was full of vi- lity and plans. Now that he was with me again it would only be a matter of days be- fore I was up and around, ready to work and play and be a normal human being. I was sure of it, and for that little while I think I made Harlan sure of it too.

But it wasn't true. The vitality was only a spurt, the strength an illusion. And that healthy glow I'd managed to produce for his arrival quickly faded.

Harlan went back to the studio and soon was caught up in the web of his work. And I crawled back down into my crater, weaker and more apathetic than ever.

The fever subsided, the fluid disappeared, the nurse left, the doctor reduced his visits and still I felt no better. April moved wearily into May and May crept into June, and still no sign of returning strength. By mid-June I was wandering around the house, looking, feeling and acting like a lost soul.

It was the house, I suddenly decided, that was to blame for it all. I had never been sick a day in my life, I pointed out to Harlan, until we moved into that house. And hadn't he had pneumonia there? And hadn't Tommy had the whooping cough? We must get out, find a new place to live.

And meantime we must spend the summer at the beach. Only get me to the beach and I'd be all right. Harlan assented, and Doctor Marvin agreed that the change would be a good idea.

The idea, as it turned out, could hardly have been worse. The beach house was expensive, inconvenient and ugly. The tide was so high that the waves threatened to roll up on the front porch or else so low that the beach was a sodden mass of seaweed and wreckage. The children, who up to that summer had been charming little fellows, suddenly turned into veritable demons.

Harlan's work was exceptionally heavy and kept him at the studio late several times a week, leaving me to my own dreary devices a good many evenings as well as every day. To add to the emptiness, I wasn't allowed to swim, and sun bathing was still strictly taboo. Not that it mattered; my

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

LESSON from my child: "I don't think we should question it, mother. So often he things which sound true aren't, and the hings which sound perfectly fantastic are."

Twelve-year-old to her mother: "You ıave quite a few black hairs, haven't you, nommy?"

It is much easier to give a dog away to a amily living in an old house than to one n a new.

For the sake of history, there ought to ɔe one person in every family who lives in he past.

It's amazing how members of a large amily develop a real liking for the remote ɔarts of a chicken.

When a husband stops complaining and ı dog begins, they're both on the way to ecovery.

A parent cannot catch up with an ado- escent's flights of fancy any more than a log can catch up with a clutter of butter- lies.

An old, old lady tells her blessings: "I ıave six hens, all laying, the best garden ever, and the cream on my little cow's milk s thick as a leather apron."

Owning a dishwasher accomplishes one thing: it gives the children a clear con- science when leaving mother with the dishes.

Girls should be taught that lack of for- mality may be mistaken for lack of morality.

It must come as a shock to most mothers when, after struggling years to civilize a son, a little five-foot girl with a sweet face tames him in a week.

Wisdom from a colored lady: "Yo' ain't no better'n yo' feet."

When told there was a lightning bug in her hair, a young girl beamed. "Oh, I wondered where he was! I brought him in with me two nights ago and he just dis- appeared."

Children enjoy buffet suppers because they're never corrected for putting elbows on the table.

With mingled emotions we checked the contents, plus and minus, of our son's duffel bag, packed for camp. It contained:

Football Rule Book
The Connecticut Yankee
The Death Wish
The Rustler's Gap
1 pair of socks
(No pajamas)
(No toothbrush)
(No underpants)
2 shirts
Father Flanagan of Boy's Town
2 cowboy hats
New Testament

And—his father and I held each other up—a bar of soap.

"My Caloric showed me NEW SPEED AND COOKING EASE"

"Every feature gives me new joy in cooking," writes one Pennsylvania housewife.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

And thousands of other letters from Caloric owners enthusiastically agree that a Caloric is easier to cook on. From the apartment size "Compacto" to the big 2-oven, 2-broiler model, Caloric Ranges are also recognized the country over as America's Easiest Ranges to Keep Clean.

Compare Caloric with any other range for value and you'll wholeheartedly agree that Caloric gives more for your money. See dealers under "Caloric" in classified phone books. Caloric Stove Corporation, Widener Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

A Wonderful Baker

Pies, cakes and cookies turn out just right in the Caloric Hold-Heat Oven. Exclusive Seal assures cooler kitchen.

Sturdier Construction

That solid "feel" and fit of doors, and seamless design prove superior workmanship. One-piece front frame.

Easier to Clean

Porcelain enamel inside and out. Many exclusive easy-clean features. Broiler washes like a dish in your sink.

Flavor-Saver Dual Burners

Speed cooking, save gas, protect flavor. Replacement guaranteed for life of range.

Any Caloric model can be factory-equipped for "Pyrofax" Bottled Gas or other LP-Gases. "CP" features optional on all models give automatic cooking.

Ultramatic Caloric Gas Ranges recollection is that there weren't half a dozen days that whole summer when the sun broke through the gray enveloping fog.

It was a hopeless, despairing summer. Nothing like it has ever happened to me, before or since. It was infinitely worse for me (and for those around me) than the original siege of tuberculosis the year before.

This time there was no hope in me, no fight. I was haunted by the fear of dragging out the rest of my life as a semi-invalid.

Somehow the summer wore itself away. It was almost over; we were getting ready to return to town. There were tasks for me to do, simple easy tasks like getting my things laid out so Ethel could pack them. I can remember wandering aimlessly around the room, picking things up and putting them down again, moving to and fro in a meaningless rhythm. Suddenly, from out of nowhere I saw a face, a woman's face with hollow cheeks framed in long dark straggling hair, staring at me frighteningly out of haggard eyes. It could have been the face of Lady Macbeth in the sleepwalking scene. Or the face of the Charles Addams woman in The New Yorker. But it was only my face staring at me in the mirror. I stood and studied my grim reflection for a long, long time. Then, with a hopeless shrug, I dropped down on the bed and buried my face in the pillow.

That's when I heard the voice outside. It was Mamie's voice and she was calling Eric. The cry rose to a scream that propelled me out of my private hell, off the bed and over to the window that looked out on the sea.

The tide was coming in, the water line was only a few feet from the house. On the crest of a wave, a long outgoing roller, I could see a tiny sailboat bobbing up and down. And following after, small arms outstretched, completely unaware of danger, seeing nothing but the fast receding toy, skipped Eric on his twinkling little legs.

For a single instant I stood there frozen, knowing that with the next incoming wave he must surely go down. And that's all I knew until I found myself standing knee deep in the surf, the long robe twisted around my legs, the outraged baby struggling in my arms. He wasn't frightened—there hadn't been time for that—only furious over losing the sailboat. But I was shaking with delayed panic and Mamie, a step or two behind, was almost faint with the aftermath of fear.

I SUPPOSE the whole incident didn't consume more than five minutes. Certainly from the moment I ran to the window and saw him pursuing the vanishing sailboat to the moment I scooped him up in my arms, the second hand couldn't have traveled more than once around the clock. But in those sixty seconds my whole life changed again. One minute I was weak, listless, through; trapped in a hopeless paralysis of the will. The next, obeying automatically one of the strongest instincts of nature, I was restored to life and the power to act.

Actually it didn't all happen in that one revolution around the clock. I'm sure now that all that dreary summer, while I moped and brooded, my spent strength was slowly filtering back. It took that sudden sight of danger to jolt me out of my self-pitying apathy.

For the second time that day I stood before the mirror and studied my reflection. Critically, this time, with an eye to the future. I had to admit Hedy Lamarr had noth ing to fear. Still, there was a gleam of hope. didn't look like the Charles Addams woma any more, or Lady Macbeth. Only like spaniel who's been out in the rain. Every thing about me drooped—figure, face, eye hair. Most of all hair. Purposefully I picke up the telephone and dialed Elizabeth Arde

At seven o'clock in the morning of a brig October day a few weeks later, I sat up in b in a compartment of the Twentieth Ce tury Limited and looked out on the autumn glory of the Hudson River Valley.

FROM the morning I'd fished Eric out the waves, and so recovered my will to liv until the morning I found myself approac ing New York with a high singing hear everything had moved with perfect smooth ness. The new hair style and the new fall su I acquired that day were symbols of a who new outlook on life. My next move was a vis to the studio to surprise Harlan with m metamorphosis. From Harlan's office it w just a few steps down the hall to the office my boss, Harold Hurley. There would nev be a better time to ask when I could con back to work.

"You can con back whenever yo bring me a note fro the doctor," he sai "Only be sure th time. I can't hav you getting sic again. People w think I'm Simo Legree."

It was on the wa to Doctor Marvin office next day th the New York ide hit me. A sudde wave of homesic ness swept over m a longing for th city so intense was like a thro bing, wonderf pain. I must home. Before I we back to work, b fore I picked up th normal pattern my family life must go home.

But first I mu get Doctor Marv on record. I waite patiently while put me through the works. He tapped ar prodded and fluoroscoped and X-rayed.

"As far as I can see," Doctor Marvin sai "you're very well."

"Well enough to go back to work?"

"Yes, if you don't overdo it."

"Well enough for a trip to New York?"

"I don't know why not."

Naturally, he went on, I'd have to take easy. Spend the mornings in bed. Don crowd the days. And be home by midnigh Every night.

"That's an absolute must," he said. "An oh yes, stay in bed as much as possible on th train."

"I think I'll fly."

But Doctor Marvin shook his head. "Fl ing is out," he said. "People with activ pneumothorax can't fly. You see, the air put in at sea-level pressure. It would expan at flying altitude and crowd the lung. would be very uncomfortable, and might b dangerous."

I didn't argue. My memory of a crowde lung was still far too vivid.

"You'll need a pneumo refill while you' away," Doctor Marvin continued. "I kno a good man in New York." He scribbled name and address on a prescription blan "I'll write him to expect a call from yo When are you planning to leave?"

"As soon as possible after Harlan's birth day." That was late in September.

And now it was early October. Those fir weeks in New York were deliriously happ The weather was perfect, bright sun an winy air.

NEXT MONTH

"You're only the groom's mother," they told her: but, "There couldn't be a wedding without the groom," Martha said, "and there couldn't be the groom without me."

THE real mother of a real groom tells the story of her fears and anxieties, and of her great happiness, during the preparations for her son's marriage and on the wedding day itself. On this day of all days mothers' hearts turn to their children. It is a day of "joining together," and a day of parting too. Martha learned that parting has a special meaning for women with understanding hearts.

Mother of the Groom

By Harriet Fitts Ryan

in the December JOURNAL

Do the job with a Q-Tips® Swab!

THE BIGGEST LITTLE ITEM IN THE MEDICINE CHEST

It's made easier with Q-Tips in 101 different ways. They're handy applicators with soft, sterilized cotton anchored securely at both ends. No more fussing with annoying, make-shift swabs that become loose and messy. Reach for handy, sterilized Q-Tips.

For Q to Hygienic Care

To remove wax from ears, for nose and eye hygiene, there's nothing as safe as Q-Tips. Ideal also to apply antiseptics or prescribed preparations. And use Tips in the care of pets.

For Q to Neater Make-up

Tips are indispensable as aids to beauty. Use to clean up smeared mascara, to remove excess lipstick and powder, for putting up curls. Wonderful for manicures, pedicures and for hair bleaching.

Q-Tips for baby care...for general home use

29¢, 49¢, and 98¢ pkg.

Q-TIPS®

for years the largest-selling sterilized swabs

Q-TIPS INC., LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.

[redacted] to discourage

NAIL BITING and THUMB SUCKING

IN PROLONGED AND PERSISTENT CASES

USE THUM TRADE MARK

50¢

AT LEADING DRUG COUNTERS

With friends, I lived high up in a tall building looking out across Central Park. It was a very quiet time, just as the doctor had ordered, a time of moderation; the only immoderate thing was my happiness.

I don't suppose I did a single thing that October that I hadn't done a hundred times before. But everything was fresh and new and shining with a special radiance. The simplest act was filled with wonder, because I had given all this up for lost and now I had found it again. I felt as if I owned the world.

But I wouldn't keep on feeling that way if I didn't get my pneumo refill. And so, one crisp afternoon, I stepped out of the brilliant, sunlit air of Madison Avenue into the office of Dr. James Auerbach, specialist in diseases of the chest.

A handsome, silver-haired man, he not only knew my whole history without asking questions, but he also knew most of the people I knew in Hollywood. He was a wizard with the pneumo needle, and almost before I knew it the job was done painlessly.

"When you're dressed," he said, walking toward the surgery door, "step into my office for a moment. I'd like to tell you a story I think would make a great movie."

Humming a little, I slipped into my clothes. It was wonderful having the pneumo behind me; it always made me feel so free and light.

I PICKED up my bag and floated into Doctor Auerbach's office. Behind his leather-topped desk he was listening to someone on the telephone and making notes.

"Sit down," he said, waving me into the chair facing him, "this won't take long."

The doctor was still listening, making an occasional reassuring sound.

My eyes dropped to the letter lying on the desk. It was facing away from me, of course, but it was easy to read the name of the letterhead. DR. HENRY H. MARVIN. I could even make out the typing. A minor accomplishment, dating back to my newspaper days (when it was very useful) is upside-down reading. I do it automatically. Half the time I don't even know I'm doing it. The letter was about me, a one-page history of my case. Almost without my realizing it, my gaze traveled down the page.

"That's right, Mrs. Davis," Doctor Auerbach was saying. "Good-by." He hung up the receiver just as my eyes reached the postscript. It stood out from the rest of the page as if written in letters of fire.

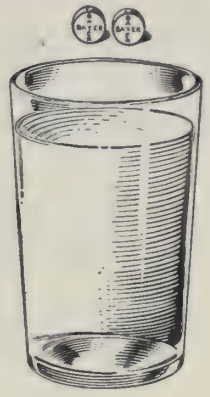
"IN VIEW OF THE UNUSUAL NATURE OF THE PLEURAL EFFUSION, THE ULTIMATE PROGNOSIS IS QUESTIONABLE."

PROGNOSIS QUESTIONABLE!

If this were a movie it would be easy to convey what happened to me in the next few minutes. There is a screen technique for the simultaneous transmission of overt action and secret thought. First there'd be a close-up of my eyes, staring in dawning recognition; then a big insert of the letter, upside down the way I saw it, and then so the audience could read it.

The doctor would be talking in a steady drone, and on the off-screen sound track the words, "prognosis questionable, prognosis questionable," and then one final close shot of my eyes, wide with understanding and filled with a new resolve.

That's the way it could be done in a movie. In fact, that's the way it had just been done in a movie: Dark Victory, it was, with Bette Davis. Only that girl had a brain tumor, and the fateful words she read in the doctor's office were "prognosis unfavorable," an absolute sentence of death.



I'd seen the picture only a short time before. And now here I was, in the same sob-story situation. Well, not precisely the same. Still, the parallel was close enough.

I asked myself, slipping out of Doctor Auerbach's office without letting him know what I'd seen, Why go on obeying a lot of schoolgirl rules? I'd been doing that for months: I'd been good, submissive, acquiescent, and for what? Pleurisy, pain and now prognosis questionable.

Well, from now on, I told myself, I'd go back to my own rules. And the first thing I'd Here's What You Need For A Cold—To Make You Feel Better, Fast!

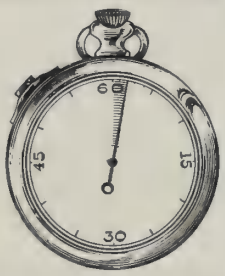
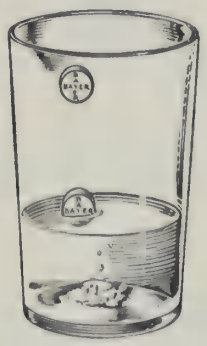
RIGHT TODAY, DOCTORS THE COUNTRY OVER will tell you that of all cold treatments, the simplest and one of the most effective is "aspirin and as much rest as possible."



You need this treatment because it's important to you that you get relief from the headachy, feverish feeling—and the muscular aches and pains—that almost always accompany a cold. And BAYER ASPIRIN gives you this important relief. That's why it should be taken at the first sign of a cold—before you do anything else.

Regardless of what you do to stop or shorten a cold, we believe that your own doctor will tell you that this is sound advice.

FEEL BETTER FAST



And it's advice you can follow with complete confidence. For BAYER ASPIRIN is the medication used by millions of men and women to treat these distressing symptoms. One reason BAYER ASPIRIN provides the amazingly fast relief you want is that it's actually ready to go to work in two seconds to make you feel better, fast.

You can see this two-second speed with your own eyes by dropping a BAYER ASPIRIN tablet in a glass of water and watching how fast it disintegrates.

WHAT TO DO FOR SORE THROAT

Gargling with three BAYER ASPIRIN tablets dissolved in one-third of a glass of water will bring you remarkably quick relief from sore throats due to colds. Using BAYER ASPIRIN this way makes a highly potent medicinal gargle that almost instantly soothes tender throat membranes, relieves pain and irritation.

In addition to being highly effective, BAYER ASPIRIN is also wonderfully gentle. Its single active ingredient is so gentle to the system doctors regularly prescribe it even for small children.

Get BAYER ASPIRIN today. When you buy, ask for it by its full name—Bayer Aspirin—not just for "aspirin" alone.

For Your Youngsters: Children's Size BAYER ASPIRIN

Children's Size Bayer Aspirin tablets are the same genuine Bayer Aspirin you take, but contain only half the amount of the regular size tablets. Each of these Children's Size Tablets is full dosage—the "half an aspirin" doctors usually prescribe for children. Uncolored and unflavored, Children's Size Bayer Aspirin tablets cannot be mistaken for candy. 30 tablets only 25¢.

One thing you can take with complete confidence is genuine

BAYER ASPIRIN

No other pain reliever can match its record of use by millions of normal people, without ill effect.

The Best Cooks Use Stokely's Finest Foods

Mrs. Irene L. Dout, 15760 Whitcomb, Detroit, chosen by Veterans of Foreign Wars, Auxiliary 1519

VOTED "BEST COOK"

A veteran cook like Mrs. Dout will tell you fresher, finer vegetables never came out of a garden than come out of cans labeled Stokely's Finest. Real blue-ribbon corn . . . plump, perfect, golden kernels. Tender, young green beans picked and canned while they're snapping-fresh. That's what you get when you get Stokely's Finest. Enjoy them both, in good old-fashioned dishes like:

HARVEST SUCCOTASH — Melt 3 tbsp. bacon fat; blend in 2 tbsp. flour, ½ tsp. salt, ⅛ tsp. pepper. Stir in ½ c. liquid from No. 2 can Stokely's Finest Cut Green Beans or No. 303 can Golden Whole Kernel Corn. Boil and stir 2 min.; add ½ c. cream or evaporated milk. Add drained beans and corn; heat. 8 servings.

do was cut out that twelve-o'clock curfew. The week that followed is pretty much a blur in my mind, a blur of excitement and parties and theaters and people, of greedily cramming in everything I could to make up for all the fun I'd missed. I do remember a flying trip to New Haven to see the opening of The Boys From Syracuse. That was on a Thursday. I was leaving New York Friday at midnight.

"You're supposed to take it easy," a friend admonished me when we got back from New Haven and I started off to keep a final lunch date.

I assured her blithely, "I'm fine. Never felt better in my life."

It was true. I felt happy, released, free. As if the discovery in Doctor Auerbach's office had lifted a great burden. It wasn't up to me any more. No matter what I did or didn't do, the prognosis was still questionable. I began to fall in love with that phrase. I played with the idea of telling my friend about it, but decided not to. It would only worry her. Besides, she might feel she ought to tell Harlan, and I didn't want him to know.

Or did he know? I began to wonder when I settled down on the westbound Chief at the end of that hectic week. Had Doctor Marvin told him? Was that why there'd been so little opposition to my New York trip? Since the outcome was doubtful anyway, were they letting me have one final fling?

The ironic thing was, I thought as the train pulled into Los Angeles, I'd never be able to find out. Because to find out I'd have to confess to that most shameful of misdemeanors, reading another person's mail.

I decided to keep my own counsel, and never refer to prognosis questionable directly or obliquely, either to Harlan or the doctor. In fact, to banish it from my thoughts and let nature take its course.

> If there is no wind, row.
> —POLISH PROVERB.

So I picked up my life where I had put it down almost two years before. Oh, I paid lip service to caution, and a few of the little physical good habits clung, like not bending over or reaching up, and never standing if I could lie down. But before long I was back on the old merry-go-round, and if the phrase "prognosis questionable" flitted across my mind, as occasionally it did, I waved it quickly away. In the absence of clear and present danger, a sense of active fear is a hard thing to sustain.

And there was so much to do. Everything people asked of you was so urgent, how could you refuse? And Tommy and Eric were growing older, becoming people. They needed more of my time and attention. I thought working at home might solve that, and by a coincidence Paramount was having an economy wave, so we parted by mutual consent and I went back to writing short stories. One of them led to a radio series, and soon I found that in radio the hours were longer and the tensions far greater than they had ever been at the studio. But I loved it; it was like working on a newspaper again.

And the thing was, the bad thing was, I gave every evidence of thriving on it. I was still going to Doctor Marvin every three weeks for pneumo refills and every three months for a complete checkup.

I didn't like going to him now; the relationship, on my side anyway, was never the same after I came back from New York. Seeing him filled me with vague feelings of resentment and guilt. Resentment because he had kept the truth from me, and guilt because I'd found it out anyway, and was keeping my knowledge from him.

I didn't like going to him now, but I went just the same. I needed the reassurance those visits brought me. And they were reassuring. My weight stayed up, I didn't cough, pulse and temperature were normal. And the scar on my left lung was fading steadily.

"It's quite remarkable," Doctor Marvin said one day, pointing to a tiny spot on my X-ray plate. "If I didn't know exactly where that scar was, I'd have a hard time locating it."

"Well, then," I asked on sudden impu "why do I have to keep on taking pneum

"You don't absolutely have to," he s "but I'd like you to continue for a wh With the active life you're leading, it's extra safeguard. You're doing so well. W push your luck?"

I didn't answer. I was thinking how I'd ways hated that pneumo, forgetting much it had helped me, recalling only dreaded needle and what it symbolized. long as the pneumo continued I'd be lik released convict, out of jail but not re free, obliged to report regularly to a pa officer.

"As a matter of fact," the doctor said, ting in on my thoughts, "the chances ar will stop spontaneously before very long.

"The pneumo? How can that happen?

"Sooner or later the lung and chest grow together and you lose the space. that's the end of the pneumo."

"Is it better to let it stop by itself?"

"It's better for you to keep on havin as long as possible," he said with an ai finality.

So I grumbled and fussed, but I kept going to his office for pneumos. And then day the following spring I went off to P Springs for a week end just before refill t I was due at Doctor Marvin's on a Mon afternoon. But the week end was so plea that I stayed away a couple of extra and didn't keep the appointment Wednesday.

It seemed to me I was on the table for that day. I felt the needle slip into my no less than three times. At last Dr Marvin told me to up.

"Well," he said, uns ing, as I swung into a ting position on the ta "that seems to be t No more pneumo."

My heart contracted in sudden ala "Why not?"

"It's too late," he said. "The space i closed up."

"You think I stayed away those e days on purpose?" I asked defensively.

"You might have," he said. "I'm not e sure it was the two days that did it. Th beside the point. From here on out yo on your own." There was a small pa "That's what you wanted, isn't it?"

It was. Exactly what I wanted. But that I had it, I wasn't so sure.

Time sped by, and the months gallo into years, and "prognosis questionabl faded from my mind, or at least was bu where I couldn't see it. I almost forgot ever been ill at all, and when occasional did remember, it was only to congratu myself. I'd come through all this and at me now—stronger, healthier and bu than ever!

The world plunged headlong down road to disaster and war. We were in it. Harlan was a major in the Signal C and I was on my way to join him.

I called Doctor Marvin to tell him I going, but he wasn't there. He'd gone the service, too, and was on his way overs Harlan was stationed at Astoria, L Island, making training films, and livin a one-room-and-kitchenette apartment East 48th Street. The plan was for me to a house near the post and bring the child on for the duration.

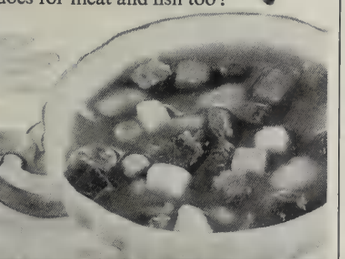
But houses, near the post or anywhere were pretty illusory things. So I settled d for the winter in that living-dining-bed-a dressing-room affair. I rose at six ev morning to be sure the toast was prop burned and Harlan off to the post on tim went to bed at nine or ten because there nowhere else to go and Harlan, working teen hours a day, had to have his sleep.

I felt I should make a direct contribu to the war effort, so I volunteered to do s editorial work for the Writers War Board unofficial propaganda arm of the Gov ment. Exactly what the war effort got ou my daily treks through the snow and slus that bitter winter is highly debatable. W

NDERWOOD

DEVILED HAM



Grand luncheon idea!! Stuffed tomatoes with chopped egg, ayonnaise and UNDERWOOD'S very drop adds zest to

SOUP

an win praises for your meal! So season it well made or canned!) Add ea & Perrins Sauce, before . What tantalizing aroma— avor! You'll like what this does for meat and fish too!

EA & PERRINS

Sauce

IE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

A favorite for over 100 years

EE! Recipe Book. Write Lea & Perrins, Inc., 241 West St., New York 13, Dept. L-11.

Harlan got out of my well-meant but fumbling efforts in his behalf is another item that's open to question.

What I got was a cold in the head. Not much of a cold at first, and I pretended it wasn't there. But it hung on, and presently Harlan began to worry about my chest. I brushed off the very idea. There was absolutely no connection between colds and TB, I assured him. That was a distorted interpretation of something Doctor Marvin had told me while I was ill: that people with TB, or recuperating from it, rarely catch colds, because, being isolated, they aren't much exposed to the mysterious little cold bug.

"Besides," I added, "if you go four years without a relapse, you're safe."

Harlan looked skeptical. "Who says so?"

"Why, it's in all the books."

Time passed and the weather stayed brutal and the cold settled painfully in my sinuses. After a few more weeks, even I had to admit that New York in the dead of a wartime winter was hardly the ideal health resort. So one snowy February day I stepped reluctantly aboard a train for California.

By the time I saw the blue sky above Los Angeles, the reluctance had yielded to relief. And I had a plan, as usual. First I'd get to know the children again. Then I'd spend a few days in the desert at Rancho Yucca Loma. Then, when I'd baked the ache out of my sinuses, I'd go back to Beverly Hills and sell the house. Harlan and I had agreed it was too big and too expensive with him in the Army. I'd find a smaller place and then I'd look for a job.

A one-picture assignment would be the best. By the time I'd finished, it would be summer again. Then I could take the children back to New York and settle down with Harlan till the war was over. It was a very neat plan.

A VERY neat plan indeed. I went to Yucca Loma, filled my soul with peace and quiet, baked the ache out of my sinuses. I unloaded the big house and acquired a small one. And I got a writing assignment at 20th Century-Fox.

It was a great break for me, that assignment. It meant a considerable boost in pay, and because the producer was Nunnally Johnson, it meant an even bigger boost in prestige. All that, and a good story too. After a couple of discussions, Nunnally turned me loose and told me not to come back until I'd finished a treatment. Happily, I went to work, throwing myself into the task with great intensity.

With no Harlan and no Doctor Marvin around to act as brakes, I kept drawing more and more on my physical reserves, until a chance encounter with Sam Hirschfeld brought things to a momentary halt.

"I don't like this at all," Sam said, surveying me with the critical eye of a family physician. "You're too thin, your breathing's shallow, your eyes seem feverish. Come to my office in the morning and let me look you over."

The next morning I was in Doctor Hirschfeld's office. And the morning after that, at his insistence, I was in the office of the lung specialist who had taken over Doctor Marvin's practice for the duration of the war. His name, for the purposes of this record, was Dr. Philip Burr.

"Young lady," he said, indicating a vague blur on the X-ray film that hung from a rack on his wall, "you see that shadow?"

"Which one, doctor?" I asked, bracing myself for the blow. "I never could learn to read an X ray."

"Up there," he said, tapping the film, "at the apex of the right lung."

The right lung. That's where I'd had the pleural effusion. My heart gave one wild plunge and stood still.

"You mean I've got TB again?" At least I wasn't afraid to say it now.

"Not necessarily," Doctor Burr said. "The shadow's so faint it doesn't give me a definite picture. It might be the beginning of a new lesion, though I can't be sure. You have no cough, and your sputum is negative. On the other hand, you are run-down and the shadow is suspicious." He glanced from me

Flako® is not just a top quality pie crust mix but a special combination and blending of ingredients that no other pie crust mix, however fine, has matched

FLAKO PUMPKIN PIE

HOW TO DO IT

Make 9 inch pie shell, using ½ package Flako and 2 tbsp. water (see package). Take 2 cups canned pumpkin, add 2 eggs, ⅔ cup brown sugar, ½ tsp. ginger, ½ tsp. salt, ½ tsp. cinnamon, 1½ cups milk. Pour into unbaked pie shell, and bake at 450° F. until filling is set, about 45 min.

"IT'S FLAKY because IT'S FLAKO"

9 OZS. FULL PACKAGE.

Tender...Crisp

Corn Muffins

Easy! 12 to 18 perfect corn muffins every time. Just add an egg and milk to Flakorn. Makes best waffles and pancakes you ever enjoyed.

FLAKORN®

CORN MUFFIN MIX

Quick...Easy

1-Layer Cake...Cup Cakes

Just add an egg and milk to Cuplets. Get delicious single 9 inch layer or 12 to 18 cup cakes, every time. Get wonderful Upside-Down Cake.

CUPLETS®

CUP CAKE MIX

FLAKO PRODUCTS CORPORATION, NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

to the folder on his desk and back to me again. "With your history, the only safe course is to go to bed for a few weeks."

"Doctor," I said, "you say it only might be a new lesion. Please don't make me go to bed."

He said, "I'm a doctor, not a policeman. I can't clap handcuffs on you and make you go to bed. I can only tell you that's where you belong."

"Doctor," I said, "I can't go to bed just now. I'm in the middle of a job, the best job I've ever had. I've got to finish it before I go to bed."

With an urgency that bordered on hysteria, I pleaded my case. I tried to convey to him how much the story meant to me, how important it was that Harlan be left free to do his war job without the added strain of my problems, financial or emotional.

"I know it's a gamble," I said, "but it's one I have to take. When it's over, if you tell me to go to bed then I'll go, and I'll stay as long as I should. I'll do anything, absolutely anything, just so I can finish the job."

Doctor Burr regarded me sternly. "How long will it take you to finish this story?"

"About six weeks," I estimated.

"Very well," Doctor Burr said, "you can have your deal if you stick to these rules."

He ticked them off on his fingers: No outside activities of any kind. Half an hour's rest, morning and afternoon. Straight home from the studio every day, dinner in bed, lights out early, bed again every week end.

"And once a week you'll come down here for a checkup and X ray."

"I give you my word," I said gratefully.

I stuck faithfully to our agreement. It was a good, sensible life I led, probably the most sensible since I'd stopped having pneumothorax. And it paid off. My weight went up, my temperature went down, and the menacing little shadow on my right lung grew steadily smaller and dimmer. By the end of six weeks—just after I'd turned in my script—the shadow had virtually disappeared. Amazed, almost distrusting the evidence of his own eyes, Doctor Burr put me through a whole gamut of tests. Everything came out negative.

"You see," I exulted, when he gave me the good news, "I told you I'd hold my own."

"You've done better than that," he beamed. "You're in better condition today than you were six weeks ago."

"Well, then, there's no good reason why I should stop working, is there? My outline's been okayed and I have a chance to work on the screen play."

"Go ahead and work, but stick to your present regimen. I'll want to keep an eye on you, at least twice a month for a while."

So I went to work on the screen play, living the good life and reporting to Doctor Burr every other Monday. Harlan, touring the Army posts in connection with his training films, got home for a week toward the end of May and was amazed at the improvement in my health.

It was almost July when I turned in the screen play, which was promptly read and just as promptly shelved. Nunnally Johnson liked it well enough, but he had decided to leave 20th Century-Fox and form a company of his own. None of the other Fox producers seemed inclined to take it over. That disappointed me, naturally, but it didn't surprise me.

What did surprise me was the offer of a new assignment. It was a musical about the Dolly Sisters, those dancing sirens of my youth. A dream job, really. It was one of the most instructive, entertaining and stimulating experiences of my whole life. So stimulating that I never felt tired when the day's work was officially done.

Almost without knowing it, I started staying out to dinner, or bringing people to the house with me. And doing that, how could I refuse to serve a couple of nights a week at the Hollywood Canteen or help the Victory Committee line up material for its overseas entertainers?

BEFORE anyone beats me to the draw, let me say it myself. I was a fool. After all my experience I should have known better.

But this is not a story about what I should have known or what I should have done. It is an account, as honest as I can make it, of what I did do, and what the consequences were. When my sister Janet and her husband decided to come and see me, I greeted them with cheers and embarked upon a whirlwind of extracurricular activities. And when Darryl Zanuck assigned me to a hurried rewrite chore on Lifeboat, the Alfred Hitchcock epic of the high seas, I persuaded him to let me stay on The Dolly Sisters too.

That was a hectic time. If I felt a little tired, that was easy—I'd borrow a Benzedrine tablet and keep on going. If my eyes felt feverish, that was easy—I'd just stop taking my temperature. And if the voice of experience whispered a word of warning in my ear, that was easy too—I'd just laugh loudly enough to drown out the sound.

It wouldn't be long, I kept telling myself. And it wasn't. Only two weeks, that was all. Two weeks till I finished my chores on Lifeboat, till Jo Larkin and I turned in an outline on The Dolly Sisters, till I said good-by to Betty and Janet.

On the Sunset Strip I passed the Mocambo, one of the film colony's plushest night spots. There was a party going on, I remembered, a fund-raising affair for the Free French. I'd bought a ticket, not really intending to go. But driving by, I hesitated. Lots of my friends would be there, I could easily join a table.

It was a good party. And when the party was over I took half a dozen people home for scrambled eggs and coffee. By the time they left it was almost dawn.

And when I woke up I could hardly drag myself out of bed. I felt as if, in my sleep, a giant truck had run me down and crushed every bone in my body. A couple of hours later I was looking into the no-longer twinkling eyes of Doctor Burr. It was he who broke the silence.

"It's back," I said, more as a statement than a question. "The shadow?"

"Yes," Doctor Burr said, "it's back and it's bigger." Two weeks before it hadn't been there at all.

"What do I do now?" I asked, just as I didn't know.

"Go home and go to bed. And stay there till I say you can get out."

So I had to learn my lesson all over again. It was harder than ever this time, partly because I wasn't so desperately ill as I'd been before, partly because I had to give up much more. But I've never been able to learn anything except the hard way.

And this time, I really took it lying down. No rebellion, no cheating. Four months in bed, in comparative solitary. Not because I was so dreadfully sick, but because with the war going on nurses were busy with more important cases.

(Continued on Page 174)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Boy With a Bang

By Jessie Farnham

The little boy blew and blew and blew,
His face like a small, full moon.
Then the bag outstretched, he sharply punched—
Bang! went the big balloon.

So little boys have blown and blown
Across the years' wide span—
And there's still a boy with a paper bag
And a bang! in every man.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Get this 92 piece

Christmas Gift-Wrapping Set

all this is yours!

- 8 jumbo-size (20" × 30") sheets of beautifully styled, de luxe Christmas paper.
- 4 giant sheets of finest American tissue (white and Holiday red).
- 70 gummed seals in brilliant, full color —Santas, Deer, Bells, Holly, etc.
- 10 bright, cheery gift cards and tags.

for only 25¢ and the labels from 2 packages of

Ballard OvenReady Biscuits

Timely Bargain ...Tasty Hot Biscuits

No Mixing...Ready to eat in 9 minutes!

'm-m-m! Piping-hot, light 'n' luscious outhern-style biscuits. And only 9 min-es from package to table! They're allard OvenReadys — JUST BAKE nd SERVE — made from choicest ingredi-nts — including all-vegetable shortening.

For family praise tonight, get 2 pack-ges of Ballard OvenReady Biscuits from our grocer's refrigerator today. Then end us the two labels, with 25c in coin, r your Christmas Gift Wrapping Set.

Get 2 packages from your grocer's REFRIGERATOR! send for your Gift Wrappers TODAY!

Distributed exclusively by Kraft

Mail Today! Offer Closes Midnight December 4, 1950

Ballard Christmas Wrapping
Box 5133, Dept. J
Chicago 77, Ill.

Please send me_____sets of Ballard's de luxe Christmas gift-wrap assortment. For each set I enclose 25c in coin and the labels from two packages of Ballard OvenReady Biscuits.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____State_____

This offer good only in Continental U. S. Offer definitely ends midnight Dec. 4, 1950! Offer void where restricted.

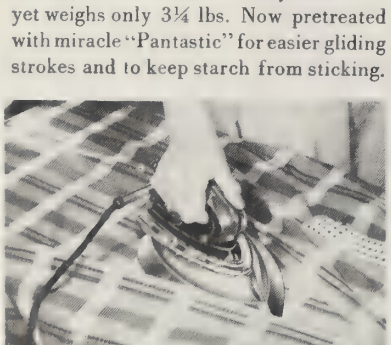
AMERICA'S FASTEST IRON...

saves 26 minutes of every ironing hour!

UNIVERSAL Stroke-Sav·r

BY ACTUAL TEST against five other leading irons, the new Stroke-Sav·r proved almost twice as fast, and saved four out of ten strokes!

MAKE A 10-DAY HOME TRIAL



Take this amazing iron home and prove to yourself what it can do. If you are not convinced it is the finest iron you ever owned, the entire price of $12.95* will be refunded!

NEW EXTRA LARGE SIZE gives 37% more ironing surface than ordinary irons . . . yet weighs only 3¼ lbs. Now pretreated with miracle "Pantastic" for easier gliding strokes and to keep starch from sticking.

NEW REVOLUTIONARY SHAPE with rounded heel enables sweeping strokes backward or forward without wrinkling or bunching. The Stroke-Sav·r is actually two irons in one—long and low for dainty pieces—extra sized for flat work.

NEW WIDE SLOPING BEVEL glides into pleats, ruffles and under buttons without interrupting stroke. Makes ironing easier.

SINCE 1842 *Price is Fair Traded in states where appropriate Fair Trade Acts exist.

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

(Continued from Page 172)

"Wouldn't it be better if I went to a sanatorium?" I asked Doctor Burr.

"Much better, in theory," he said. But wartime conditions made it impractical. "All the places are overcrowded and understaffed."

I took it for granted he would give me pneumothorax. But Doctor Burr said nothing doing.

"You don't really need it," he said, "and once you started it, you'd have to continue for two or three years. Just settle down and take it easy and leave the rest to me."

Which is what I did. I worked out a schedule, with the doctor's visits as its focal point; read a lot, particularly all sorts of books on TB that he brought me, wrote letters, planned stories, and listened to the radio. Not a bad life, but in the midst of war, an awfully wasteful one. And it made me think.

It came to me slowly that I had never really accepted one simple basic fact: once you've had tuberculosis you must change your behavior pattern, not just for the duration of the illness, but for the rest of your life. You can have the best doctors in the world and read every "self-help" book ever written, but the decision to face tuberculosis and conquer it can come only from within. And long after you've conquered it, you've got to keep your guard up, because TB is a sleepless, tricky enemy, always looking for a chance to sneak up on you again.

Whenever I catch myself getting a shade too careless at work or at play, I stop and remind myself of what Doctor Burr told me when he let me go back into the world again.

"The way to live a long life," he said, "is to follow the advice of Doctor Osler: 'Get yourself a chronic disease and make a pet of it.'"

It was 1943 when Doctor Burr offered me those words to live by. I think I must have really lived by them, for I haven't had a trace of illness since. That is no guaranty I never will have, but my chances are good, and getting better every day. I still have a checkup and chest X ray twice a year. And, just as a precautionary measure, so do my sons. To that extent they're safer than children who've never knowingly been exposed to the disease. They grew up strong healthy—Tom's in college now and in high school—apparently none the for living under the same roof with me I was ill.

And speaking of that, it's odd: when really ill I never felt any pain in my but ever since that last relapse if I start doing the least little bit, I get a warni nal—my chest begins to hurt. I have le never to disregard that warning.

Most important, I have learned wh quit. No matter what I'm doing or w am, at the first sign of fatigue I simpl and head for bed. I still work and I stil but within reason, and never the two a

If for any reason I have to—or wan keep late hours, I make up for it by s in bed longer the next morning—a ver plan, incidentally, even for people w never been serious

It seems to be tional, in recounting and tedious illness, fe ple to say they're happened to them. I'm not glad it hap to me. I wish I'd bee enough to live intelli without the long and costly lesson of culosis.

There are no uninteresting things, there are only uninterested people.
—G. K. CHESTERTON.

But since it did happen to me, I am least that I finally learned something the experience.

It was only when I went over the m for this book with Doctor Marvin finally confessed I'd seen his note abou nosis questionable. I had to tell him could clear up the lingering mystery f self. "Just what is 'prognosis questiona I asked him.

"It's a doctor's way of saying that isn't quite closed and has to be watch pleural effusion on the good side of th following pneumothorax on the ba often leads to dangerous complication

"Then why didn't you tell me?"

"Because it would only have confus and you couldn't have done anything it."

"But I found out anyway. Doesn' prove it would have been better to tell the first place?"

"No," said Doctor Marvin. "It proves the truth of an old axiom. N ever comes from reading other people's beginning at Greece, and crossing Southern Asia to Indonesia. Western Europe was to be a joint responsibility, along with France.

LET'S FACE IT—AND GET ON

(Continued from Page 56)

It did not work out that way. During the war we were not told, and no one that I ever met realized, how long it would take and how hard it would be for Britain to recover from the war. Yet while Britain has been making the uphill struggle to recover, she has been unable to play anything like the part that we thought she would. Nor did we realize that before the peacemaking could even begin Roosevelt would be dead and Churchill would be out of office. All this was, at least in my own case, the real miscalculation about Yalta. I assumed that the imposing partnership of Britain and America, and of Churchill and Roosevelt at the head of the two great world powers, would continue until Europe had revived. Instead of that the United States, under inexperienced leadership, has been called upon to carry its own responsibilities and a large part of Britain's as well. We were not prepared for what we never expected we should have to do, and we ran into difficulties and dangers.

By 1947 the situation was working up to a crisis both in Europe and in the Far East. All of Western Europe was on the verge of economic chaos and social collapse. Nationalist China was disintegrating before the Chinese communist advance. General Marshall, fortunately, was Secretary of State. I say fortunately, because the crisis demanded the kind of decision which he was uniquely qualified to make. Secretary Marshall decided that Western Europe could be with American help, but that Nati China could not be saved except by ican military intervention on a very lar incalculable scale. Our experience in the Korean war suggests that General Ma did not overestimate the military c American intervention in the much Chinese civil war.

The Marshall Plan to save Wester rope, and the Marshall decision not to vene in China, became U.S. policy spring of 1947. The decision not to su Nationalist China any further was one hardest choices that this country ha had to make. But it had to be made b when the war ended this country wa willing to impose conscription and to tain a military budget at least equal whole budget in order to remain perma on something like a war footing. Ha done that, had we been willing to ma a large peacetime conscript army, as w the war industries and the war control go with them, we might perhaps ha inforced Europe and at the same time intervened successfully and decisive China.

But without a great military esta ment in time of peace, the choice General Marshall made as Secretary of was unavoidable. He had to choose be China and Europe. Had we tried to do thing in both places, we should almos tainly have not done enough in eithe

(Continued on Page 177)

No finer gift

P.S. Like all fine things, Revere Ware is imitated. So always look for the trade mark in the copper bottom.

REVERE COPPER AND BRASS INCORPORATED

Rome Manufacturing Company Division · Rome, New York

MARY MARTIN

star of "South Pacific"

says: "I've found a new kind of curler that really holds...and curls ...even tiny wisps!"

Hugs... flat elastic band holds hair securely!

Locks curl... new "quick-lock" band fastener! . . . so quick, so easy you can fasten it blindfolded!

Grips... tiny "teeth" hold hair-ends from slipping on curler!

"See? . . . not a single stray wisp! Bless these new little curlers! And this heavenly Rayve wave leaves my hair soft . . . shiny . . . like naturally curly! I've had dozens of permanents since "South Pacific" opened—yet my hair has never been healthier. Rayve's very, very easy on the hair. I know!"

12

NEW Mary Martin SHORT-CUT CURLERS

plus Rayve REFILL

only $1.29

Now, while they last! . . . Get your MARY MARTIN SHORT-CUT CURLERS!

Not 6—not 8—but a whole dozen Mary Martin short-cut curlers, plus a Rayve Refill, for $1.29. At drug and cosmetic counters everywhere.

"Quickest, easiest little curlers! They wind a better catch every single hair." That's what Mary Martin said she tested these new short-cut curlers. And she's had p of chance to learn about winding up short curls! "T isn't a hair on my head longer than 2½ inches!" she "Can you brush your wave into pla in two minutes?" asks Mary Mart "That's what I do! . . . give it a fe quick sweeps with a brush after r shampoo—and every little Ray curl falls into place as 'naturally' you please! You can see why I lo Rayve!"

Now—a revolutionary little curl helps you catch every short end . speeds your "Rayving" time.

(Continued from Page 174)

d have been entangled in both. We d have failed in both. Once the grave ness of Britain was known, then with mited military power that the nation villing to support, the historic choice o be made. General Marshall made the e. It came down, in the last analysis, to ision to withdraw from the mainland ia in order to reinforce the defenses of tlantic community.

ound this decision there has raged ever a fierce controversy which not only es and bewilders the nation, but inter-dangerously with the formation of any ive U.S. policy. The crux of the con-rsy is whether it is in fact true that the d States is not strong enough to ree Europe and to intervene on the Asinainland at the same time. Obviously, were strong enough to have done both,
the Marshall choice was unnecessary, he withdrawal from China was, if not ne, at least a blunder. But if in 1947 the e had to be made, then it would be ult for any critic of the Marshall policy gue successfully that Europe is not more important to us than is China.

hold that we have never been strong gh to project our military power across oceans, and deep into Asia and into pe simultaneously. To those who say we could and should have done that, the er, I believe, is that even in 1944, when ere fully mobilized and had ninety diviand an enormous air force and the est fleet in the history of navies, we care not to engage the main force of the nese army until the German army had defeated. We took care not to fight on across the two oceans at the same time.
n 1944 we had as our allies against the nans and the Japanese a much stronger in and the immense Red Army itself.
we have no big allies, and the armies e Atlantic community are outnumbered ne armies of the communist orbit. Mr.
chill, speaking of Europe alone, says we outnumbered seven or eight to one. In the ratio against us is even worse.

SE are the stark realities we have to in mind when we study the historic den of General Marshall, made in 1947, fuse to involve this country in a military rtaking in China while Europe was so dly undefended. All that we are able to n the mobilization of our own military er, and in the mobilization of that of ce and Britain and even Western Gery, will certainly not be more, and may ss, than the barest minimum needed to nd Europe.

he defense of the Atlantic community is easy to guarantee. But if we are resolute wholehearted about it, we can make the sion of Europe so fearfully dangerous to Russians that the probabilities are they not attempt it. But to do that there must roused in Europe and in America a will esist, which is fed by a deep conviction that we are defending our own lands and our own civilization, and nothing else. We can count, I believe, on the power and the spirit of the West to defend its homelands. We must not count on more than that, however. We must not expect the western democracies to stake their existence on wars in Asia, where the issues are confused, where their vital interests are not directly touched, and where the outcome cannot be decisive.

What, then, the reader will ask, do I think American policy in Asia should be? This is a fair question, and I would say to begin with that in the Far East we should work with our friends and not separately and unilaterally. The leading friendly powers in Asia are India and Pakistan, Britain and the British Commonwealth. We should seek agreement with them on all Far Eastern questions, on the future of Korea, on Formosa, on the Japanese peace treaty, on China and the United Nations. When I say that we should seek agreement, I mean that we should, unless it is clear that a truly American vital interest is at stake, prefer an agreement in which all can concur sincerely to winning diplomatic "victories" and to having our own way.

A FAR EASTERN policy of concerted, rather than of unilateral, action could have, if it is boldly and astutely managed, large and beneficent results. If ever we could convince the peoples of Asia, including the Chinese and the Japanese, that in the affairs of Asia we now recognize the moral and intellectual leadership of Asian statesmen and thinkers, the only foundation on which Asia and the West can now live together peaceably will have been laid. The notion that the way to deal with "Oriental psychology" is to overawe it is, I am convinced, at least one world war out of date. In Asia too many Western men have been defeated by Asian soldiers. The peoples of Asia are not going to be overawed.

A policy of concert would mean that we would undertake nothing inside Asia which had not been approved in advance by the free peoples of Asia. It would mean that in questions which concern them more intimately than they concern us—the treatment of Communist China, for example—we would let them lead, and we would follow. This is not a dynamic and aggressive Far Eastern policy. It is not meant to be. It is meant to be prudent, moderate, economical of American soldiers and of American wealth, unambitious, honest and realistic.

I believe we must concentrate our main energies on the defense of the homelands of our own civilization. I think that a policy of concert in the Far East is all that we can afford. I think, also, that were we much more powerful than we are, it would still be the wisest course for us to take in Asia. For while we shall never overawe and dominate the peoples of Asia, we might, if our motives are pure and our manners are suitable, begin to reduce their suspicions and then to earn their confidence, and we might end perhaps by winning their friendship. THE END

"I wonder what kind of a figure I've got."

How deep
does your cleansing go?

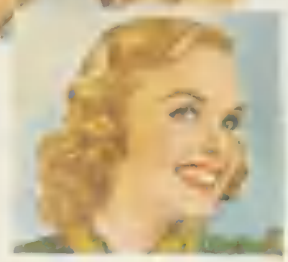
If surface cleansing helps a little – imagine what a radiant difference deep cleansing will make! Woodbury Cold Cream gives your skin a brand-new look the very first day!

For Woodbury Cold Cream cleanses deeper! It contains Penaten – the amazing new penetrating agent that actually goes deeper into the pore openings. That means Woodbury's wonderful cleansing oils go deeper to loosen every trace of grime and make-up.

And because of Penaten, Woodbury Cold Cream smooths more effectively, too. Brings rich softening oils to soothe your skin when it's dry and rough. Recapture that little-girl-freshness again with Woodbury Cold Cream! 20¢ to $1.39 plus tax.

Woodbury Cold Cream

penetrates deeper because it contains PENATEN



For hair that looks "Vitally Alive"

● Sparkling vitality in everything about you—helps give a lovely "lift" to everything in life.

For hair that's Radiant, Soft, Smooth, Younger-Looking... Shampoo with Prell!

Prell—for that "VITALLY ALIVE" Sparkle

Your hair is sparkling and radiant after Prell—more radiant than with cream or soap shampoos, in hardest water! That's because Prell Shampoo's patented cleansing ingredient gives free rinsing action . . . brings out all the glorious sheen in your hair—leaves it so vibrantly younger-looking, so "vitally alive," so much lovelier.

Prell—for that "VITALLY ALIVE" Spring

After Prell your hair is so much softer, smoother—yet with the "body" and "spring" that make it more manageable. Curls and waves set beautifully, and even hair that seems dull and lifeless has a more glamorous sparkling radiance. You'll love the glorious "vitally alive" look your hair has after Prell—use this different, marvelous Procter & Gamble shampoo today!

Different! Emerald-clear for that

"VITALLY ALIVE" LO

Problems of remodeling house are shared as were young-married problems, when Dr. Charlie averaged 1.3 patients a day and money was their biggest worry.

Country Doctor

"Show Charlie and Lola anything that isn't the way it should be and they're both in the fight up to their ears." The Sheppards, of Hutchinson, Minnesota, have ideals about the part a doctor and his wife should play in their community.

By BETTY HANNAH HOFFMAN

ONE of Dr. Charles Sheppard's earliest memories is sitting behind old Don and Bess with his father, also a country doctor, as they plowed through the hilly, snow-covered Minnesota roads on calls. Hutchinson, where Dr. Ernest Sheppard practiced for 53 years, and where his son Charles practices today, is about 60 miles west of Minneapolis. It is located in rolling black-earthed and lake-dotted dairy country where every bend of the road presents another breath-taking Adolf Dehn landscape. Here the restless winds turn the sweeping fields of corn and wheat and alfalfa into rhythmic waves the colors of the sea, kick up dust storms and an occasional tornado during the blazing summers, and pile the snow eight feet high in wintertime.

They tell the story of the newcomer out there who finally asked during a snowstorm in May just how long Minnesota winters lasted. "Don't know," was the reply. "I've only been here eleven months myself."

The town of Hutchinson was founded by the famous troupe of singers of that name from Milford, New Hampshire, back in 1855. Their purpose in so doing was to promote the triple causes of Temperance, Abolition and Woman Suffrage. The new settlement was barely launched when Little Crow and his Indian band decided to wipe the place off the map. The townsfolk anxiously gathered in a knot to see what they should do; the men were in favor of making a run for their lives, but the women (so the story goes) circulated among them and

First home, one floor of house later bought for $7500. Remodeling cost $20,000, provides 12 rooms, 5 baths.

Even a doctor's twelve-hour (minimum) work day can be stretched to include a share of all family interests and fun.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GORDON COSTER

Reserved for mother-daughter talk. the after-breakfast time when Lola does Barbie's hair. Barbie. 9. "would rather run races than play dolls," loves arithmetic (finds brother's 6th-grade problems "fun"). Future question—should she become a teacher or a nurse?

Lola, First Vice-President, presents "Build a Better Community" awa Federation of Women's Clubs Convention. She also worked with Dr. She on governor's better-mental-health committee; conducts adult speech persuaded them one by one to stay and fight, and so manag save Hutchinson.

Often it's the busiest peop

Today the town has 4600 residents, largely retired farme German and Scandinavian stock. It boasts a Kraft Foods facto "Scotch" tape plant, one movie house, two small hotels and so parades down Main Street that youngsters learn baton tw before they pick up hopscotch. Each summer a two-day carnival is held on Crow River—which runs smack through town—presided over by the Sauerkraut Queen, the Flying Fa Queen, the St. Paul Winter Carnival Queen and other eye-f royalty.

In the old days, when telephones were few, emergencies reported to the doctor by someone bicycling or galloping into with the news. By the time Doctor Ernest had ordered his and buggy from the livery stable and driven perhaps twenty out into the country, the patient had been waiting three or hours. Today his son purrs along the wide, well-paved Minn roads at seventy miles an hour in his big Buick Roadmaster, u he is forced to a crawl behind a snowplow. Like his father, a

When the day has been particularly busy Dr. Charlie returns to his office in the evening to complete records. His interest in his patients is friendly, personal—"a doctor you can really talk to."

"You must be a doctor, Charlie," sister Agnes used to tell him when both were children. "and I will be your nurse."

"What did you think when I asked if you wanted to from the delivery table to your bed?" Dr. Charlie as young mother. "Brutal," she laughs, "but I feel just fi pards stayed in their house during part of remodeling. H from room to room "a step ahead of the workmen." oid dust, Lola cooked oven meals, or served picnic-style.

When Leland was born 11 years ago hospital bill was $88; brand-new Dr. Sheppard's income that month—$60.

Despite crowded life "the family always comes first." Because the doctor is often late in the evening the big meal is at noon. Lola relies on timesavers like well-stocked freezer, pressure cooker.

e the Sheppards—who manage time for community work.

al practitioner, Doctor Charles relies upon a lifetime's inti- knowledge of his patients, but unlike his father, who was d to practice medicine with one small black bag and a heap of tion, Doctor Charles has enough gadgets in his nine-room office uip a small hospital. Each year he goes back to the University nnesota to learn the latest in special fields of medicine.

What marvelous opportunities you have," his father used to im, with a shake of his small pointed Vandyke beard. "How lives you will be able to save, what miraculous cures you ccomplish!"

harles (or Charlie, as they all call him in Hutchinson) can't mber the precise moment he decided to become a doctor; he lways wanted to. At the age of eleven he was not at all non- d when a strange woman had a baby in his bed. It was a rnity patient of his father's who came dashing into town to the hospital only to find that it was still in the hands of the bers and carpenters. She barely managed to reach the doc- house in time; while Doctor Ernest briskly scrubbed his hands e kitchen, the baby arrived upstairs in young Charlie's bed.

ontroversial questions, discussions very often get quite heated." As r of the House of Delegates, Dr. Sheppard presides at meetings of the sota State Medical Association; delegates "thrash out" policy matters.

"What opportunities you have"— Charlie's father, a country doctor for 53 years, marveled over wonder drugs like penicillin—"what miraculous cures you will accomplish!" But some things never seem to change—like a curious little girl stuffing a bean or a pea up her nose.

"A doctor merely lives in the same house with English still confuses Estonian Kathë, 18, who came to Sheppards to help Lola, stays as "family."

The old country practitioner died in 1946 of a stomach cancer, perfectly self-possessed to the very end, a small spare man with formal, courtly ways and wonderfully kind eyes. He never encouraged his son to become a doctor, because he considered it such a hard life, but Charlie's sister kept telling him, "You must be a doctor, Charlie, and I will be your nurse." Which is precisely what happened.

Now Charles' son, Leland, who is 11, says he wants to be "a doctor in Hutch just like grandpa and dad." Leland and his sister Barbie, 9, like to sit in the laboratory of their father's office watching Aunt Agnes, a registered nurse, as she does blood counts or prepares X rays.

Doctor Charlie, now 39, is a big man, 6 feet tall and 190 pounds, with dark hair and mustache and a constant pallor from overwork. An articulate and fast talker, he emphasizes his points with staccato motions of the cigarette holder always in his fingers, but he can also be a good listener, intuitive and sympathetic. "Extremely thorough and a doctor you can really talk to," is Hutchinson's satisfied comment.

And then there's that laugh of his. If something should strike him funny while driving, his wife, Lola, grabs the steering wheel and pulls over to the side of the road while the doctor sits there helpless, with head thrown back, mouth wide open, spectacles streaming, his whole body shaken with explosive bellows. There is some question whether this laugh has helped achieve the wide personal popularity he enjoy People often phone to ask when the doctor is going to see the ne comedy in town. "Some go the same night to laugh with me, and son of 'em make sure to stay away," grins the doctor.

This is not to say that the doctor isn't essentially a serious-minde guy. Without being in the least bit stuffy about it, both he and Lol have a high ideal of the position a doctor and his wife should hol in the community. "Both Charlie and Lola are reformers," says h mother. "Just show them anything that isn't the way it should be an they're both in the fight up to their ears." Last year, Charlie spen three weeks of his vacation attending various conferences about th state. He has been fighting eight years for an adequate milk ordinanc (Minnesota is still riddled with undulant fever), is on the Stat Tuberculosis Committee, treasurer of the Minnesota Public Healt Conference, and is beginning his third yea as Speaker of the House of Delegates of th Minnesota State Medical Society. Locally, h is active in the Kiwanis, the Civic and Com merce Association, the Boy Scouts, and Hutchinson's health officer and deputy coun coroner.

Favorite food, macaroni, 3 or 4 helpings.

Lola, like the doctor, is that rare combin tion of personal warmth and executive driv She is an attractive woman with trim ankle softly waved brown hair turning gray, and ey brimming over with good humor. Whatev she believes in, she believes with a towerin

Leland briefs mother on day's itinerary, including stop at father's office where Dr. Charlie always finds room for Cokes and popsicles in laboratory refrigerator. Leland's ambition—to be third-generation Sheppard doctor.

Sheppards feel all family problems deserve thoughtful consideration. Lelan says his bike needs a new brake and seat, a light, a horn. Dr. Charlie trie it out himself, finds the brake is definitely worn and okays the refitting jo ily—he doesn't live with them."

ie's club has 4
ibers, 4 officers.

fervor; nothing makes her more hopping mad than insincerity. Outspoken and direct in manner, she still manages to be objective about her own shortcomings. Although both she and the doctor have hot tempers (she says), they have never had a quarrel in seventeen years of marriage. "We hash everything out, always have."

Both she and Charlie served on Governor Youngdahl's committee for better mental health in Minnesota. Together they visited mental hospitals throughout the state, and the conditions they saw there froze them with ror. They both went on speaking tours, telling about eighty mental ients crowded in one sleeping room with one open toilet, t.b. cases ong them, and some patients chained like animals to their beds. All has now been changed.

Lola is local president of the Association of University Women, a nber of the League of Women Voters, and was first vice-president he State Federation of Women's Clubs for 1949–50. She also con- ts a local speech class for adults who want to attain confidence in lic speaking, directs the local Methodist Youth Group and is a Girl ut leader.

But for all her activities, Lola picks only the things which really erest her, and always puts her family first. Three in the afternoon, en her children come home from school, invariably finds her at the nt door to greet them and Charlie, whether he gets home at six, ily crisis. "Too busy" to choose wallpaper for his room, Leland objected nother's choice of two walls in Hopalong Cassidy print, two in plaid. He ted it all Hopalong, but later allowed mother's selection was "wonderful."

Third-grader, Brownie Scout, Barbie loves music, swimming and startling friends with an ability to do "mirror writing"—"Dear Miss Star, I love you," written backward—as swiftly and easily as she writes a normal hand.

"I used to cry myself to sleep—now I say I will not be sorry for myself." Pretty Kathë has had no word of her family since Russians occupied Estonia in 1944. Sheppards are "mother and dad, little sister and brother."

Even a doctor can be a worried parent when a child develops a sudden fever—and be just as relieved when the fever has disappeared by morning.

Best part of Doctor Charlie's day—when children cry "Daddy's home!"

seven or eight o'clock at night, can expect both an attentive wife and a hot meal waiting for him. The latter she accomplishes with a pressure cooker and a home freezer loaded with plenty of sirloin steaks, squab, shrimp, lobster tails, even venison, plus her own mouth-watering grape and apple pies, cakes and rolls ready to pop in the oven. Lola can put a holiday meal on the table in forty-five minutes from start to finish, and clean up even faster with her electric dishwasher.

Although Charlie is mainly a "mealtime" daddy—his working day starts at 8 A.M. and ends at 9 P.M.—his relationship with the family is a very close one. His son Leland is a lanky kid with big hands and feet and a fetching grin encased in braces. Until three years ago he suffered a great deal with asthma, but seems to have outgrown it. His favorite food is macaroni—at his birthday parties he eats three or four helpings along with cake and ice cream.

His adoring sister Barbie is a bright and boisterous child with flying blond pigtails and blue eyes. She takes lessons in everything from baton twirling to acrobatics to tap dancing and piano. "Leland needs to be pushed—I suppose he was sick so much as a child," says his mother, "and Barbie needs to be curbed." They both make their own beds, help with the dishes, and Barbie can already run the mangle to do flatwork.

A year ago the Sheppards added a new member to their household, an 18-year-old displaced person from Estonia. Kathë Bender, who came as a household helper, at first addressed them as Doctor and Mrs. Sheppard, but before long was (Continued on Page 241)

Of first date alone with Lola (they talked 7 hours) Dr. Charlie recalls, "It was a meeting of minds. I never even kissed her—although I sure wanted to."

Quick, quick fixin'! Grand feastin'!

HEARTY MAN-SIZE MEAL . . . IN 15 MINUTES!

Minute Rice Dinner Plate. Here's a delicious dish that would take twice the time and three times the effort with oldtime rice! See how quick and easy it is with amazing new Minute Rice! Just start a pre-cooked ham steak frying; dump Minute Rice into water, bring to a boil and remove from heat. While it sits 10 minutes, cook Birds Eye green peas. An appetizing, perfect meal!

BUDGET PLEASER . . . IN 30 MINUTES!

Minute Rice with Meat Balls. Saute meat balls (¾ lb. beef) in 2 tablespoons fat with 2 tablespoons each chopped green pepper and onion. Add 8-oz. can tomato sauce, 1½ cups water, 1⅓ cups Minute Rice, ½ teaspoon salt. Bring to full boil, cover, remove from heat, and let stand 10 minutes. Minute Rice absorbs all the liquid and flavor . . . packs a taste-thrill no other rice can boast. Serves 6.

PRE-COOKED RICE IN A PACKAGE—

It's new! It's quick! It's heaven!

★ NO WASHING!
★ NO RINSING!
★ NO DRAINING!
★ NO STEAMING!
★ PERFECT RICE EVERY TIME!

Something sensational has happened! Now you can serve fluffy, perfect, fresh-made rice with NONE of the tiresome preparation regular rice requires.

Minute Rice is fancy long-grained rice, pre-cooked by a patented process. Dump it in water, bring to a boil! No more cooking needed! With this amazing Minute Brand product, you can fix a feast in jig-time!

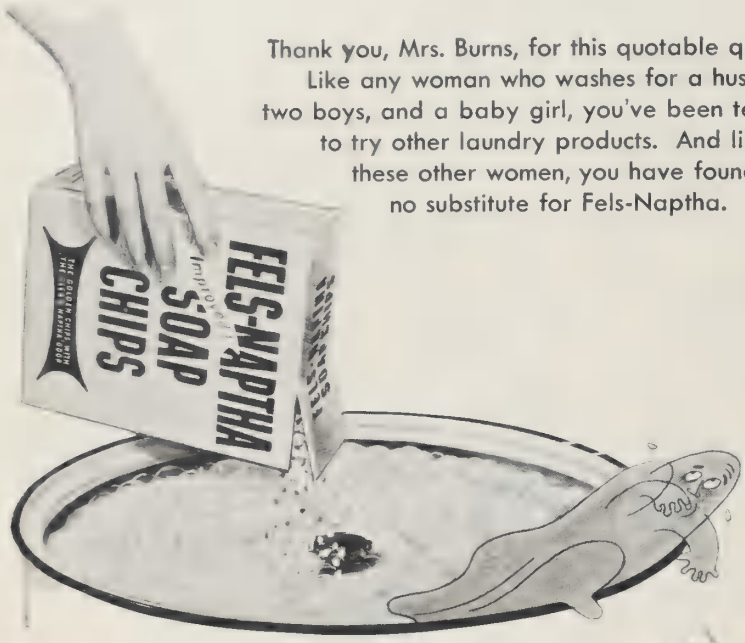
COMPANY DAZZLER . . . IN 20 MINUTES!

Tangy Orange Rice. Wonderful with duck, ham, chicken! Cook 1 cup diced celery and 3 tablespoons diced onion in ¼ cup butter till tender. Add 1⅓ cups Minute Rice, 1½ teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon sugar, 1 cup water, ¾ cup orange juice. Bring to full boil, cover, remove from heat, and let stand 10 minutes. Add 2 teaspoons grated orange rind and fluff. Now all the orange flavor is in the rice! Now—taste lusciousness that only Minute Rice can give you! Serves 4 or 5.

SUNDAY NIGHT SNACK . . . IN 15 MINUTES!

Olive Rice with Tomato Rarebit. And only Minute Rice can make it so fast and good! Dump 1⅓ cups Minute Rice in 1½ cups water, add ¾ teaspoon salt, and bring to full boil. Remove from heat, let stand, covered, 10 minutes. Heat a can tomato soup, add 2 cups grated sharp cheese, ½ teaspoon mustard, cook and stir till cheese is melted. To rice, add ¼ cup chopped stuffed olives, 2 tablespoons butter. Serve with sauce. Serves 4.

For perfect rice without the work ★★★ pre-cooked



MINUTE RICE

BRAND

A Product of General Foods

"I can fairly see the dirt walk off by itself!"

writes Mrs. Robert J. Burns of New Brunswick, N. J.

Thank you, Mrs. Burns, for this quotable quote. Like any woman who washes for a husband, two boys, and a baby girl, you've been tempted to try other laundry products. And like these other women, you have found no substitute for Fels-Naptha.

Fels-Naptha's mild golden soap and gentle, active naptha plus the new "sunshine" ingredients make white clothes whiter and colored fabrics brighter. May you and all Fels-Naptha's friends live long and prosper—and may Fels-Naptha always make your washdays lighter and shorter.

Always use Improved Fels-Naptha—the only laundry product that gives you three washday advantages—

1. Mild, golden soap.
2. Gentle, active naptha.
3. Finer "sunshine" ingredients for extra, brilliant whiteness and clearer, brighter colors.

IMPROVED

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

PHOTO BY GORDON COSTER

Mrs. Sheppard puts in the oven a dinner that will wait well.

Meals that Wait

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

EVERY doctor's wife knows that the telephone is often the ruination of a good dinner. Every wife knows the frustration of trying to keep a meal waiting for late-comers.

"Through the years, I've learned that it's foolish for me to plan meals that won't survive waiting unless I'm absolutely sure the doctor is going to be home on time," says Mrs. Sheppard. "When I see a recipe that reads 'Serve at once,' I know it's not for us.

"My three greatest helps in planning survivable meals are my freezer, my pressure cooker (I can start the vegetable when I see the doctor's car enter the drive) and the warming oven of my range."

Here are some of the Sheppards' dinners that have passed the test of keeping a reasonable length of time. Those of you who have freezers will want to try some of her suggestions for meals in advance.

Pounded Steak with Mushrooms
Lima Beans Coleslaw
Brazil-Nut Ice-Cream Pie

The Sheppard freezer has such good capacity that they buy a hind- or fore-quarter of beef at a time and have it cut into steaks, stew meat, hamburger, and so on, at the butcher's. By buying in large quantities, there is a real saving. Bones, cut out at the butcher's, go into soup stock. This is reduced and frozen too.

They usually have round steak cut thick for Swiss-steak-type dishes. Slow-baked, it's tender and succulent with lots of good gravy. A tarry in the oven at a little lower temperature doesn't seem to spoil this dish a whit. The Brazil-nut pie waits in the freezing compartment of the refrigerator until you're ready for it.

POUNDED STEAK WITH MUSHROOMS

Pound a ¾-inch-thick slice of round steak with one of those wooden meat tenderers; or use the edge of a saucer—it works as well. As you pound, work in ¼ cup flour mixed with 1 teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Cut meat into serving pieces. Brown well on both sides in 2 tablespoons hot shortening. Transfer meat to roasting pan. Add 2½ cups tomato juice to pan drippings. Add 1 small can mushrooms and 4 onions, sliced. Pour over meat. Cover and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., about 1½–2 hours, or until meat is tender. Taste gravy after first hour, adding more salt and pepper if needed.

BRAZIL-NUT ICE-CREAM PIE

Grind enough shelled but not blanched Brazil nuts in a nut grinder or food chopper to make 1½ cups finely ground nuts. It takes about ½ pound. Mix in 3 tablespoons sugar thoroughly. Pat and press this mixture into the bottom and up the sides of a 9-inch piepan or plate, reserving about ¼ cup of sugared nuts for sprinkling on top. Fill the shell with 1 quart softened coffee or chocolate-chip ice cream. Sprinkle remaining nuts over the top. Freeze in freezing compartment of refrigerator or in freezer until ready to serve. Cut as you would any pie.

eezing for the future: You want to put down two or three ese ice-cream pies while you're t it. They're easy-dos and ready rts. Wrap each pie well in alumi- foil and freeze.

Meat Loaf Baked Potatoes
Broccoli
(Pressure-cooked)
Chocolate Roll
with Chocolate Sauce
(From freezer)

ıe mornings Lola has meetings or intments, she puts her dinner in oven before she leaves the e—this time, sage meat loaf and d potatoes. By using the auto- c timer on the range, baking will ı at the appointed time. The pards have dinner at noon. Two ree hours is the longest ground should be left in the oven before ıg starts. Remember this when re timing a meal. The broccoli only 1½ minutes to cook in the sure cooker. If Lola learns that loctor is going to be detained, she postpone cooking it till he gets e. The meat loaf and baked pota- won't suffer too much from a in the warming oven. The choc- roll is frozen, ready to slice. You buy these at most frozen-food ıters, but Lola's homemade ones xceptionally good, we think.

ıe freezer gets something in re- from this meal—usually about third of the meat loaf, which Lola ›s and freezes for soup-and- wich suppers.

SAGE MEAT LOAF

ıbine 2 pounds ground beef, ½ ıd ground fresh pork, 2 slightly en eggs, 2½ teaspoons salt, ¼ poon pepper, 1 teaspoon ground and ¼ cup finely chopped onion. 1 cup fine, dry toast crumbs with p milk and mix into meat mixture. ›e into loaf in a large shallow pan. pepper rings and 2–3 strips of ›n over the top. Bake in a mod- e oven, 350° F., 1 hour.

reezing for the future: You ıt make up two or three times the ›e at once. Bake (in smaller es, if you wish). Cool before ›ping well with aluminum foil. ze.

CHOCOLATE ROLL

t 3 eggs very light and add 1 cup ır gradually, beating well after ı addition. Add ¼ cup cold water. together ¾ cup cake flour, ¼ cup ›a, 2 teaspoons baking powder and teaspoon salt. Beat slowly while add the dry ingredients. Flavor ı 1 teaspoon vanilla. Line a jelly- pan with wax paper. Pour in bat- spread smooth and bake 12–15 utes in a hot oven, 425° F., just un- cake springs back from a light ch. Turn out on towel which has ı sprinkled with confectioners' ar. Roll up. Cool. Unroll and spread ı coffee or vanilla ice cream. Soften ice cream enough to spread. Roll quickly. Wrap in aluminum foil freeze. Slice and serve with choco- sauce.

Chocolate Sauce: Bring to ■ boil 2 s sugar, ½ cup cocoa, 1 cup water and a pinch of salt. Boil 3 minutes. Remove from heat and add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Cool. If sauce is going to be served hot, add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine when you add vanilla.

Tuna Amandine
Green Salad
Fruit Cup or Lemon Ice

"Tuna amandine is one of the hot dishes my family likes most," Lola says. "If the doctor is going to be late, I bake it for a longer time at a lower temperature."

TUNA AMANDINE

Make a thin cream sauce, using 2½ tablespoons flour, 2½ tablespoons butter or margarine and 2½ cups milk. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt and pepper. Remove from heat and add ½ cup grated Cheddar cheese and blend smooth. Cook 1 eight-ounce package medium-wide egg noodles in boiling salted water until tender. Rinse with hot water and drain in a colander. Add to the sauce with ¼ cup chopped pimiento, ¼ cup toasted slivered blanched almonds. Drain off oil from 2 seven-ounce cans tuna fish. If tuna is solid-pack type, break it up with a fork. If it is the type that is in bits or chunks, it is ready to use as is. Fold into the noodle mixture. Add more salt to taste. Pour into a 1½-quart casserole. Sprinkle another ¼ cup grated cheese and about 2 tablespoons more of the toasted almonds over the top. Bake in a moderately hot oven, 375° F., about 20 minutes or until bubbly hot. To hold back for late-comers, lower temperature to 350° or 325° F.

Lamb-and-Red-Bean Goulash
Green Salad
Easy Steamed Fig Pudding

Though Doctor Charlie dearly loves popovers, cheese soufflé and lamb stew with dumplings, Lola can't plan on having them very often. On one occasion when he had especially asked for lamb stew with dumplings, the doctor called to say he would be home in ten minutes—and then didn't show up for an hour and a half. "Of course the dumplings were miserable things by then," Lola said sadly. But the Sheppards do have lamb stews of all kinds often, as they are easy to reheat—easy to make in quantity and freeze. Steamed puddings, too, don't take a beating if they have to keep on steaming longer than expected.

LAMB-AND-RED-BEAN GOULASH

Have your butcher cut 2–2½ pound shank or neck of lamb into 1-inch pieces. Season well with salt and pepper. Roll the pieces in flour. Brown the meat well in 2 tablespoons shortening or salad oil—on all sides. (A Dutch-oven-type utensil is best for anything of this sort that takes slow cooking.) When meat is well browned, add 1 clove garlic, minced, 2 onions, chopped, 1 No. 2 can (2½ cups) tomatoes, 1 green pepper, diced, and 1 teaspoon salt. Cover and simmer slowly 1–1½ hours or until lamb is tender. Add 2 cans red kidney beans. Reheat. Season to taste. Serves 4.

(Continued on Page 240)

HOW AMERICA LIVES

Chili con Carne

A QUICK-AND-EASY RECIPE BY ANNE MARSHALL

- 2 tablespoons shortening, melted
- 1 medium onion, finely chopped
- 1 pound ground beef
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon black pepper
- 2 teaspoons chili powder
- ¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
- 2 cans (2½ cups) Campbell's Tomato Soup
- 1 No. 2 can (2½ cups) kidney beans

Melt shortening in a saucepan, add onion and beef, brown slightly. Add seasonings, tomato soup, and kidney beans. Cook slowly for about 30 minutes, stirring occasionally. Serve hot with crisp crackers and relishes. Enough for 6.

Calling all APPETITES!

DELICIOUS AS A SOUP... AS A POUR-ON SAUCE ... AND IN COOKING

Nothing like tomato to liven up a dish! And you probably have America's favorite tomato cooking sauce right on your kitchen shelf! Yes, Campbell's Tomato Soup ... double-rich and double-thick, just as it comes from the can . . . is used more than any other brand of any tomato product in cooking and as a pour-on sauce! That's because Campbell's is smoother, richer, better-tasting. Made from choice tomatoes . . . table butter . . . gentle seasonings . . . 17 fine ingredients in all!

Yes... CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP MAKES THE BEST TOMATO COOKING SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED!

FREE COOK BOOK
50 PAGES
99 DISHES
FULL COLOR

Mail coupon today to Anne Marshall, Campbell Soup Co., Dept. L 11, Camden 1, N. J.

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____
ZONE_____ STATE_____

The Clubwoman's Wardrobe – $94.70

PHOTOGRAPH BY GENEVIEVE NAYLOR

Tissue-faille tucked dress, $25.00; chiffon scarf, $1.95.

Mrs. Charles Sheppard, a doctor's wife, lives in Hutchinson Minnesota. She has many varied activities outside her hom and family, belonging to several clubs, social and communit organizations. She writes us, "The groups to which I belong ar conservatively and nicely dressed." For this fall, she says, sh would choose a suit, a tailored dress and "a simple afternoo dress which would be appropriate for bridge luncheons, teas an dinner out." These, then, form a basic wardrobe for her bus life; convertible with accessories, worn under her fur coa they are right for many occasions. ▪ By CYNTHIA McADO

Mrs. Sheppard's oxford-gray flannel suit, velvet collar and cuffs, $29.95; worn with black velours hat, $5.95; suède gloves, $5.95; and fabric bag, $5.00.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FONSSAGRIVES

Black crepe coat-dress with double buttoning, $10.95; white capeskin gloves, $7.95; jet earrings and necklace, $1.00 each.

"I'm never troubled with blemishes*," says charming Mrs. Phyllis MacDonald of Toronto. "I apply Noxzema the first thing every morning for my powder base and use it liberally as a night cream. Noxzema makes my skin feel so much softer and cleaner. It's my all around beauty aid—such a help in so many ways."

"My skin was dry and sensitive," says successful Philadelphia career girl Barbara Swanson. "Since my Prom Queen days, I have used Noxzema regularly as my night cream and during the day, and my rough, dry skin condition has improved wonderfully. Noxzema has consistently taken care of my skin."

NEW HOME FACIAL

Look lovelier in 10 days... or your money back!
Read these 4 simple steps developed by a doctor

No need for a lot of elaborate preps...no complicated rituals! With cream, you can cleanse...help pro...and help heal! Yes, here's a wonful new aid to a more beautiful-ing skin. Now, you can help your plexion look not only softer and other, but fresher, too...with just dainty snow-white cream—famous seless Noxzema.

The way to use it is as quick and as washing your face. It's the new xzema Home Facial—and daily use help bring you a lovelier-looking plexion, in as little as 10 days' time your money back!

Here's All You Do

Morning—Step 1.—Apply Noxzema over face and neck. With a damp cloth, "creamwash" just as you would with soap and water. Rinse well. "Creamwashing" with Noxzema cleanses so thoroughly. Why, Noxzema even smells clean!

p 2.—After drying, oth on a light film of zema for your make- foundation. This seless, invisible film of zema not only holds e-up beautifully, but also helps to protect r skin—all day!

Evening—Step 3.—At bedtime, "creamwash" with Noxzema, just as you did in the morning. How clean your skin looks! How fresh it feels! See how you've washed away make-up, the day's accumulation of dirt and grime—without any harsh rubbing!

Step 4.—Now, lightly massage Noxzema into face and neck. Pat a little extra over any blemishes*. While you sleep, Noxzema helps heal them—helps your skin look softer and smoother, too. And it's greaseless! No "smeary" face or messy pillow!

Proved in Clinical Tests

A skin doctor developed Noxzema's New Home Facial! Then, under the supervision of three skin specialists, it was tested on dozens of women—women of all ages, with many different skin types. And 4 out of 5 showed marked skin improvement—in 2 weeks or less!

The new Noxzema Home Facial proved a wonderful aid in softening and smoothing rough, dry skin... helped heal blemished* skin... helped normalize both dry and oily skin. And you'll be thrilled to see how it can help your skin look lovelier, too!

An Exclusive Formula

You see, greaseless Noxzema is a unique medicated formula—a marvelous oil-and-moisture emulsion. This exclusive formula not only helps supply a light film of oil and moisture to the skin's outer surface... but it helps heal blemishes*, at the same time! That's why daily use of Noxzema, in this easy Home Facial, can do so much for your skin...why it can help bring you lovelier-looking skin in 10 days—or your money back! Noxzema leaves your skin feeling cool, refreshed, too!

It Works—or Money Back

We're so positive that the new Noxzema Home Facial can help make your skin lovelier-looking—we make this sincere offer. Try the new Noxzema Home Facial for 10 days. Then, if you are not genuinely satisfied with the results, return your jar to Noxzema, Baltimore, Md.—your money cheerfully refunded. But you will be delighted! Get Noxzema today—while you can get the 85¢ jar for only 59¢ plus tax—almost half again as much for your money as in the Small size! But don't wait—this offer is for a limited time only. Get your jar of Noxzema now—at any drug or cosmetic counter.

*externally-caused

"Weathered" skin. Exposure to wind causes Gerry Haynes' only serious skin problem. Says this San Francisco sports enthusiast, "Thanks to Noxzema's help I can enjoy outdoor sports now!"

Blemishes*. "Noxzema is grand for helping to heal minor blemishes*," says Lucille Sheriff of Hyattsville, Md. "It's so refreshing to use, too—leaves my skin feeling soft and so clean!"

MONEY SAVING OFFER ON NOXZEMA

Big 85¢ jar

now only 59¢ plus tax

Limited offer—Stock up now!

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS
H. M. QUEEN M.
YARDLEY, LON

be lovely each day... with Lavender

Surround yourself with Lavender, and feel your charming best the whole day through. Begin with Lavender Soap, rich with fragrance that lasts its lifetime, and kind to your complexion with its luxurious creamy lather. Smooth your skin to a velvet finish with fragrant Lavender Dusting Powder. Then, above all, add the loveliness of Yardley English Lavender, to lend delight to all your daytime doings. Use it generously; make it a part of you.

Yardley English Lavender, from $1.75, plus tax

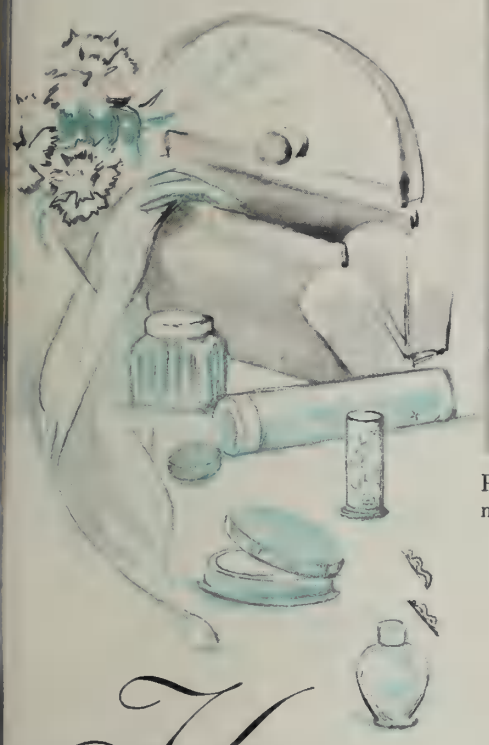
Dusting Powder, $1.50, plus tax

Yardley English Lavender Soap,
$1.35 (box of three)



Bath size, 75c a tablet

YARDLEY

English Lavender

You'll be delighted with the way Yardley English Lavender Soap lathers, and lasts. It has a creamy lather that comes freely, so you use less, and it lathers down to a fine sliver. Made according to a unique and traditional formula, it's generously and skillfully perfumed so it never loses its fragrance. Double-wrapped to treasure this fragrance.

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

PHOTOGRAPH BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Popular Lola Sheppard's consistent good grooming makes her ever ready for her many invitations. Simplicity in her hairdo, make-up and clothes makes it easier.

Keeping up appearances

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN

Beauty Editor of the Journal

"TOO many women create their own emergencies by not getting ready in the morning for what the day might have to offer," says attractive Lola Sheppard. A good morning's start carries Lola serenely through the maze of activities entailed in being a doctor's wife, an active clubwoman, and mother of a young son and daughter. Her morning routine is simple, fast and effective. In twenty minutes she is bathed, brushed, powdered, lipsticked, scented, and dressed in a fresh cotton in time to meet her family at breakfast looking bright and cheerful.

Another prebreakfast ritual is "weighing in." Lola, who is 5′ 7″ tall, has set her ideal weight—for efficiency as well as appearance—at 143 pounds. On occasions when the scale goes above 145 or below 140, she revises her diet accordingly.

She loves to trade an old hairdo for something new and becoming, but insists on a style which doesn't require her constant attention. Her manicuring, eyebrow tweezing, face creaming and clothes repairing are purposely done in the late afternoon or evening to clear the morning decks for action!

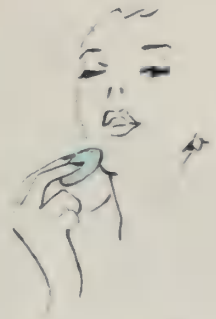
For Lola, or any equally busy housewife, here are some suggestions for facilitating and speeding up beauty routine.

Good-Grooming Favorites. Let them sit prettily on your dressing table for use at home, or tuck them into your purse to travel with you wherever you go.

Tiny, square powder puffs which hold a month's worth of powder inside. To use, just tap the puff on the back of your hand to bring the powder to the surface.

A matchbook-size package of cotton squares pressed into thin, thin sheets. Sturdier than regular tissues, less bulky than cotton, they are used to remove lipstick or nail polish and cost 10 cents.

Face powder in a "pint-size" talcum jar. It allows you an immaculate application each time, and is spillproof for traveling.



Liquid or powder deodorants in squeeze or push-button bottles to spray easily and quickly.

Tinted hand cream to soften, scent and camouflage redness or roughness in one application. Choose a color that blends with your own skin and massage it into your hands just as you would an ordinary cream. Wipe off excess with tissues.

Softening lotion which doubles as a make-up base. Smooth it with your finger tips over your face and neck, blot the excess, powder lightly.

For evening glamour try an eye-shadow brush (companion piece to the lipstick brush) to help you apply your shadow smoothly. Dip the brush in shadow and "draw" the color from the center of the eyelid toward the outer edge.

Eyebrow pencils take on evening jobs. Moisten the pencil point by dipping (Continued on Page 208)

Cotton disks saturated with scented skin astringent are timesavers when you want to freshen make-up without redoing.

Nice for traveling, your guest room, your hostess. Perfumed cotton tablets swell to face-cloth size in warm water.

Take your favorite fragrance with you in the form of a nonspillable stick cologne. This solid scent cools and soothes.

One clip to a curl. For hasty hair setting, use one of the metal clips designed to hold a curl securely all by itself.

A bottle of nail-polish remover with its own brush inside. Dip each finger in, swish against brush—polish is removed!

PHOTO BY HAROLD HOWARD POWLER

Audubon birds supply the theme for the Sheppards' dining room. The cupboards are arranged with Audubon bird plates and a collection of white glaze and milk glass. Conveniently placed side pieces leave plenty of space about the table.

Audubon dining room

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

Until a few weeks ago the Sheppard dining room was just an undistinguished family room with dated furniture and no attempt at special decorations. Both Doctor and Mrs. Sheppard felt that the time had come to create a more pleasant atmosphere and treat themselves to some good, new furniture. They asked for suggestions, and in planning together we chose for our theme—because the Sheppards are a family of bird lovers—the exquisitely beautiful Audubon bird prints. For our theme group, we used two prints of American songbirds centered by the favorite mallard group, which looks exactly like the duck families the Sheppards often see on the shores of their own Minnesota lakes.

Outdoor blue proved an appropriate background for the birds, and the geranium red of the rug and cupboard linings an effective foil for the collection of

(Continued on Page 211)

Live with tomorrow's fashions today.

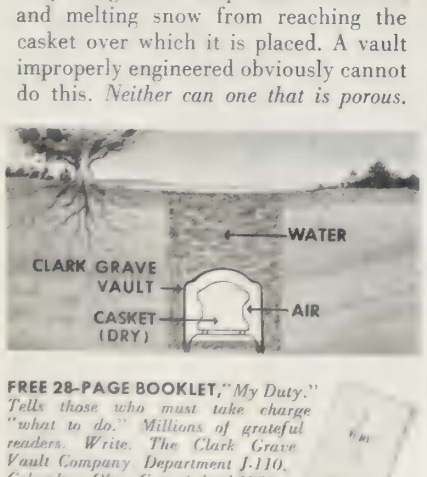
"Forecast Carpets and Rugs" by magee

This is "AVITEX"...a revolutionary new blend, one of Magee's famous carpets-of-tomorrow. Approximately $10 per sq. yd. Slightly higher in some areas.

makes a house a home

Available in Bottle Green (shown), Sharon Rose, Lido Beige, Haze Grey. 27-inch and 9-foot widths.

THE MAGEE CARPET COMPANY • MILLS: BLOOMSBURG, PA.



SHOES BY CAPEZIO

MAKE YOUR OWN DECORATING PLANS; SEND 25¢ FOR FASCINATING "MAGEE ROOM SERVICE KIT" WITH MINIATURE CUT-OUTS, BRUSH AND WATER COLORS

*PEACE OF MIND comes quietly, in many ways, when you have lost someone dear. And, surely, one of them is the assurance that you have provided the finest tribute . . the most trusted protection against water in the ground.

*THE CLARK GRAVE VAULT provides the trusted protection that only a vault of enduring metal can provide. It is scientifically designed to keep water from rain and melting snow from reaching the casket over which it is placed. A vault improperly engineered obviously cannot do this. Neither can one that is porous.

FREE 28-PAGE BOOKLET, "My Duty." Tells those who must take charge "what to do." Millions of grateful readers. Write The Clark Grave Vault Company Department J-110, Columbus, Ohio. Copyrighted 1950.

CLARK GRAVE VAULTS

THE FINEST TRIBUTE . THE MOST TRUSTED PROTECTION

WITH SONGS IN HIS HEART

(Continued from Page 47)

the standards and tastes of his youth is reflected in his lack of any affinity for the occasionally Bohemian ways of the theater. Perhaps one third of his friends are theater people, the others work in various fields of business, professional and creative endeavor. Since he does not care for poker, racing or hard drinking, the conduct of business is for him in the nature of recreation.

There is, however, a more fundamental factor underlying Rodgers' business ability, and that is a store of restless energy which his creative efforts do not nearly consume. The practical reason why he, rather than Hammerstein, carries the major administrative load of their corporate partnership is simply that he has more time. He is one of the fastest and most facile composers who ever lived. Where it may take Hammerstein two or three weeks to complete a single set of lyrics that satisfy his rigorous poetic standards, Rodgers often exudes his loveliest melodies in a matter of minutes. Asked to describe their methods of collaboration, Hammerstein once said, "I simply hand him a lyric and get out of the way."

One evening a few weeks before South Pacific was due to enter rehearsal, several observers had a chance to witness this system in operation. Rodgers was dining with a few friends at the home of Joshua Logan, the director and playwright. Coffee had just been served when Hammerstein arrived, happily waving the completed lyrics to the final song that remained to be written for the show. It was Bali Ha'i.

Rodgers quickly scanned the typewritten verses. Then, pushing his demitasse to one side, he took out a pencil, drew a staff on the paper Hammerstein had given him, and without visible hesitation began writing down notes. Five minutes later he laid down his pencil. The melody for Bali Ha'i was done. Not a note or an accent had to be changed after those first moments of swift creation.

All Rodgers' melodies have come into being with comparable ease and rapidity. Some were born, like Bali Ha'i, without aid of piano. In other circumstances Rodgers simply sits down at the keyboard and without preliminary fingering plays a completed melody as though it had sprung, Athena-like, fully formed from his brow.

While Rodgers and Hammerstein were writing South Pacific, Dick was in bed with a heavy cold. A messenger brought him a lyric which Hammerstein had just completed. Dick knew from experience that Oscar would call him on the phone in about twenty minutes to ask if he had received it. He read Hammerstein's verses, then asked one of his daughters to bring him a pencil and some music-manuscript paper. Exactly twenty minutes later, the phone rang. Of course it was Oscar.

"Did you get the lyric?" he asked.

"Yes, I did."

"Fine," said Oscar. "Now you can start sweating over it."

"I've already stopped sweating," Dick came back. "It's finished."

The song was Happy Talk, one of the show-stoppers in South Pacific.

RODGERS, for all his melodic glibness, is no less painstaking a craftsman than his partner.

To understand the statement that he "wrote" a certain song in five minutes or less, it is necessary first to remember that he is exclusively a theatrical composer, who has never written an independent song—i. e., unrelated to some stage or screen production. He therefore looks on the problem of writing a song as one of finding the right musical approach to a given dramatic situation, and long before he ever begins to compose a melody many of the determining factors have been resolved in his mind.

"A friend once asked me how long it took to compose the whole score of Oklahoma!" he recalled recently. "I said, 'What do you mean, flying time or elapsed time?' Counting everything—overture, ballet music, all the songs—the most I could make it come to was about five hours—flying time. But the total elapsed time covered months of discussion and planning, starting with the over-all conception and then getting down to specific questions like how to bring the chorus on stage and whether to end this or that scene with dialogue or music. So before you can say Oh, What a Beautiful Mornin' was written in three minutes you have to know a little about semantics. By the time Oscar gave me the lyrics and I sat down to the actual business of writing the notes, I already knew all the governing circumstances—the scene, the mood, the singer, the subject and even the fact that it was to be a waltz, a simple little waltz. These things had all been decided.

"So when the three minutes began to tick off, the only problems that remained were in a sense indefinable ones. Something had to be added—it's what you add if you're a good composer. For me, the process of musical composition is a very rapid outpouring. I can't compose note by note, as though I were carving wood—a chip here, a chip there. Lyric writing can be like that, and that's why Oscar needs more time than I do. It may have taken him an hour, for example, to decide that he would start Oh, What a Beautiful Mornin' with 'Oh.' And I have no idea how long it took him to find that wonderfully apt, simple and perfect fourth line, 'Everything's going my way'—a phrase of really great inspiration. Oscar's work is mosaic work. I use a longer stroke, a longer line."

Rodgers is not the sort of composer whose inner ear resounds continually with airy voices. Music never comes to him at unexpected moments—he produces melody only when in quest of it. Yet his swift bursts of creative activity never lead him, as might be expected, into unwitting repetitions of his previous work—or, worse, somebody else's work. More than one interested observer has remarked that this very gift of ever-regenerating invention is the essence of the mysterious thing called genius.

Rodgers' fluency is such that he appears to be almost completely indifferent, when composing, to external circumstances. He once received a set of lyrics as he was leaving his house, read them in a taxicab en route to a rehearsal, and played the finished melody in the orchestra pit of the theater while the performers were reading dialogue on the stage over his head.

"Writing music doesn't tire Dick," says Hammerstein, whose professional habits are the antitheses of Rodgers'. "I'm worn out when I've finished a set of lyrics. But when Dick has ripped off a song he feels wonderful. He's elated, stronger and fresher than when he began"

From time to time people ask Rodgers why, if music comes so easily to him, he doesn't write more of it. "If I wrote all the time," he says, "I suppose I could turn out one song every day, seven songs a week, three hundred and sixty-five songs a year. What would I do with them? Who'd want them?"

His approach to music appears to be so completely pragmatic that casual acquaintances sometimes wonder how much he really enjoys it. He seldom attends concerts, and claims no favorite among academic composers, although he admits a slight preference for the harmonic line of Brahms, Chopin and other romantics to the simpler classical idiom. Rodgers never plays the piano for his own amusement, but will perform by the hour to entertain guests at a party, or when his daughters request it. There is reason to believe, however, that his outer resemblance to a tycoon with a musical hobby is not a whole picture of the truth. His wife testifies that whenever he is stirred powerfully by music, or by one of his sudden flashes of inspiration, his skin contracts into goose pimples.

MARY MARTIN, star of South Pacific, also made some interesting observations during rehearsals. "When he is conducting the orchestra and you see him from the stage," Miss Martin says, "you're looking at another man. The walls are down and you see something of what lies beneath the surface. The expression on his face—it isn't happiness or sadness, but rather an expression of utter tranquillity, of completeness. And you think, here at last are all the things he feels. Here is Richard Rodgers as he really is."

Others have noted that expression: his friend, Josh Logan, once described it as "incandescent."

It is only at such moments that friends occasionally penetrate beneath what one observer has called the "coat of cellophane" he wears in public. He can be moody and unapproachable, and when pondering a problem often seems to withdraw into a secret chamber of his mind, oblivious of everything around him. When his feelings have been hurt by some unexpected criticism or barbed remark, his response of shock and surprise is sometimes violent enough to make him physically ill. Conversely, when he is relaxed, enjoying himself at home with his family or friends, he may be gay and talkative, eloquent on a variety of subjects and often genuinely funny—with a special flair for intricate compound puns.

The only person who can accurately translate Rodgers' inner feelings is his wife, Dorothy. Her influence on his life and work, while quiet, has been consistent and profound. Over and above providing him with a happy home, which he prefers to the after-work distractions that lead many theatrical people to regard midnight as the start of the evening, she has given him an aesthetically satisfying home. The Rodgerses' house at Southport in particular is imbued with a gaiety and grace that never fail to impress callers. But even more valuable to Rodgers' professional life is the intimate role Dorothy plays in his work during his interludes of active creative effort. She is almost always the first auditor of his music, and over the years they have built up their own special code of critical communication. Rodgers knows that when she is really stirred by one of his songs her eyes will fill with tears and she will put her arms around him. If she simply nods approvingly and says "Very good," he knows she dislikes it.

On one subject Rodgers makes no secret of his emotions: he is stage-struck. "I cannot imagine a life without the theater," he once declared. It is probable that irrespective of his contribution to American music, Rodgers' influence upon the American theater will be seriously assessed by future annalists of dramatic art. In the last quarter century the form known as "musical comedy" or "musical play" or plain "musical" has undergone a revolution. Where the musical of the twenties was most often a stylized, disjointed and generally low-brow amalgam of synthetic comedy and bloodless romance, the well-wrought musical play of today—like Oklahoma! and

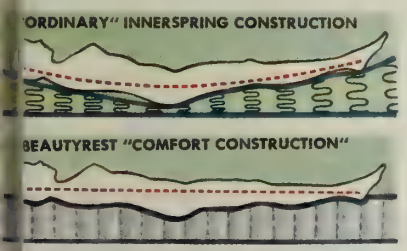
(Continued on Page 196)

The Rose Jar

By Helen Harrington

A woman red-rose sweet and fair
Should not waste upon the air
All her sweetness; for the wind
Will waft it off till it is thinned
To nothing and the stalk is bare.

Farsighted, she should put away
Some petals for a future day
When winter shall have stole her bloom.
Then will her fragrance fill her room
In daughters, young, and fresh, and gay.



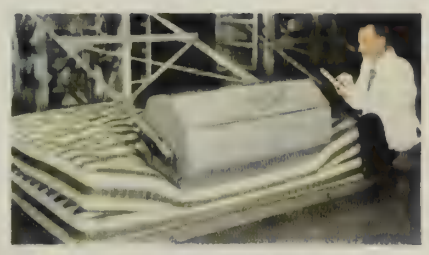
Did you ever think that a day would ever come when you could sleep on the famous Beautyrest* for the price of only three slices of bread a day?

You see, the price tag on Beautyrest reads "$69.50." But Beautyrest is guaranteed for at least 10 years. When you break the price down into 10 years you get $6.95 a year—or less than 2¢ a night. That figures to less than the price of three slices of bread a day!

And what a marvelous mattress you get! A mattress slept on by kings, queens, a President, and people in high places the world over!

Get your Beautyrest mattress today! See your dealer now! (Matching Beautyrest Box Spring also only $69.50.)

YOURS! All yours...the one and only BEAUTYREST ...for the price of three slices of bread a day!



Beautyrest gives you better rest! Note (top) how ordinary mattress lets spine sag. Note (bottom) how Beautyrest mattress gives spine-perfect "Levelized Support." Each of the 837 springs in Beautyrest is in a separate pocket—can't pull others down.

TESTS PROVE BEAUTYREST FIRMEST!

Dr. Taylor

A test that was made recently at the United States Testing Co. by Dr. T. Smith Taylor proved Beautyrest the firmest of ALL mattresses tested. A man was lowered onto heat-treated plastic sheets covering the mattress. When the plastic cooled, the depth his body had sunk into the mattress was measured. Beautyrest proved FIRMEST, the most "levelized" of all.

Beautyrest lasts longer! Torture Tester proves Beautyrest will actually outlast other mattresses. In tests made by the United States Testing Co. with a 275-pound roller, Beautyrest lasted more than TWICE as long as any other mattress tested!

Beautyrest still comfortable after 21 years! "All of my mattresses," says Mrs Lillian B. Marcille of Rochester, N. Y., "are Beautyrest, purchased in 1929 and used steadily with matching box-springs. All are still giving ultimate comfort and luxury."

Only Simmons makes BEAUTYREST

ALSO FROM THE HOUSE OF SIMMONS: Deepsleep* Mattress, Hide-A-Bed,* Babybeauty* Crib Mattress, and Ace* Spring.

*TRADE-MARK REG. U. S. PATENT OFFICE. COPR. 1950 BY SIMMONS CO., MDSE. MART, CHICAGO, ILL.

"Who likes socks that lose their snug fit after a few washings?

"And then sag like sad sacks?

"What a man likes are socks that stay up nice and neat... are easy and quick to get on... and feel comfortable all the time...

"That's why my wife and I agree that all my socks must have tops knit with

Lastex

...the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
1230 Avenue of the Americas • New York 20, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 194)

Carousel—has the unity and emotional substance of so-called legitimate drama.

This revolution began thirty-one years ago when Rodgers met his first great collaborator, the late Lorenz Hart. Then only a high-school junior, Rodgers was already a capable amateur musician and had begun to compose. He had grown up with music about him, though his training was informal and largely self-directed. His mother played the piano, his father liked to sing, and Rodgers recalls with great clarity the first dawning of his musical awareness. The Rodgers house was a typical New York brownstone situated in upper Manhattan a few blocks from the Columbia University campus. The ground floor was given over to Doctor Rodgers' consulting room, waiting room, laboratory and office. The living room was on the second floor, and in this room stood a Steinway upright piano. One day, when Richard was about four years old, his parents came home from the theater with the score of an operetta they had greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Rodgers sat down at the piano, Doctor Rodgers stood beside her and together they went through the score, song by song. That session kindled a fire in young Richard's mind. His elder brother, Mortimer, showed little inclination for music and subsequently followed his father into medicine; he is now one of New York's foremost obstetricians. But Richard, whose head scarcely came to the keyboard, climbed up on the piano stool and tentatively fingered the notes of the songs he had heard his parents sing.

By the time he was six, he was playing fluently with both hands. At twelve he was spending hours daily at the piano and had begun to elaborate on themes and improvise in an imitative way. At fourteen, while attending a summer camp in Maine, he composed his first song: Campfire Days. Indifferent to sports and schoolwork, he spent his allowance each week on gallery seats for Saturday matinees. "My week used to begin at two-thirty on Saturday afternoon," he recalled years afterward, "and it ended a little after five when the final curtain fell."

When Rodgers was fifteen he wrote his first complete score—for an amateur show put on by a boys' athletic club in behalf of the New York Sun's cigarette fund for American soldiers in France. The show was presented in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Plaza before a large and dressy audience; Rodgers conducted the orchestra.

The following year he met two young men who were to be closely associated with him in the future. One was Herbert Fields, son of the great comedian Lew Fields; the other was Lorenz Hart. Fields was five years older than Rodgers; Hart, seven years older, had already graduated from Columbia with the class of '16. He was a strange and tragic personality. The younger son of an indulgent mother (whom he once described as a "sweet, menacing old lady"), he was gnomish in appearance, barely five feet in height, with a head that seemed too large for his frail body to sustain. Brilliant, intellectual, a German scholar, and a superlatively agile versifier with a talent for inventive rhyming approached by no one else since W. S. Gilbert, he was also bitter, sardonic and unstable, given to alternating moods of noisy gaiety and black despair. His tragedy was that this instability increased rather than lessened with the unfolding of his talent and fame.

RODGERS and Hart shook hands for the first time with a single idea in mind. Rodgers needed a lyric writer; Hart needed a composer. Their collaboration began immediately, and a few months later one of their songs was purchased and used in a now-forgotten musical called A Lonely Romeo. The song itself, Any Old Place With You, is memorable today chiefly because it is probably the only song ever written by a sixteen-year-old boy to land in a professional Broadway show. A few months later Rodgers entered Columbia with the class of '23 and promptly submitted a complete score in the annual Varsity Show competition. Although no freshman had ever before won this contest, Rodgers' score was selected for production. One of the judges happened to be a member of the class of '16 named Oscar Hammerstein II, who had only recently abandoned law school for the stage. Hart wrote the lyrics to Rodgers' music in accordance with a Varsity Show tradition permitting alumni to participate; Fields devised the dances. The product of their collaboration, Fly With Me, received serious notices in the New York newspapers. "From that moment on," a mutual friend recalls, "Larry simply waited for Dick to grow up and graduate from college."

As it turned out, there was no need for him to wait. For Lew Fields had seen Fly With Me and liked the songs so well that he decided to discard the score of a musical on which he was then at work and incorporate Rodgers' tunes. Hart rewrote the lyrics to fit the new script, and that summer Rodgers had the satisfaction of hearing his score performed on Broadway. The show, called The Poor Little Ritz Girl, proved to be a hit.

Rodgers spent one more year at Columbia, during which he collaborated with Hart on another Varsity Show. At the end of his sophomore year he left college—somewhat to the distress of his parents—and entered the Institute of Musical Art (now combined with the Juilliard School of Music), where he put in the next three years studying harmony, theory, musicology, ear training, composition, and other constituents of the formal musical education that was to enrich his inborn talent. Between classes he continued to write shows

One day a visitor arrived in the home of Leonard Liebling, editor of Musical Courier, just as the family was about to sit down to dinner. Mr. Liebling, annoyed at such thoughtless timing, had the maid ask the guest to wait. After an unhurried meal, Mr. Liebling greeted his friend. "Sorry to keep you waiting," he said, "but we always eat at seven."

"That's what I thought," the friend replied, "when you invited me to dinner tonight."

—ABRAHAM MANDELSTAM.

with Hart and Fields, but only one of these reached Broadway: The Melody Man, which they offered under the joint pseudonym, Herbert Richard Lorenz, and which was remarkable only for the presence in the company of a then unknown juvenile named Fredric March. Their other efforts were rejected by every producer in New York. Frustrated and unhappy, Rodgers and Hart offered their services to schools, clubs, churches, charitable institutions, and wrote and staged amateur shows by the dozen without any compensation.

After five years of this—three at the Institute, and two more afterward—Rodgers was ready to give up. Most of his relatives felt the time had come for him to find a job and earn a living. Doctor Rodgers was not among these. His sympathy filled Rodgers with a gratitude that never waned, and until Doctor Rodgers died last year at the age of seventy-seven, their relationship was distinguished by a warmth of mutual friendship and devotion.

In the spring of 1925, when Rodgers had reached the depth of discouragement, a man he knew recommended him for a $50-a-week job with—of all things—a babies'-underwear concern. It goes without saying that this proposal didn't attract the young composer in the least, but still he was tempted to accept the offer. He was thoroughly tired of writing music without compensation and, besides, he was in debt to the extent of $100, borrowed $5 at a time from a friend to stretch his allowance, which didn't enable him to take young ladies dancing as often as he liked.

"The man who tried to get me the underwear job," Rodgers told a friend not long ago, "was the very fellow I owed the money to. No fool he!"

That evening he had about decided to accept the offer, when the telephone rang. The caller was a patient of his father's, a theatrical lawyer, who wanted to know i Richard would care to put together a little revue for some talented young people. Rodgers replied despondently that he was through with amateur shows and was starting work next day in the babies'-underwear line.

"That's too bad," the lawyer said regretfully. "The Theater Guild will be disappointed."

"What was that?" Rodgers yelled into the phone.

The words "Theater Guild," he said afterward, "were like an alarm to a fire horse." The lawyer explained that the Guild, to raise money for decorations in its newly built theater, had decided to let some of its young extras and understudies put on an informal Sunday-night musical show. Early the next morning Rodgers retired from babies' underwear and went back to work with Hart.

THE "little revue" they wrote made theater history and launched Rodgers and Hart on a fifteen-year period of creative effort that was to affect the whole character of the American musical stage. Public response to their Sunday revue proved so vehement that it was promoted to full-time status at the Garrick Theater, where, billed as The Garrick Gaieties, it ran for a full year.

As a matter of fact, the original Sunday-night benefit of The Garrick Gaieties was given to raise money for a pair of large tapestries that were to be draped from the boxes of the new Guild Theater. The tapestries hung in the theater for years and to this day enliven the walls of Theater Guild headquarters in West 53rd Street, New York.

A good many years after the days of the Gaieties, Rodgers and Hart attended a Guild opening. Larry nudged Dick.

"Look at those tapestries," said Hart. "We were responsible for them."

"No!" said Rodgers. "They were responsible for us."

The momentum generated by this first success led Rodgers and Hart immediately into one of the brightest seasons of their entire careers. Barely three months after the opening of The Garrick Gaieties they brought forth Dearest Enemy, which they had written with Herbert Fields two years earlier and tried in vain to get produced. This, too, ran for a year and introduced one of the most popular and long-lived of all their songs: Here in My Arms. The following spring came The Girl Friend, with several hits, including the durable and still captivating Blue Room; and soon afterward The Second Garrick Gaieties, with Mountain Greenery.

At the age of twenty-three Rodgers thus had three hit shows running simultaneously on Broadway. Even then his self-discipline was such that sudden success had no apparent effect on his temperament or way of life.

"I didn't do anything silly," he admitted years afterward. His only material indulgence was the purchase of a LaSalle coupe with a red body and a black hood.

Then he embarked for London with Hart and wrote a musical (Lido Lady) for British consumption. For Rodgers the trip was chiefly important because during the homeward voyage on the Majestic his eye was caught by a lovely golden-haired girl of seventeen who was returning with her parents from a vacation tour of Europe.

Rodgers had known Dorothy Feiner since her early childhood, but their age difference was such that it was not until now, when she was out of school and en route to her freshman year at Wellesley, that he took his first serious look at her. He waited till the end of her sophomore year. Then the distance between Massachusetts and New York became too great for them. Dorothy left college and they were married in 1930.

In moments of retrospection Rodgers sees his professional career divided into three chapters. The first chapter began with The Garrick Gaieties and ended with an unfortunate trip to Hollywood six years later. In this period he and Hart—usually in collaboration with Herbert Fields—turned out a dozen shows which set new standards of theatrical taste. In revolt against the prevailing mediocrity, Hart poured forth polysyllabi

(Continued on Page 198)

After 25 —— Beware of Dry Skin

Drying begins to show first in the places pictured below. See how best to help correct it!

After 25 every woman ought to use her mirror with a more critical eye.

From 25 on, the natural oil that keeps skin soft, smooth and pliant, starts decreasing. Before 40, skin may lose as much as 20% of its own oil.

But you can help offset this drying out—by giving your skin an oil especially suited to its needs. You can use a dry skin cream that is extra-rich in lanolin, which is very like the oil of the skin itself—this special cream is Pond's Dry Skin Cream.

See its effects on your skin. Work it in thoroughly for night softening. Use it lightly for a smooth look under make-up. It brings your skin a softer, fresher, younger look immediately.

t on your Cheeks dryness is often noticed; little y "dry-skin" patches can spoil your make-up.

Correct—Work into your cheeks nightly plenty of d's Dry Skin Cream. Swirl its softening help from chin- up in front of ears. This lanolin-rich cream is homo- zed to soak in better. Use a light film of this special m under your make-up for day softening, also.

Under your Lower Lip—little dry "puckers" tighten, make your mouth look "set" and older.

To Relax—Always at bedtime help supple this dry skin with Pond's Dry Skin Cream, smoothing this soft cream in well from the center of your lip out and up to each corner. This lanolin-rich cream helps soften those little puckers, helps relax that tightness caused by dryness.

Around your Eyes, on Eyelids—dry "crow's-feet" come, and skin takes on a dark "crinkled" look.

To "Uncrinkle" Dry Lines—Never skip nightly help with lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream. Finger-tap this soft-as-satin cream very lightly around your eyes. Leave on lids all night. A special emulsifier makes it extra-softening. Leave a little on eyelids during day, too.

your Nose and Mouth—skin tenseness and "down- s" harden your expression.

Help Soften—"Knuckle in" softening, smoothing d's Dry Skin Cream. Use knuckles of first fingers to ad this lanolin-rich cream in firmly—out and up from trils and mouth. See that "dry skin" tense look soften.

Between your Eyebrows—tiny, dry lines etch in.

To Smooth Down—Use lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream regularly every night at bedtime to give your dry skin more of the softening, soothing oil it needs. Circle the cream on generously, making firm, quick little circles up between your eyes—out over your eyebrows to your temples.

Along your Chin-Line—you don't want that matronly-looking sagging to start.

To Tone Up—Use thumb and first finger of each hand and "pinch along" from point of chin to ear with lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream. This treatment brings circulation up, and gives this skin the rich lubrication it needs.

MRS. CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, JR., says: "It's truly a wonderful help for dry skin! Pond's Dry Skin Cream is so rich, yet soft and creamy, too—gives the extra softening dry skin needs."

LA COMTESSE ALAIN DE LA FALAISE says: "Always it amazes me how quickly Pond's Dry Skin Cream softens skin that feels dry or a bit roughened. I think it is a masterpiece."

Start this truly remarkable correction of Dry Skin Today!

89¢—49¢—29¢—10¢ (plus tax)

How to Save Money and

Bird Armorlite Rug #6384

have Bright, Beautiful Floors that are

Bird Armorlite Yard Goods #3403

Wonderfully Easy to Clean!

BUY the new BIRD ARMORLITE Floor Coverings . . . that's the best way! You'll find clearer, brighter colors than ever before . . . designs and patterns for every room, every color scheme you have in mind — in rugs or by the yard for wall to wall coverage at low cost! ✦ ARMORLITE'S easy to keep sparkling clean, too . . . the resilient enamel surface (on a waterproof felt base) sheds dirt and wears wonderfully — the best buy you can find for lovely floors that are easy to care for! At floor covering, furniture and department stores everywhere.

BIRD Rugs and Floor Coverings

BIRD A BIRD PRODUCT

ARMORLITE · LINOLEUM
LINOLEUM TILE · RUBBERLIKE RUG BORDER

(Inc. 1795) EAST WALPOLE, MASS.

Also Manufacturers of Bird Master-Bilt Shingles and Insulating Sidings

(Continued from Page 196)

rhymes, interior rhymes, multiple rhymes, allusions, symbols and literary conceits. "The Garrick Gaieties," Cole Porter has observed, "was the first musical show outside of Gilbert and Sullivan where people listened to lyrics." In his own domain Rodgers employed a melodic line no less rich and varied.

Perfectly fused in mood and rhythm, in verbal and harmonic expression, the songs of Rodgers and Hart achieved the unity of a single artistic utterance. The titles of their productions in this initial chapter—Peggy Ann, Present Arms, Spring is Here—stir sentimental memories in those who knew New York in the 'twenties. The best of them, A Connecticut Yankee, won international acclaim and was revived on Broadway and screened in Hollywood in later years. But even more enduring than the shows themselves were the songs that came from them. To this day young Americans who were born long after the lights were darkened and the last curtain lowered on these hits of twenty years ago continue to sing Where's That Rainbow?, Thou Swell, My Heart Stood Still, You Took Advantage of Me, With a Song in My Heart, Dancing on the Ceiling, Yours Sincerely, I've Got Five Dollars, and Ten Cents a Dance.

It was inevitable as their songs floated westward across the plains and prairies that they would eventually strike the ear of Hollywood. And inevitably Hollywood's reaction was an irresistible offer.

"For twelve solid months I was under contract to a certain studio," Rodgers recalled recently, "and they let me write six songs. I'm not bitter about a thing except the fact that I was completely disconnected from my work. I was leading the life of a retired banker. That's no life for a thirty-two-year-old fellow. As a result I got sick—I developed a real chronic indigestion which still bothers me from time to time."

> The water is shallowest where it babbles.
> —WELSH PROVERB.

Their stay in Hollywood was not altogether unfruitful, however, for it was there they wrote Isn't it Romantic?, Mimi, Lover, and Blue Moon.

"The thing that finally terrified me," Rodgers relates, "was picking up the Los Angeles Examiner one day and seeing a little item in O. O. McIntyre's column. It was just one sentence: 'What ever became of Rodgers and Hart?' That really made my head jerk. I sat right down and wrote him a letter, thanking him and telling him we were getting out of Hollywood as fast as we could. The day our contract was up we climbed aboard The Chief and came back to the United States."

The second chapter of Rodgers' career began with his grateful return to Broadway; it spanned the 'thirties and ended with Hart's untimely breakdown and death in 1943. But before this tragic end to one of the great working friendships of theater history they demonstrated that the musical stage held resources beyond any revealed either by the Viennese school of operetta or even by grand opera, whose dramatic aims are for the most part defeated by its own conventions.

THEIR first job, after returning from Hollywood, was Jumbo, Billy Rose's colossal synthesis of circus and song at the old Hippodrome. Then in quick sequence came On Your Toes, a satire on Russian ballet; Babes in Arms, a gay and bubbling story of precocious youngsters in economic straits; The Boys from Syracuse, an adaptation of Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors; I Married an Angel, a fantasy about an authentic but tangible angel on earth; and Pal Joey, a dark and sardonic study of an unscrupulous hoofer. Over and above their variety, these shows were notable in other respects. On Your Toes, for example, was the first popular musical to employ ballet as an implement of plot development, drama and satirical humor, thus paving the way for the great development of this medium in Oklahoma! and its successors in the 1940's. Adorning all these productions, lighting them like spangles on a fabric, were new constellations of ever-fresh and evocative songs: Small Hotel; Whe When; The Lady is a Tramp; Johnny Note; My Funny Valentine; This Can Love; Sing for Your Supper; Bewit Bothered and Bewildered (which rec enjoyed a tremendous new boom); a Could Write a Book. And most notew of all, Slaughter on Tenth Avenue, the intermezzo from On Your Toes, which re sented Rodgers' first attempt at susta abstract composition and today still out in sheet music, everything Rodgers w during his entire partnership with Hart

BENEATH the quickening tempo of t success, unknown to all but their cl friends, a personal tragedy was meanw unfolding. With the passing years Hart become more and more erratic and unst From the first he had been a fitful wor breaking appointments, disappearing w out warning for days at a time. Ther some question if any of their later sh would have come into being had Rodgers first completed his score, then corralled H held him in custody, and begged, wheed and worked with him while he wrote.

Hart was a lonely man, a bachelor, lived an unquiet and disorganized life. Se tivity about his height led him to employ vious measures of self-assertion, like wea built-up shoes and smoking big cigars. H also drank heavily—far too heavily for health of mind or body. Yet along with eccentricities, he had generosity and a ceptible heart, and for these qualities as as for his coruscating wit he was greatly li by all who knew him well.

"Dick wasn't just a partner to Larry, friend recalled recently. "He was more lik father to him, and at end he was also a kind guardian and nurse."

The last complete sh they did together was Jupiter, and most of t was written in a hospi where Hart was a patie at the time. To fulfill their contract Rodg took a room in the hospital, too, brought a piano, and stayed there working day af day until the job was done.

In the fall of 1942 the Theater Guild ask Rodgers if he and Hart would be interest in undertaking a piece of Americana. T proposal was specific: the Guild want Rodgers and Hart to adapt Lynn Riggs' pl Green Grow the Lilacs for the musical sta Rodgers read the play and enthusiastica agreed to go ahead with the Guild's id But when the time came to begin work, Ha balked. Pleading that he felt debilitate which was undoubtedly true, he announc his intention of going to Mexico for a f weeks' holiday. Rodgers begged him, as reasonable alternative, to enter some near convalescent home. Hart refused. Declari he didn't think much of the project anyw and advising Rodgers to find himself a other lyricist, he left for Mexico.

In this emergency Rodgers turned to t fellow Columbian and fraternity brother w had voted for his score in the Varsity Sh competition of 1919. At this particular m ment Oscar Hammerstein, too, happened be at a crossroads in his career. Following series of huge successes when, in collaborati with various composers, he had written Ro Marie, Show Boat, The Desert Song a other major hits, he had unaccountab slumped.

"What happened between Oscar and r was almost chemical," Rodgers recalled a erward. "Put the right two components t gether and an explosion takes place. Osc and I hit it off from the day we began d cussing the show. For one thing, I needed little calm in my life after twenty-three he tic years. When Oscar would say, 'I'll me you at two-thirty,' he was there at tw thirty! That had never happened to m before. But those were just the exte nals. The important thing is what we ga each other creatively. The very first ly Oscar finished was Oh, What a Beautif Mornin', and when he handed it to me and read it for the first time I was a little sic ew! A wet mop that keeps hands dry!

(Continued on Page 201)

The O-Cedar Sponge Mop ends wringing! It's the most revolutionary household help since the vacuum cleaner!

You simply press the water out of the O-Cedar Sponge Mop with the handy built-in squeezer. No more wringing! Your hands stay dry. No need for rubber gloves... no awkward extra attachments on your scrub bucket.

Your hands stay clean, soft, smooth! Now you can use the strongest soaps, the hottest water—without harming your hands. With an O-Cedar Sponge Mop your hands stay lovelier looking because they need never touch water.

You get floors cleaner! O-Cedar's exclusive "wonder working angle" forces mop head to grip the surface, scrub out stubborn dirt. Thirsty cellulose fibres leave floors dry enough to wax only minutes after mopping.

Already proved in practical use in more than a million American homes!

- Beautiful, rust-resistant chrome finish.
- Finest quality cellulose sponge—can't come loose.
- Detachable sponge head—easily sterilized by boiling.
- Full 48 inch handle—reaches high and low.

WRITTEN 5 YEAR GUARANTEE with every O-Cedar Sponge Mop. (Covers everything but replaceable sponge head.) See your O-Cedar Sponge Mop dealer this week for full details.

O-Cedar

Sponge Mop $3.95

complete

At dealers near you now. Extra sponge refills—$1.49

O-Cedar

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

O-Cedar Corp'n
Chicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd.
Toronto, Canada

Scotties* are softies!

Scotties are thrifties too

Here is a cleansing tissue the whole family wi are soft and snowy white yet they have the 2-way st for practical family use. You can "blow" into Scotties—pieces. Scotties don't crumble when you remove make-up how economical they are for children, grownups when you con

* another tissue by Scott that's "soft as o

"Scotties," "Soft as o

(Continued from Page 198)

because it was so lovely and so right. ou're given words like 'The corn is as in elephant's eye,' you get something usically."

irst product of their reciprocal in- opened in New York on March 31, id played for 2246 consecutive per- es—a period of over five years, the run ever achieved by any musical the history of the theater. Oklahoma! ecords in every realm of statistical son. Eight million people saw it—an ever attended a musical play any- n the world. It won literary and c awards, including a citation from itzer Prize Committee. Its cumu- ross receipts ran high into eight But more important to Rodgers over-all artistic verdict: critics and like agreed that Oklahoma! had out to be just what its authors had make it—a piece of Americana, yrical, sunny and undoubtedly des- occupy an enduring place in the theatrical heritage.

te the enormous success of his first with Hammerstein, Rodgers did not is breach with Hart as a permanent r did Hart, following his return from show any trace of envy or jealousy riumph his old friend had enjoyed him. Rodgers, nevertheless, felt a regret, which, combined with his concern for his friend's well-being, to seek a new idea on which he and uld go back to work immediately. He everted to a suggestion he had con- ed many times in previous years: a of A Connecticut Yankee. Rodgers d several new songs; and Hart, ap- enthusiastic and in good spirits, ew lyrics. Thus revised and modern- Connecticut Yankee opened to good on a Wednesday night in the autumn . The following Monday Hart was ndered away for the last time during ning scene of the première. Restless, ys, he had declined a seat and re- in the rear of the theater, pacing up vn. People seated in the back rows m muttering to himself. Then he dis- d, and when the final curtain fell he where to be found. No one ever saw scious again. He did not go home that r the next, and it was not until Fri- t he was found sprawled alone and d in a hotel room. An ambulance im to a hospital where it was obvious that he was dying of pneumonia. No r learned where he had strayed or had done during the two days follow- disappearance from the theater. Al- penicillin—which had just been dis- and was still extremely rare—was l through the personal intercession Eleanor Roosevelt, Hart's illness was advanced to be allayed.

Monday night Rodgers and his wife tting outside Hart's room when 's air-raid sirens began screaming al for a blackout. The hospital lights t, activities ceased, and the corridor dark and silent. Through the still- e oxygen pump gurgled steadily in room. Then footsteps came down l, a deeper shadow moved in the and a doctor went inside. A few moments passed. Then the doctor l and stood over Rodgers. "He's the doctor said. Soon afterward the gnaled All Clear and lights flashed on out the city.

fter twenty-four years of sustained lliant creative endeavor the famous Rodgers and Hart dissolved and gave the new and even more felicitous ship of Rodgers and Hammerstein. first time in their lives each found united with a collaborator of ible tastes and temperament. Like s, Hammerstein is a self-disciplined whom artistic talent is abetted by a f responsibility. "He is a dreamer," s remarked not long ago, "but a very dreamer." Unlike Hart and like Rodgers, Hammerstein has no Bohemian inclinations. He, too, is happily married, enjoys his children, likes to spend week ends in the country (on his self-sustaining dairy farm near Doylestown, Pennsylvania), drinks lightly, does not smoke, and believes firmly that daytime is the best time. "I guess I've never been young enough to enjoy night clubs," he says. More advantageous to both, however, than this concord of personal habits is their happy co-ordination of working habits.

Hammerstein, who has always preferred to write his lyrics before the music, had yielded throughout his career to previous collaborators (Jerome Kern, Sigmund Romberg and others) who liked to create their melodies first. Conversely, Rodgers, who prefers to set his music to finished lyrics, had necessarily adapted himself to the dilatory ways of Hart, who seldom would write a word until the entire score was done. These basic differences in method are reflected in the songs themselves. Hart's primary concern was with form and manner—with how he said something rather than with what he actually said. Hammerstein, a more philosophical and romantic man, is essentially concerned with the content of his songs and thus likes to be free to

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Childless Mother: Her Song

By Elizabeth McFarland

I sing of all forsaken things—
Torn twigs, rent clouds, disheveled wings,
Tired leaves adrift on autumn's floor,
And letters yellowing in a drawer;
The worm evicted from the rind,
The lamp that in the wind goes blind.

I sing of dreams and treasures lost,
Of all young hope that braves the frost;
Stars locked behind embedded skies,
And little lonely children's cries:
Lacking my own, each child endears;
Nor all the world could dry my tears.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

phrase them as he will without reference to a fixed musical pattern.

Thus perfectly paired in all departments, the talents of both Rodgers and Hammerstein matured and flowered. It was evident in Oklahoma! and still more obvious in the productions that followed it—Carousel, Allegro, State Fair (a motion picture) and South Pacific—that Rodgers' music had attained a new fullness and emotional depth. Each show had its individual hits; among them If I Loved You; What's the Use of Wond'rin'?; You'll Never Walk Alone; A Fellow Needs a Girl; It Might as Well be Spring; and finally the famous South Pacific songs, which, by all gauges of public favor, including sheet-music and record sales, have in a single year already eclipsed Oklahoma! and all else Rodgers or any other composer has ever written in the entire annals of the American musical theater.

To extend their concepts into every phase of dramatic expression, Rodgers and Hammerstein formed their own producing firm. As their experience enlarged they began producing plays by other authors, and soon proved as successful in this realm as in the purely creative field.

The producing firm of Rodgers and Hammerstein customarily stages the pre-Broadway tryouts of its plays in Boston. The partners like the city, they like the Ritz and, above all, they like the sympathetic and constructive attitude of the Boston drama critics—an invaluable help to a play or musical, in its formative stage, that is headed for a New York première.

"I wouldn't open anything except in Boston," Rodgers said the other day. "Not even a can of tomatoes."

In a business usually regarded as a turbulent one, the firm of Rodgers and Hammerstein is something of an anomaly. Where the offices of many producers are overrun with litter and short tempers, the newly leased R. &. H. suite on New York's Madison Avenue presents a trim and efficient if occasionally hurried aspect to visiting strangers. A reporter from a Western newspaper who came to New York recently on an assignment, posing as an unemployed actor, wrote after making the rounds of various theatrical offices that he received the most sympathetic treatment at the Rodgers & Hammerstein headquarters. Its atmosphere is especially designed to encourage unknown and timid applicants. Rodgers translates this policy to his own demeanor at auditions.

"He is gentle and kind to everybody," says librettist Dorothy Fields. "If some kid gets up and sings half of Aida he will sit there and listen respectfully and never wave him away or walk out. Dick and Oscar have put a quality of humanity in the theater. When they hire people they protect them and take an interest in their personal affairs. I don't think a producing firm like that ever existed before."

RODGERS specifically disavows any long-range aspiration to write purely formal, self-contained music.

"I'm a commercial-theater kid," he says. "It may enlarge my vanity to hear Koussevitzky conduct the Boston Symphony in The Carousel Waltz, or go to an all-Rodgers concert at the Lewisohn Stadium. It's also very nice when a good-looking actress flirts with you at a party. But you don't want to live with her. You want to go home to the girl you married." Rodgers also shrugs off suggestions that he has achieved any kind of immortality. "I don't write for posterity," he declares. Posterity may be glad to know, however, that provision has been made to preserve the original manuscripts of all his songs, along with other important American compositions, in the library of the Juilliard School.

Rodgers' friends agree that next to his apparently inexhaustible reserves of musical inspiration, his most striking characteristic is his personal immutability. Those who knew him at Columbia and earlier insist that he appears unaltered by the passing years or success or wealth or the growing up of his children. Today he is just about the same fellow: his hair is graying, but he still has all of it; he weighs a little more, but not very much more; and the same cool intellect still governs his behavior.

Hammerstein recently recalled an incident which first revealed to him a little of Rodgers' inner nature. At a party immediately following the opening performance of Oklahoma! someone in a group surrounding Rodgers and congratulating him on his obviously enormous hit remarked, "Well, you certainly ought to get drunk tonight." He replied, "I don't want to get drunk. I want to feel this."

What he feels, however, he habitually hides beneath the armor of casual materialism he puts on each morning with his pin-stripe suit. Only his family and closest friends are ever aware how easily he can be hurt, how keenly he can enjoy the good things that happen to him, how profoundly he may be stirred by a passage of music, or how apprehensive he may be on an opening night of one of his shows. Yet every once in a while he reveals a fleeting symptom of his supreme, governing emotion—a rapturous infatuation with every branch, twig and sprig of show business.

"Just the other afternoon," he confessed to a friend recently, "I was walking down Broadway when I passed a billboard with a big picture of Mary Martin. And I thought to myself, 'Gosh, Mary's a swell girl. I'm so glad I know her. What's more, she's not only a swell girl, she's a big star. Just think, I know Mary Martin, and she's a big star in a Broadway show.' And then all of a sudden I stopped short and asked myself, 'Whose show? My show!'"

THE END

You sleep, too, when he goes Pullman

Ask him to GO PULLMAN

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE AND - ABOVE ALL - SAFE!

RAILROAD TRAVEL AT ITS BEST

©1950, THE PULLMAN COMPANY

Avon's gift window* is coming to your home

Avon presents an exceptional group of cosmetics and toiletries, distinctively packaged and modestly priced for Christmas giving. Obtainable only through your Avon Representative.

...Welcome her when she calls.

* Like a show window — this fairyland of glittering Christmas gifts is now being shown by the Avon Representative in your community.

Avon COSMETICS

IN RADIO CITY, NEW YORK

©

EVERY SUNDAY MORNING

(Continued from Page 65)

departure, before I am fully awake. l the time I am listening, too, and ng the clock on my desk. Ten-thirty . . . ty-five . . . fifty-five. I am on the point ng when David's door suddenly opens, stumbles sleepily through the hall. I ever known him to fail her, but still he her in front of the church, and comes or breakfast and a shave.

that you, David?"

s." He knocks and brings in the g papers.

e been waiting for these." His father and props himself higher. "Take randmother to church?"

id nods, his young face still creased leep. "I'm going to pick her up at -thirty."

the signal for me to rise. Dressed in and a long-sleeved blouse, I pass my r's room without really looking. Though ways makes her bed, I know the evi- I should find—the sprinkling of powder of her dresser, the white hairpins and et. There might even be strands of her avy hair, and for some reason I cannot o see them.

n quickly down the sun-flooded stairs, nto the kitchen. But once inside the I stop. She has left her cup and plate in nk. The water from the faucet drips on them with a curiously empty sound. e them aside, and brush some shreds of real from the breakfast table. She has ree places—the ice water is made, the e juice squeezed; and in front of the pot there is a brief, scrawled note: ing—please leave the dishes until I home."

as happened week after week, and each I wad the paper in my hand, and go with the muffins. But no matter how they are—how crisp the waffles or ers—I never have much appetite for ay breakfast. My husband and son pre- o enjoy it—the three of us sip and read gth, and afterward I wash every dish. ighten the living room, too, and there clock in our living room, but at twelve- y-five, as if a gong had been struck, I nse for the sound of the car.

David?"

m just leaving, mother."

y upstairs, and into her room. It is all now; I can finish the little things , in her haste, my mother has left un-the dresser stand three little pictures ll gilt frames. They are arranged like a uard of perpetual innocence—my own ly forward, since I am the oldest, my 's set back a few inches, my brother's All of them were taken when we were ore than five. They face the bed where other sleeps, and in their round, solemn there is no hint of questioning. They to reflect my mother's faith, and noth- earth can shake it. Though my brother d, now, and neither my sister nor I have ed that first promise, my mother's life l one of service, and she prays on her every night.

RE than once I have gone to her room, ootsteps intentionally deadened, some siness drawing me . . . I don't know. I stepped through the doorway to find nother on her knees, her face concealed een outstretched arms, the shining plait ir lying motionless between her thin ders. I stand there for a minute, looking at her; I glance at my brother's pic- and I think, Next Sunday I will go to h with her. It is such a little thing, and are only two of us, now. I will go to please other.

hink this as I straighten her room and for the car. It is early spring. The trees de are a bright, stabbing green, and all retty things with which my sister and I thought to delight her catch the sun and how mock me. There is, among them, heap little paperweight on her book- es. A replica of a cathedral shines up through the glass—each window and dome is inlaid with iridescent mother-of-pearl. My sister and I found it in a secondhand store near New York. I was visiting her there, and my suitcase was already half filled with gifts we had bought for my mother. We had just finished choosing a garnet brooch which both of us knew would mean nothing.

"I don't care—I want her to have it," my sister said, and she laughed as if this sense of failure—this inability to thrill my mother with material things—had been a kind of challenge. Still, it was she who found the paperweight half buried under a pile of broken trinkets. I am not sure I would have seen it at all, but my sister's hand suddenly plunged down, and came up with the spired cathedral. "How quaint," she said. "Let's take it to the light."

We tilted it back and forth, and bought it for a quarter. In the confusion of unpacking, I forgot the cathedral until the very last.

"And here's an old paperweight we found in a junk shop, mother."

"Oh," she said, and for some reason I had to drop my eyes. I don't mean that she cried out, or even seemed excited. But later on that afternoon, I found her turning the glass disk in her hand. She was sitting by the window, and her hair framed her face like burnished silver. "I'll bet you didn't see this," she said, smiling.

I bent down. "What?"

"This little star," she said. "Look, when it catches the light."

Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. —MATTHEW 7:16–20.

"Unh-hunh." I straightened abruptly. "That's just an imperfection," I said. "Just a trick of the imagination."

"No," said my mother, "it's right over the church spire, darling. You can see it very plainly."

I laughed and patted her shoulder. "All right, it's a star," I said, yet I had seen it too.

I see it every Sunday morning when I straighten her room, and always my eyes slide past.

Twenty-five cents, I think, and she likes it better than anything in this room. Only the pictures mean more to her, and the Bible, frayed on the edges. I pick it up from the floor by her chair. Is it my fault? I cry silently. Haven't I done the best I could? Going to church is not the only answer—it's what you are, and believe.

Then there is the sound of an approaching motor, and I unconsciously drop what I am doing, and run.

I am nearly always reading in the living room when my mother comes up from the basement garage. It is my way of hiding from myself, more than from her. Elaborately casual, I glance up from the paper, and something inside of me contracts. Is it just my imagination, or are her eyes faintly bleak? There she stands, trim and slender as a girl. Every spun-silver hair is brushed in place, she is smiling. But it seems to me that I can detect some weariness about her—something lonely and asking—and the roots of my tongue begin to ache. Instantly, I point to the bulletin she holds—I am ready to blame the church.

"Well," I ask, "how was everything today?"

She looks at me, as if puzzled. "Fine," she says. "It was really a beautiful service. Why?"

"Nothing. You seem rather tired."

"I'm all right. I just didn't sleep quite so well as usual last night."

"Then you shouldn't have gone to church!" I say harshly. "Good heavens, mother, it wouldn't hurt you to miss one Sunday."

Her answer is quiet. "I know that, but I feel perfectly all right." She begins to take off her hat. "I begged David not to come back for me," she says. "It's such a nice day. I would have enjoyed the walk."

In that instant I see her doing this—hurrying out ahead of the others, as she does when she is alone. I know those wide stone steps, how empty they look ahead of the crowd, and cold in the sunlight. I can see my mother walking down them, with one hand on the iron railing, the other clutching her bulletin. I know how rapidly she would walk until she reached the corner, her step slowing then, for she tires more quickly since my brother's death, though her back is straighter than mine.

"I've kept the coffee hot for you," I say aloud. "Go and drink a cup, mother. Eat something too. For pity's sake, you're getting so thin."

From his lounging chair on the sun porch, Phil looks in at me and turns his paper. "What makes you so cross on Sundays?" he asks, when she has left. "Must be your conscience bothering you."

"My conscience!" I laugh. "What about yours?"

"I always go to church with my mother."

But you only see her once or twice a year! I do not say it aloud, for what is the use of reminding him? Besides, I am listening again.

Upstairs, David has begun to work on his theme. As a child, he went to church each Sunday, dressed and encouraged by my mother—walking back and forth with her, just as my brother walked, and my sister and I before him. Now, at the university, he is studying the Bible, as literature. It is a part of his English major, and armed with his new intellectual approach, he sometimes challenges my mother.

"What do you think of this?" He reads a passage from the Old Testament. "Now, wait, I can show you something else . . . it's right here."

She listens, in patience and quiet. "The Bible was never meant to be taken literally, David. It is simply the word of God," she says, and there is such conviction in her voice that my son falls silent before her.

Now, as she moves about the kitchen, I think of this and of how, at times, my mother blames herself for having failed her children. I hear her open the oven door, and I fling my paper aside and go out to help her.

"I've kept the muffins warm, mother, and there's some Canadian bacon."

"It looks delicious," she says, taking only one piece.

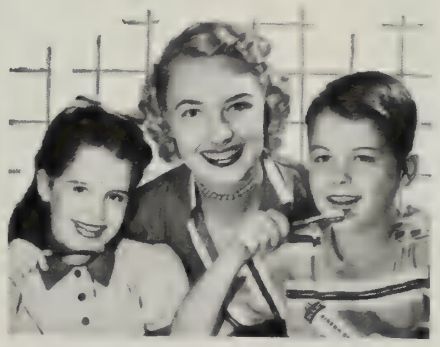
"Let me scramble some eggs for you."

"Oh, no, thank you. This is fine." She sits down at the breakfast table, where I have left a place for her. There is nothing martyred or reproachful in her manner, but her eyes still look drained. "I thought I asked you to leave the dishes for me."

"They didn't take two seconds." I stare through the window at the green, swirling trees. "Were there many people at church?"

"Quite a few. They all like Doctor Michaels, and then the music—I wish you could have heard it today."

"They have a good choir," I admit, and then, forcing myself: "Did you enjoy the sermon?"



"Very much." There is a pause, while she reaches for a crumb on her plate. "Next Sunday they're going to have a man from the university. A professor of philosophy."

"That should be interesting."

She brightens, in the way that I dread. "I thought I'd tell David about him, too," she says, but his door is closed most of the day. He is studying for his finals, and my mother knows this and does not press the point.

She has her church duties the following week, and I am busy with different things,

READER'S DIGEST* reports the same research which proves that brushing teeth right after eating with COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Published Reports!

Reader's Digest recently reported on one of the most extensive experiments in dentifrice history! And here are additional facts: The one and only toothpaste used in this research was Colgate Dental Cream. Yes, and two years' research showed brushing teeth right after eating with Colgate Dental Cream stopped decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene! The Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever reported in all dentifrice history!

No Other Toothpaste or Powder Ammoniated or Not Offers Proof of Such Results!

Even more important, there were no new cavities whatever for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate Dental Cream correctly! Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results! No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay.

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! While not mentioned by name, Colgate's was the only toothpaste used in the research reported in July Reader's Digest.

this basic dress of

"BOTANY"* brand

CERTIFIED† FABRIC

a Home-sewn Original with a Custom Look

It's hard to believe that this smooth-fashioned, rave-getting, go-everywhere dress is home-sewn—it's so expensive looking! Yet, it's so simple to make...takes only your own two hands, plus "Botany" Brand Certified Fabric. Delightfully soft and luxurious—easy-handling—Botany is all pure, rich 100% virgin wool. Pre-shrunk, sponged and certified by Botany Laboratories for home-sewing specifically. And "sew easy" on your budget. Insist on "Botany" Brand Certified Fabrics at leading piece goods counters...Always look for the name on the selvage!

CROSS COUNTRY COLORS
Varied and colorful as the 48 states...the last word in popular fashion. Metropolitan Red... Overland Grey... Coastal Green... Bourbon Rust.

THIS SMART DRESS IS MADE OF "BOTANY" BRAND BARONETTE... ALL WORSTED CREPE. SIMPLICITY PATTERN #3287 AS SEEN IN SIMPLICITY PATTERN BOOK.

*"BOTANY" IS A TRADEMARK OF BOTANY MILLS, INC., REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COPYRIGHT 1950 BOTANY MILLS, INC. PASSAIC, N.J. †CERTIFIED BY BOTANY LABORATORIES. SALES OFFICES: BOTANY BUILDING 16 WEST 46TH STREET NEW YORK 19 NEW YORK.

Ask for this label to sew in your Botany garment and we do not mention Sunday. Still, on Saturday morning when the telephone rings, I feel reprieved and grateful. A friend of my mother's who lives ten miles away is calling to ask her for dinner. And will she spend Saturday night with them? Her daughter is going to be out rather late, and they can have a nice, long visit.

LOOK FOR THE "BOTANY" BRAND LABEL ON PRODUCTS FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

My mother stands there nodding, she is pleased as a child.

"Edna's going to be alone," she explains. "I think she really wants me."

"Why wouldn't she?" I put my arm around her, laughing. "You can take my overnight bag."

"All right." For a moment she stands there, lost in anticipation. "She wants me to go to church with her too."

"That will be lovely." Maybe my relief is too evident; I don't know. But my mother gives me a swift, troubled glance, and I stoop down to rearrange some pans. "We'll come and get you tomorrow afternoon, mother," I tell her.

"Oh, I don't mind taking the bus, but I just remembered something. The sermon tomorrow—I wanted to hear it."

"So did I." The words are out before I can stop them, and there is a cry so unexpected that I straighten up in alarm. "What is it?"

She is looking at me with quick, shining eyes. "I'm going to call them! I can go next week just as well."

"Mother, please ——"

"I'd much rather go to church with you, darling. Much, much rather."

"No!" Panic sharpens my voice, and something else, too painful to define. "You've promised her now. You'll have to go."

"It doesn't matter. I can tell Edna right away," she says.

"Listen." I draw in my breath. "You know I was just talking. We'll be out late tonight. I doubt very much that I'd go, even if you were here."

"I'm willing to take that chance, darling," she answers softly.

"Oh, mother!" I strike out, in a kind of helpless fury. "I'm not going, so that's all there is to it."

She turns away. Her shoulders look so thin, through the house dress she wears, that I can see the deep hollow between them.

"Listen," I beg, "go on to Edna's. Have a good time. One church is as good as another, isn't it?"

She is washing lettuce, now, and she nods. "Of course."

"You don't go for the sermon, anyway. You've often told me that."

"Yes."

I edge around, so that I can see her face. She isn't crying. Her mouth does not tremble at the corners, but there is such open sorrow in the lines at either side that I am stricken with shame and self-loathing.

"Look." I press my cheek against hers. "I'll go with you next Sunday, mother. I give you my word."

"You needn't do that—I believe you," she tells me.

"I don't know what makes me so hateful."

One wet hand reaches up to my hair. "You're not," she says, "you're my sweet, fine girl."

I draw back as if she had burned me. "Don't say that. You know you think I'm lost. A heathen," I cry, bitter as gall, "just because I don't go to church. Because I can't believe the way you do, no matter how I try."

"I don't think any of those things," my mother says gently. "If I give that impression, then I am sorry."

"You mean you really think there's hope for me?"

"I know it," she says, and though I am prepared to mock and gibe, a strange thing happens then. For a moment, I move backward in time. I am a child, unburdened by the weight of years—a little girl kneeling beside her mother, with her head bowed in trustful imitation. The next instant I see myself as I really am, and the taste in my mouth is acid.

The soul is dyed the color of its leisure thoughts.

—DEAN INGE.
More Lay Thoughts of a Dean (Putnam & Co.)

"Now, you've got something to loo ward to—for a whole week!"

My mother hides any grief she ma
"You needn't go on my account," s marks quietly.

But I must. I have promised, an through the week I am conscious of t only because she never quite lets me it. Though she never actually says a there is about her some added tenderne hint of joy that closes my throat, and me sharp when I notice.

I find her pressing my street dre Saturday, and I exclaim impatiently, "W that for?"

"Nothing. I just noticed it was wrin

"I wish you wouldn't, mother." I s the iron away. "You do entirely too around here. You'll be sick, the next you know."

"Oh," she smiles, "I doubt it. I'm n sickly type, darling."

This is true, but she looks very frail, find myself watching her anxiously. "Y cleaned my gloves too!"

"Well"—she opens a drawer, and pre to look inside—"I thought maybe you planning to wear them tonight."

"We're not going out." My answ short; I can't seem to help it. Not mind staying at home—no, it isn't tha her very longing clips my voice, and know she will never wake me.

I have tried that, before, and four gone when I finally opened my eyes.
didn't you call me, mother?" I rem asking, and I can still see the quick shake of her head, and her eyes going me to the window.
didn't get in until so

Well, I think, this won't even read. I tu my light at ten o and Phil looks up his book. "So early

"I'm going to with mother."

"No!"

"Oh, hush." I turn on my side. " you want to go with us?"

"Some other Sunday—I've got to fi screen door."

But he is still sleeping when I wa drizzling rain has begun to fall; I pu covers higher. Lying there, I wait for first, hushed sounds in my mother's and when they come, I take a deep and, barefooted, walk down the hall.

"Mother?"

She is wearing her kimono—a Chr gift from my sister; not the one sh chosen, of satin and lace, but the plai crepe for which it was exchanged, b my mother preferred something simple she stands before the dresser with her hair brushed loose, and the robe ti gether at the waist. It is a size too larg it hangs in folds, so that her shoulder very narrow. Her face, above it, is swe thin, and her eyes reflect the weather

"It's raining," she whispers. "Why you go back to bed?"

"You know." I make a pretense of wi
"Remember?"

"Oh, your promise." She smiles, as had forgotten. "I won't hold you to it I may not even go myself," she say turning away. "I seem to have a to indigestion."

"Probably the dessert last night."
miss it as lightly as that, but becau mother so seldom complains, my own st tightens and spins. "Where does it hu your chest?"

She nods, avoiding my eyes. "No much, but it's such a dreary day. I just you wouldn't wake up early."

"Well," I begin, "maybe you had stay at home. I tell you what—you bed, and I'll bring your breakfast u
You really should rest, mother. I don' the weather, but ——"

She jerks around, and in the motio that beneath her robe she is already dressed. "You mean you'd go any she asks.

(Continued on Page 206)

Round-Up Strap

The first step to take in buying shoes:
Step up to the window of your Red Cross Shoe retailer.
See the beautiful array of lovely styles . . . Then step inside . . .
discover that Red Cross Shoes feel as beautiful as they look. *

The Jamaica

RED CROSS SHOE
Window Wonderland OF SMART FALL FASHIONS

The Roxy

The Chateau II

The Fleetline

because every lovely, new style is actually "fit-fashioned" on living, walking feet . . . to make sure it looks and feels beautiful* ON the foot. YOUR foot. And in Red Cross Shoes, of course, you have the world's widest variety of styles to choose from on the widest variety of individual lasts.

Today, more than ever, America's unchallenged shoe value.

This product has no connection whatever with The American National Red Cross

The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. These shoes are manufactured and distributed as Gold Cross Shoes in England by Somervell Bros., Ltd.; in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd.; in South Africa by Eddels (S.A.), Ltd.; in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co., Ltd. Gold Cross Shoes are featured in Canada by leading retailers.

A challenge to any woman
With Dry Skin...

Orange
Skin Cream

Dry skin is unlovely, an invitation to wrinkles...and totally unnecessary! You can keep your skin soft, smooth, young...with Orange Skin Cream. Rich in nourishing oils—refreshingly fragrant. Use it on your face and throat for remarkable results.

1.25 plus tax

Basic Beauty Ritual

CLEANSE with Ardena Cleansing Cream, 1.00 to 6.00
REFRESH with Ardena Skin Lotion, 1.00 to 9.50
SMOOTH with Orange Skin Cream, 1.25 to 8.50 prices plus taxes

Elizabeth Arden
691 FIFTH AVE., N. Y. 22, PLAZA 9-2940

(Continued from Page 204)

"Why, certainly." I scowl at her—my eyes are smarting. "I'm just thinking about you," I tell her.

"Oh, if that's all!" She lifts her comb in a gay, sweeping gesture, and points toward the door. "Now, you run along and dress—I'll fix a little breakfast. I've already made some cinnamon biscuit for later on," she adds. "We'll have a nice, hot breakfast when we come home from church."

So, even before we leave the house, I am robbed of any comfort I might have had—any possible complacency over going to please my mother. She betrays her longing in these little ways, and each of them is a reminder. No last-minute rush—no listening, as she must, for David to wake . . . no tension. This is the way it should always be, I think, driving over the glistening streets at exactly ten-forty-five. Here we are, early enough to find plenty of parking space. Here is my mother, exquisitely neat, her blue eyes suffused with some inner radiance, a small purse clasped on her knees. She looks across at me, smiling, and I give the car a savage swing, and scrape the tires on the curbing.

"Feeling all right now?"

"Oh, yes. Isn't this nice? We're early."

The spires of the church seem to bend down and pierce my breast. Both heavy doors are opened wide, and through them I can hear an organ prelude. But the deep, somber music, so beautiful to her, accuses me with every step I take. Though I try to walk briskly, my knees are weak, and I shrink when the ushers come forward.

"Good morning . . . good morning."

"Mr. Williams?" Her voice is hushed, really breathless. "This is my daughter."

"How do you do." I smile painfully—it is always the same.

Walking stiffly behind my mother, I sink down in the designated pew—a little farther forward than usual, I suspect, for she is not alone today, and it is neither Easter nor Christmas. The stained-glass figures remind me of this—their eyes burn darkly as she slips to her knees, and reading mercy in their lifted hands, I glance away, and swallow.

Without turning my head, I know every motion that my mother makes, and commonplace though they may be, every one of them stabs me. First she takes out her glasses, hooking them sideways through the meshes of her hair. Then she opens the bulletin, reads it with childlike absorption, and smooths the pages together. Next there is the rustle of an envelope which contains her weekly offering—at least one tenth of all that she has, and anything extra we give her. She slides this beneath the cuff of her glove, and reaching for a prayer book in the rack just ahead, draws closer and whispers a number. "Page 287."

"Yes." I grasp the other side of the book—I try not to notice her moving lips, or to think of my brother and sister. But they are here with the choir which files toward the loft—each white-surpliced boy has my brother's eyes, each rosy girl is my sister. She has never seen us any other way, I think. She comes to find us every week, and none of us is here.

"Excuse me, please."

AN usher stands at my elbow—I move over for a couple who are late. Groups of three and four, young married couples, whole families are seated around us. There is not one who seems to worship alone, yet every Sunday of her life my mother sits in a space by herself, and prays for the strength to guide us. She stands erect, as now, and repeats the Scriptures with boundless faith, for whether or not we live by them, in this respect we have failed her.

"Glory be to the Father, and to the Son ——" Her voice rises, clear and true. But it is not so steady as when she was young, and thinking of this, I try to sing, and not a word comes out—not a sound.

I sit beside her and grope for a bill—it seems to shout from the collection plate, but my mother's hand is quicker than the eye, and she listens to the sermon without moving. Though my own sense of failure is like a weight on my chest, she gives no sign of feeling this, and after a while I am reassured in some way . . . I can't explain it.

But then, with the last hymn, I look at my mother, and her thin, luminous face is too much for me. I see her quickly gather her things, and I long to rush out ahead of the crowd, for I know too well what is coming.

"Good morning—how are you, Mrs. Estes? You've met my daughter, haven't you?"

"Why, of course! So nice to have you with us today."

We shake hands, and move slowly up the aisle. There is no hurrying my mother now—she must stop and greet each person she knows, and always with her hand on my arm. "Mrs. Lockridge, this is my daughter—my oldest daughter—you remember my daughter." Oh, see, she is here. She has come with me to the house of our Lord. Be warm and friendly—be kind to her, for she is confused and in need. "Let's cross over, darling, I want you to meet the Theilens."

Pulling tighter within myself, I smile and smile. "How do you do? Yes, wasn't it? Just wonderful. Mother ——"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A Place in the Country

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Oh, somewhere there are orchards
I never yet have seen,
Nor shall, and grassy meadows
All daisy-white and green,

Which still belong as much to me
As though the deed were writ,
And plain for everyone to see
My own name signed to it,

For they have been my one refuge
For years, my one retreat
From all the unloved sights and sounds
Of crowded city streets,

From pavements where no grass dares grow,
From buildings rising high
With neither song nor beauty
Upon a treeless sky.

Oh, somewhere there are fertile fields
I never yet have sown,
Nor shall, but which until I die
Will be my very own!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

At the entrance the minister waits, his black robe billowing in the fresh spring wind, for the skies have miraculously cleared and even the sparrows are splitting their throats in a kind of tuneless hymn.

"Doctor Michaels"—my mother's expression is unbearably eager—"you remember my daughter," she says, and in the next shaken breath: "We were sorry to have missed your visit last week. Both of us happened to be out."

A quick flash of understanding darkens his eyes. "I'll come again soon," he promises, and suddenly I feel stubborn in the way I have already described—set hard against him, and the others.

"Thank you for the sermon," I murmur. I straighten my arm, and move away from my mother. I walk down the steps with my head lifted high, and all the time there is this grinding wretchedness which I blame on the church, and on orthodox faith in general. "If he comes, I won't be at home, mother."

Sitting beside me in the car, she looks over as if I had struck her. "Doctor Michaels? Don't you like him?"

"Oh, he's all right. Very intelligent," I admit grudgingly. "I just don't know how to talk to a minister."

"Why, that's ridiculous!" She tries to laugh. "They're no different from other people."

I press my foot on the gas. "They are, to me."

"But you heard his sermon. He isn't narrow, or smug, or—or anything you might object to."

"I know all that, and if he'd just come and talk the way he sounds. But no, he'd want to convert me!"

SHE doesn't answer. I turn my head—the flesh beneath her chin is sliding down. "You are already a member of the church," she says at last. "All of my children . . . you were nine."

"Was I?" But I remember too well. The old church at home—the lilies on the altar, my mother's eyes. Three of us, I think, and now none. I almost sideswipe a car. "That was too young, mother. I couldn't possibly have realized what I was doing."

"You were happy, though—such a sweet little thing."

I slap at her hand. "Stop it, now!" I laugh. "Don't let's get sentimental. This is a hard, materialistic world, and I've been conditioned to it. Only ——" She looks so stricken that I have to say something. "I'm glad I went to church with you, mother."

Her whole face springs into life. "You do feel better for it, don't you? . . . It's really no trouble at all," she remarks a few minutes later. We are in the kitchen, and the combination breakfast and lunch is already cooking. The table has been set—Phil and David have had their orange juice, and are reading the morning papers. Through the window behind them there is the moist, verdant world, and birds cry shrilly for notice. "Sometimes I feel a little tired," my mother confesses, "but today it was lovely, wasn't it?"

I just nod. I want, more than anything, to assure her—to say that I will join her every Sunday after this—but I can't bring myself to promise—not so soon. Instead, I heap her plate with omelet. I read in her room, during the symphony hour; I take up her supper on a tray.

"Phil and I are going out for a little while, mother. We'll be home early."

"That's all right—you have a good time."

"Here are the New York papers, and some magazines."

She reaches for them—I see the paperweight half concealed in her hand, and I just go blind, for a minute. I know there is nothing wrong with her, now, but I have to speak to David.

"Watch out for your grandmother," I remind him sternly. "She wasn't very well this morning."

He lowers his book—it is Darwin's Descent of Man. "Is she all right now?" he asks quickly.

"Yes—I suppose. But you might go to church with her now and then! It seems little enough—you'll be sorry, someday."

"All right, mother." He sighs. "Don't rub it in. I'm going, just as soon as I finish these finals. I promise."

I turn away, knowing that he, too, feels this nagging lack for which I am partly responsible. I know I can trust him to look out for my mother, but her room is dark when we come home, and I have to stop and listen. There is no sound. In the kitchen below, David is drinking milk with his father. The clink of their glasses comes up to me. I am afraid of disturbing my mother's rest, but still, I must turn the handle of her door, and look inside, as always.

She is lying on her back—facing the mirror where the three miniatures glint softly in the light from the hall. One thin, white arm is curved around the pillow, the other lies over her chest. Her body seems flat and very still, and watching until the covers rise, I bury my face in my hands.

I tell you, I am afraid . . . I don't know. She seems so little and pale in the shadows. She isn't very young any more, and in a way I have helped to age her. I want to fall down on my knees and pray—I want to beg her, and promise. But my back is rigid with the habit of years—I stand there waiting until a clock strikes twelve, and then, on Monday, I buy her a dress, or a hat trimmed with pretty cloth flowers. THE END

Beautiful Hair

BRECK

THERE ARE THREE DIFFERENT BRECK SHAMPOOS

Hair tends to be dry, oily or normal. There is a Breck Shampoo made for each one of these hair conditions. Breck pH8 Lather Oil Shampoo is for dry hair, Breck Lacene Shampoo is for oily hair, and Breck Regular Shampoo is for more normal hair. When you buy a Breck Shampoo mention whether your hair is dry, oily or normal and you will be given the correct Breck Shampoo. A Breck Shampoo will leave your hair clean, shining and fragrant.

Breck Hairdress is for daily care of the hair. It keeps hair soft and in place without leaving an oily appearance. Breck Hairdress may also be used diluted as a rinse for dry or normal hair.

The Breck Preparations are available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold. Look for the gold foil box.

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

WHY I LIKE WOMEN

(Continued from Page 61)

and cosmetics and lack of whiskers. I mean the aura about her which man has not, which cannot be feigned and is in no way imitative of a man.

The physical structure of the female body and its life-bearing potential are, of course, basic to all a woman is and does. Because the physical structure of the female body cannot be separated from the mind and spirit (as some men discover too late), I have avoided saying that I like it. (But I do.) Woman's thinner muscles and smaller size have had something to do with her "inferior position" from the cave-man era on, for theoretically a man can lick a woman in a free-for-all fight if only force is used. Women are weaker and, incidentally, shapelier than men. I like them for both of those reasons—and they don't need to conform to a single standard of beauty in shape or weight. If all women were alike in figure, it would play no part in their attractiveness. Pictorial conceptions of the female form are always distorted. Because women do not wholly resemble Venus de Milo any more than they wholly resemble paintings by Rubens, Gauguin or a pin-up artist, I like them.

During World War II, an outstanding woman military leader lectured to girl recruits: "Remember you are ladies and forget you are women." While I recognize the purpose of her euphemism (as if we did not have proof enough that war is hell), it seems to me the advice would have been more effective had she said: "Be ladies if you can, but never forget for a single moment that you are women." Now that would have made them think a time or two before relying on any brittle armor of mannerism, and perhaps helped them to direct normal emotions and desires toward the greatest happiness.

Women often do not like women because they are women, but I like women primarily for their femininity and so do all men, I believe, who are brave enough to admit they like women. Why any woman would want to forget she is a woman is more than I can imagine. It seems to me the smart career girl would not conceal her femininity, but use it, and not merely to get a husband. Both Tugboat Annie and the proudest queen are successful chiefly because of their femininity. There are still some men tangled with cobwebs of superstition who mean it as a compliment when they say, "She thinks just like a man." But no woman "thinks like a man." It's a lucky thing for both sexes. And the man who thinks of women in terms of men is either a knave or a fool—very often he is both. This is one of the few rules of life to which there is no exception.

Women allegedly "think from the heart," are guided by "feminine intuition," and respond emotionally to all situations. I am not sure how they do it, but I like the effects they achieve. There was a memorable scene in the movie version of Pearl Buck's famous novel, The Good Earth, in which the father of a starving brood pulls a shank of meat out of the pot and beats his son for having stolen it. While the father is beating some honesty into the kid, the mother picks up the bone, brushes it off and drops it back into the soup. Her behavior was typical of a nicety in morals that belongs only to women. I won't discuss it because I don't understand it, but I admire it. The pessimistic German philosopher, Schopenhauer (they say a blond Fräulein once gave him an unphilosophical brush-off), wrote an essay to prove that women have no souls. I am inclined to agree. Either that, or they are all soul. At least, when the chips are down, they are not likely to copy some moldy old soul they've read about.

But of all the traits of women, the most endearing is their love for men. This is more than the simple affinity of the sexes, for women, far more often than men, love selflessly without "reason," or even love in return. How many mothers will not admit they prefer sons to daughters? How many women teachers do not like their male pupils best? They say oh, of course they like the girls, but boys are less trouble, or boys are less worry, or boys are not so devious—but none of their excuses bears analysis except: they like boys. Could anything be sweeter?

The three-year-old and his father were being pushed toward the rear of a rapidly filling elevator. A kindly woman turned to the dad and said, "Aren't you afraid your little boy will be squashed?"

"Not a chance, lady," answered the father. "He bites."

Any scoundrel, wastrel, milquetoast or genius may have a devoted wife. Sometimes a woman's love seems to grow stronger in proportion to the ingratitude she bears, and who can say that it is foolish to love? . . . On crisp, cool evenings Uncle Louie could not resist the lure of a train's whistle. He left Aunt Mamie nineteen times in sixteen years. Without a quarrel he left her, and often without a cent, which is a little less than Mamie would have had if Uncle Louie had never strayed. Whenever a freight train moaned, she would exclaim, "Here comes Louie!" In a month or two she would be right. She always received him the way he left her: empty-handed, with a kiss. "I love him," was her only explanation.

Women are a good idea God had. The Eternal Feminine belongs with the sunshine and pleasure in the world, rather than with the shadow and pain. The most disillusioned man inevitably associates the female of the species with challenge, not fear, with triumph, not defeat, with beauty and warmth and comfort and clean clothes and good things to eat.

I like women, for the substance of Woman is both flesh and a dream.

If all this is obvious, I wish it were more so; if too slight, it is because words are so weak; if too idealistic, it is because my glasses are rose-tinted by the woman who loves me.

KEEPING UP APPEARANCES

(Continued from Page 191)

it lightly in a jar of cream. Now hold the point at the center of your eyelid and draw a line, as close to your eyelashes as possible, toward the outer edge of your eye. From there, allow it to extend upward slightly. Pretty for a wide-eyed look.

Hope for Your Hair. It's often the one curl that undoes and dangles over your forehead or lies pencil-straight against your cheek that makes you feel "My hair's a mess!" To avoid a hair-up-in-pin-curls look, rewind these stubborn locks and fasten the curls with gold- or silver-colored bobby pins.

For an orderly, inexpensive and pretty effect: Place a ½-yard rectangle of veiling over the crown of your head, allowing it to cover all of your back hair except the curly ends. Now gather the ends of the veiling together on each side and secure to your hair just above your ears with tiny black velvet bow in bobby pins.

Try one of the new adjustable nylon hair nets designed to accommodate any hair style you wish to wear.

While dressing, protect your hairdo, make-up and clothes by wearing one of the new transparent plastic caps (complete with air vents) which slip on over your head and snap under your chin.

Anchor unmanageable cowlicks and wisps by using one of the new faintly scented creamy hair preparations. Moisten the palm of your hands with the cream and smooth them over your hair. THE END

AND OTHER VIEWS OF PATTERNS. Pages 54 and 55

Vogue Design No. 7189

zes 12 to 20, 30 to 38; 50c.

Vogue Design No. S-4118

Sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38; $1.00.

Journal Pattern 2665

A cape stole made in the same fabric as your dress and lined in plaid. Wear with red stocking cap that is pulled through the open crown of a plaid hat. Long end of stole may be pulled through the belt of your dress.

Journal Pattern 2666

A plaid beret with a fringed tab ... matching cuffs to sew on suède or on cotton gloves.

Journal Pattern 2667

Linen collar and cuffs with braid.

Journal Pattern 2668

Velvet halo that can be made with a crown of veiling.

Journal Pattern 2669

Velveteen in a high shade makes an open-crown hat and matching cowl with ball fringe.

Journal Pattern 2670

Casual hat with stitched red corduroy brim, crocheted crown. Matching stitched belt and bag.

Journal Pattern 2671

A brief bolero in the prettiest shade with tassel trim. It can also be made reversible in two colors.

Journal Pattern 2672

Gay plaid taffeta swirls across the front and ties in a bouffant bow. It can also be done with wide ribbon.

Journal Pattern 2673

A flattering off-the-shoulder neckline of pleated sheer, velvet ribbon. Pattern also has an alternate version with a double row of pleats banded in same fabric.

An idea so simple it requires no pattern. Just a four-inch yard-long strip of heavy Venise-type lace basted lightly to top of dress.

Journal Pattern 2674

A pattern especially designed for a bordered fabric, but with a second version with bow neckline that would be suitable for a plain fabric.

to coupon, page 24, to order Journal Accessory Patterns. 15 cents each.

y Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing eck or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in nada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ontario. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

In our Set-we use Serviset for parties - Buffets - Brunch and everyday use!

The THANKSGIVING design as illustrated will add gayety to your Thanksgiving parties and give you a carefree holiday as there are no dishes to wash.

The WAVERLY design is the new modern design for everyday use—that makes for "easier living"

SERVISET comes in 18 matched designs for almost every special occasion and for everyday use. Reasonably priced, too.

SERVISET consists of "Handi-Handle"* paper cups and plates; matching napkins and tablecover, plastic spoons and forks. SERVISET items may also be bought singly . . . at your favorite store . . . or write for name of nearest dealer.

*Trade Mark

SERVISET by Sutherland ®

SUTHERLAND PAPER COMPANY • KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN

TELL ME DOCTOR

(Continued from Page 31)

I'd have to read you a lecture upon female physiology to make you understand it. I'm sorry I haven't the time now, so you'll have to take my word for it."

"I think I understand it, Doctor."

"That's because you look at things intelligently."

"I try to. Can this bleeding be remedied, Doctor?"

"I'm sure it can, provided we have satisfied ourselves of its cause. I'm going to examine you now, to try to eliminate any other possible conditions."

Later, in the consulting room, the doctor radiated a confidence that was exceedingly comforting to his patient.

"I believe we're on the right track, Mrs. Tow. At least I can find nothing else that might account for your trouble, after a most exhaustive examination. The cervix is clean and healthy, the womb normal in size for a woman who has borne children, freely movable, in good position and not unduly sensitive. The ovaries and tubes are negative."

"Of course, that relieves my mind," Mrs. Tow admitted. "Will you tell me just what you propose to do to help me, Doctor? I don't suppose you are going to let me keep on bleeding this way every month."

"Certainly not. In fact, I propose to do something very definite about it as soon as I can establish the diagnosis I have tentatively made."

"And your diagnosis is?"

"Premenopausal bleeding, induced by the glandular causes I tried to explain. Now, what I propose to do is this—first, I'm going to suggest a thorough curettement of the inside of the womb."

"What would that accomplish?"

"It would remove the excessive growth of endometrium—lining cells—and probably give immediate relief, at least for a year or so. Even more important, it would also afford an opportunity for microscopic examination of the curettings, which would be most important on the very small chance that we might be dealing with something more serious than hyperplasia."

"I hope you don't mean cancer."

"I think it is extremely doubtful that there is anything of a serious nature present, but the reason why I want those curettings for examination is to make absolutely certain. If nothing harmful is found, I shall proceed to give you a series of hormone injections, which I expect will be most helpful."

"Of course I trust your judgment. When will you want to do this curettement?"

"Right away. Oh, I nearly forgot something. Didn't you mention some other complaint about which you wished to consult me?"

"Of course! I forgot it myself. It's about my breast. About two weeks ago I noticed a small lump on the left side. I'm sure it isn't anything—I see you're frowning, Doctor. Don't tell me it's bad."

"Well, it could be most anything. Let's see it. We won't need to go back to the examining room for that."

A moment later the doctor was running sensitive fingers over the delicate skin structure covering a well-developed mammary gland, testing the size, location and mobility of a small, hard lump that was situated within two inches of the nipple. The frown that his patient had noted increased, rather than diminished.

"Don't tell me it's bad, Doctor."

"I honestly can't tell from such an examination," he confessed. "This must be investigated further. You say you first noticed it about two weeks ago?"

"Yes. I think I remember hitting my breast on a chair last month. That could cause the lump, wouldn't it?"

The doctor shook his head slowly. "I doubt it. As a matter of fact, women receive small injuries to the breasts so constantly that there's always some such accident recollected whenever anything like this turns up. Purely coincidental, as a rule. Do you nurse your babies? I don't remember."

"Yes, Doctor."

"Never had any trouble with the breasts at that time—no hardness, or inflammation or anything?"

"I don't remember anything."

"You probably would, if you'd had. Anyhow, that fact is not important."

"It—it couldn't be a—a cancer, could it, Doctor?"

The doctor hesitated. "I—don't—think so," he replied slowly. "As I said before, I don't know."

"Would it have anything to do with the change of life we've been discussing?"

"It might. I'll say this, Mrs. Tow—that a lump in the breast and increased bleeding occurring simultaneously may look at your case more happily. That may sound odd to you, but I am pretty well convinced that both occurrences are of glandular origin—that is due to the same cause, stimulation. The cancer age corresponds roughly with the change of life. I purely coincidental, I pointed out. Now, I think your hitting your breast was the cause of this lump. In fact, I don't know too much about the cause of things. What I know is that you have a lump in your breast which must be investigated—never mind how it came there. The most common cause of such a lump is a chronic inflammation of the gland itself—or part of it—together with cystic formation. In other words, mastitis. Unfortunately, I can't tell, as can anyone else—its nature by looking at it from the outside, or feeling it. We've got to get it under the microscope for examination—a biopsy, in other words."

"Operate, you mean?"

"That's right. Right away. There is no time to be lost."

"And you can't tell me anything definite about it?"

"I'm sorry to say, I cannot."

"Is it really as bad as that? This cystic inflammation you mentioned ——"

"Is the most common cause of such lumps, and probably the cause of yours, but not positive."

"But if it were cancer, wouldn't there be definite signs to denote it?"

"There would, but not at this time. Even if we could make a positive diagnosis by waiting at it, it would be too late."

"There is no other way except by operation?"

"No other certain way. It is essential that all such cases be investigated at the earliest possible moment. All of them. They usually change. Only this last spring I operated on a young woman whom I had had twice before for what proved to be cystic mastitis. I was forced to use all my persuasive power to get her to submit to a third operation when a third lump appeared. Someone, it seems, had told her that once cystic mastitis always cystic mastitis. We did operate, and proved to be a cancer. I think it likely that early operation will save her life.

"You see, it is of paramount importance to get these things early, if they are

CAESAR'S WIFE SHOULD BE ABOVE SUSPICION

Claudius, a Roman patrician, made love to Caesar's charming wife Pompeia and had his affections returned. When news of the scandal got abroad Caesar immediately divorced Pompeia. At the trial Caesar maintained that he knew nothing of Pompeia's clandestine meetings with Claudius. Upon being asked why he was casting her off, Caesar replied, "The wife of Caesar ought not only to be clear of such a crime, but also of the very suspicion of it."

ust what the hostess ordered

At your house, Sani-Flush and rkling toilet bowls without effort probably a foregone conclusion!
t we thought we'd mention that—an oversight—it's never too late for ni-Flush, with its new fresh, pleasant grance that doesn't linger. Leaves throom atmosphere inviting for ests. Safe for all toilet systems. At ur grocer's; same price. The ygienic Products Company, nton 2, Ohio.

ni-Flush

in the familiar yellow can NOW FRESHLY FRAGRANT

ortite KEEPS THE COLD OUT

FUEL
D MONEY

and pliable, s the perfect stripping.
in a jiffy
ools or tacks.
t wind, dust,
yone can press it
indows, doors, traneboards. Weatherstrip window for 29¢—costs even u use the larger packages.
tite at stores or write for
J. W. Mortell Co., 555
., Kankakee, Ill.

Music for Happiness
HER WHOLE LIFE THRU

e your child the privilege of earning music with a Gulbransen new rn Spinet Piano—an instrument e and responsive that she will cherish her hours of companionship with it.
ransen Spinet Pianos, "America's Smartest Piano Fashions," famous for nd styling. Write for free brochures.
GULBRANSEN
COMPANY
LHJ, 816 N. Kedzie Ave., Chicago 51, Ill.

nant. If we can get them before the lymphatic glands into which they drain become involved, we have a pretty good chance. Once the glandular system has become involved, no one can tell how far or how fast it has gone. The cancer infection—that is not the proper word for it, but it will suffice: it isn't really an infection, but an actual transference of cells—may jump ahead into almost any part of the body. When that happens, the case is hopeless."

"What is it that you propose to do, then?"

"Take you into an operating room, remove this small lump, which is simple enough to do and requires only a couple of minutes, have it frozen, stained and sectioned, and examined under a microscope. If it proves to be only mastitis, you can go home the same afternoon, rejoicing. If it's worse, then you must understand that we shall go ahead, at the same setting, and do the most radical extirpation of the entire breast and its lymphatic glands which stretch clear under the armpit, that it is possible to accomplish. Not a small operation, you understand, but one of the first magnitude."

Mrs. Tow drew a long breath. "When do you want to do this?"

"Tomorrow morning. You'll go to the hospital this afternoon."

"Very well. I'll do as you say."

"Good. Be assured that you're doing the right thing. And one thing more, Mrs. Tow. In the event, as I hope and believe, that this operation proves trivial, we'll go ahead with that curettement we were talking about. You'll be under anesthesia, anyhow."

"All right, Doctor. I'll see you tomorrow."

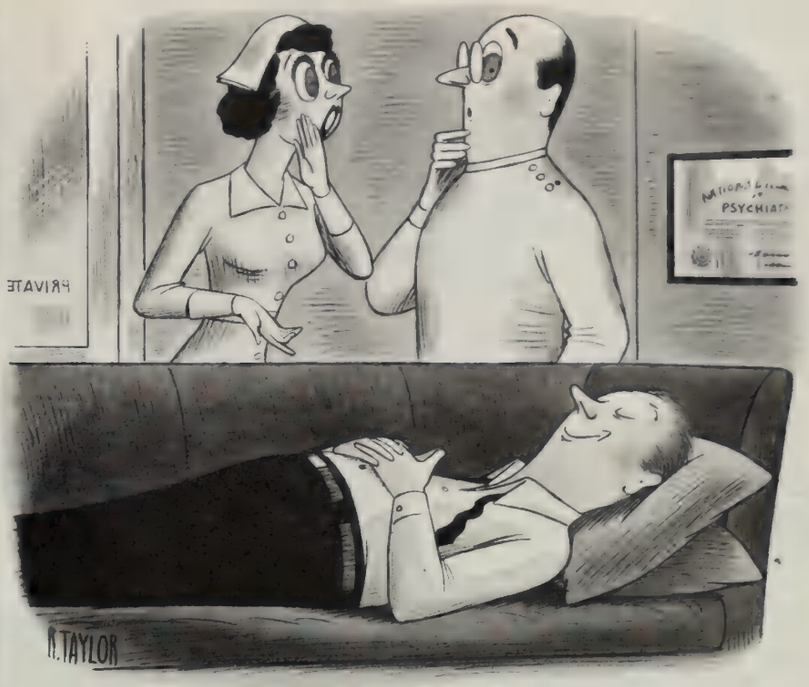
When his patient was gone, the doctor sat for a short space of time, silently thinking. Unconsciously he picked up an engraved card that had been rescued from his morning's mail and laid on his desk.

"Announcement of the marriage of Miss Jane Doe to—what's this? Mr. John Doe? Humph! She didn't have to change her name much. Now, this is what—the twenty-fifth of April? I'll give her to the first of August until she comes in to see me because she's missed her period. Heigh-ho! What a life!"

(To be Continued)

AUDUBON DINING ROOM

(Continued from Page 192)



Audubon bird plates, milk glass and ironstone arranged on the shelves.

Since the room was small and we needed extra space for an extension table, we selected side pieces to suit the available spaces. This type of eighteenth-century mahogany reproduction furniture represents one of the best values today, as it can be bought separately. The table, chest and server cost in the $70-to-$125 range each. There are a chest of drawers for linens and a server with a double top, which can also be used for tea or fireside supper. The pedestal table will extend to accommodate all the in-laws as well as the family, on special occasions.

Audubon prints come in many sizes, and you will find it easy to pick out the ones you want, inexpensively priced. We used a 25" x 38" print in the center, which cost $15. A portfolio of seven 18" x 22" Audubon prints can be had for as little as $20. The beautiful bird plates and cups are copied from these prints and cost about $2 each.

You can choose a dining-room theme from any number of interests or hobbies. A most charming room can be decorated around pieces of old Spode or Wedgwood, blue willow or even a single big picturesque platter. Match the colors of your china or contrast them delicately. A collection of luster on shelves or in cupboards, used with arbutus pink or leaf green, makes a dazzling scheme. Pieces of old silver or white glaze used against French blue are dignified and traditional. A collection of Pennsylvania Dutch pottery combined with warm yellows and browns makes a cozy and inviting dining room.

THE END

"All he keeps saying is—'Koylon'!"

Naturally! Everybody is talking about furniture made with Koylon Foam Cushioning. It's "lifetime" luxury. Chair and sofa cushions smooth themselves when you get up. It's self-fluffing. See—sit in Koylon comfort.

U.S. Koylon® FOAM Cushioning

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

The South's Oldest Makers of Fine Furniture

Find your room beautiful answers
IN THIS NEW BOOKLET

Full page room scenes in color, sixty-five pictures of fine furniture and unusual decorative ideas for rooms of any size.

Send coupon now!

White FINE FURNITURE

WHITE FURNITURE [illegible] Dept. LHJ-50, Mebane, N. C.
Please send me the colorful new WHITE ALBUM OF FINE FURNITURE.
I enclose 25c

Name _____

Address _____

Double enjoyment—turkey with two kinds of stuffing (oyster and ham); two bowls of gravy and cranberries; variety in vegetables.

PHOTOS BY STUART

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

IF there's any more cooking fun than preparing Thanksgiving dinner, I don't know where it's to be found. On this one feast day of the year the kitchen is the most important and popular room in the house, and you have every excuse to spend as much time there as you like. No one expects a Thanksgiving dinner to appear as if by magic, and the Thanksgiving menu is decreed by tradition.

Not that you can't inject some originality into the historic dishes. Your turkey stuffing can be blended with novel flavors. Your vegetables can have a difference. Your pumpkin dessert needn't be pie. And when you bring them to the table they can give you an aesthetic as well as a gastronomic thrill.

We'll start with soup, not a heavy soup but delicate Madrilene. A cup of hot clear soup will be a perfect preface to the hearty fare that will follow. Our beautiful turkey will hold two kinds of stuffing, oyster and ham. The basic recipe for the stuffing is the same for both, but just before it is put into the bird, oysters are added to about one third of it and slivers of uncooked ham to the rest—so we get two stuffings (Continued on Page 214)

conversation piece

Guests of just family, service of Thanksgiving dinner is traditional: in all its glory the turkey comes to the table for carving—and admiring.

Traditional dessert flavor, new—and lighter—form. Pumpkin nut pudding, served well chilled with a creamy vanilla sauce—add the best coffee you can brew.

Hard Club to get into

BEAUTIFUL AS THEY ARE, MANY OF THESE PEAS WON'T MAKE THE GREEN GIANT LABEL

Our neighbors up in Minnesota used to shake their heads.

"Here you are," they'd say, "growing what we'll admit is a finer pea from that selected seed of yours. And those newfangled notions of yours—like hiring scientists to tell just the hour when each field should be picked—they worked out pretty good, too.

"But, what gets us is—after all that, you go ahead and kick out so many of those peas as not being quite tender enough!"

Well, maybe we are too fussy, but we've got a point, too. We've never seen the day when women didn't want more Green Giant Brand peas than we could grow. Try a can

How tender is a pea? Green Giant scientists do guess. This machine, known as the tenderometer, te them exactly by shearing peas and measuring th resistance. This is only one of the tests for tend ness that Green Giant Brand peas must pass.

Green Giant Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minne Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario.

"Green Giant" Brand Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. © GGCo.

Perfect Gravy every time... ANY TIME!

SMOOTH ... BROWN ... DELICIOUS !

Adds extra flavor to Curry and Rice!

■ No more gravy failures! Make perfect gravy every time . . . any time . . . with Franco-American Beef Gravy. Made from selected beef. Has that real roast beef flavor. Ready to serve —just heat.

You'll find this rich, brown gravy adds just the right touch to Curry. It's grand with roasts, meat loaf and for hot sandwiches. Wonderful in stews, too! Add it to your own gravy, too—when you find you haven't enough and want more as good as your own!

Good cooks everywhere praise Franco-American Beef Gravy. You will, too! Get several cans today!

Franco-American
BEEF GRAVY
READY TO SERVE!

(Continued from Page 212)

of decidedly contrasting flavors with a minimum of effort. Giblet gravy, and lots of it, comes next, and we mustn't forget cranberries. I'll give you a recipe for raw-cranberry relish, as a change from cranberry sauce or jelly. For any other meal one vegetable would be enough, but for Thanksgiving we must be opulent and provide a variety. I've chosen four: cauliflower with butter sauce, peas, onions cooked with bacon and a little vinegar, and fluffy mashed potatoes. They can be served on the same platter if you like, and I think that's a fine idea.

Instead of salad, which would be going too far even for the feast day, we'll have relishes, and the choice is up to you. Assorted pickles, watermelon or cucumber, celery, olives, radishes, green-tomato pickles—but whatever you choose, celery should be included. The crisp texture and delicate flavor of celery are a perfect accompaniment to a turkey dinner.

The staff of life has to get in here somewhere, and small baking-powder biscuits would be lovely if you want to bother with them. Rolls that you buy at the grocery or bakery would be good, too, but whatever it is, serve the breadstuff hot.

Now we're ready for dessert, and here I want to be slightly untraditional and suggest a pumpkin nut pudding instead of mince or pumpkin pie. The pudding is rich enough, heaven knows, but it isn't as heavy as pie, and a thin wedge of it served ice cold with a vanilla sauce makes a delicious finale. Also, it has to be made the day before, and that's all to the good.

I won't specify the number of people these recipes will serve. A big turkey will take care of a lot of healthy appetites, and so will the pudding. Count noses on the vegetables and cook more than you think you'll need.

MADRILENE

You can buy excellent canned Madrilene in grocery stores, and for this occasion it might be better to buy rather than make it. However, here is a recipe in case you want to do the job yourself. Get a veal knuckle or shank with some meat on it. Put it in a kettle with 4 quarts cold water and add 2 stalks celery, a handful of parsley, 1 bay leaf, 1 or 2 cloves garlic, 1 small onion, chopped, 1 No. 2½ can tomatoes, 1 tablespoon mono sodium glutamate, 2 teaspoons salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Bring slowly to a boil; skim and cook slowly, covered, 6 hours. Taste for seasoning, add more if needed and strain through fine sieve lined with wet cheesecloth. When thoroughly chilled, remove fat from top. If you use a pressure cooker, cook the soup 2 hours at 15 pounds and use 3 instead of 4 quarts water. Make soup as far ahead as you like and reheat before serving.

ROAST TURKEY

When you buy your turkey, ask the butcher to remove the large tendons from the legs. Wash turkey well and remove lungs and other objects that lurk inside it. Your cat will love them—as if you didn't know this, in case you have a cat. Dry bird inside and out and rub with salt and mono sodium glutamate.

Turkey stuffing. It's difficult to give exact rules for quantity, but allow approximately 1 cup stuffing per pound weight of turkey after it is dressed. A 1-pound loaf of bread will make about 5 cups of stuffing. If you have more stuffing than will go into the bird, cook it in a small casserole. For a 15-pound turkey (dressed weight) get three 1-pound loaves of sliced bread a day or two old; spread slices on a cooky sheet and let them stand at room temperature overnight. This will dry the bread a little, not too much. Remove crusts and pick bread apart with your fingers into small flakes. Finely chop celery, using some of the green leaves, to make 3 cups, and onions to make 2½ cups. Melt ¼ pound butter or margarine in a skillet, add 2 or 3 cloves garlic, finely minced, and cook 1 minute. Add chopped celery and onions and cook until they begin to brown. Cool to lukewarm, empty contents of skillet over bread and mix thoroughly. Coarsely chop 2 pounds chestnuts that have been boiled until tender. (To remove shells and skins from chestnuts, make a V-shaped cut in the flat side of each nut, spread them out on a pan or cooky sheet and pour a little salad oil over them. Turn them over several times with a pancake turner so they are all coated with oil. Put pan in a hot, 450° F., oven for 10 minutes, and when cool enough to handle, remove shells and skins.) Add nuts to stuffing with 6 tablespoons chopped parsley and 1 tablespoon mono sodium glutamate. Now we're ready for seasoning, and here it's a question of taste and tasting. Salt and freshly ground black pepper, of course, but not too much salt because the ham slivers will be in two thirds of the stuffing and they will add salt. Melt another ¼ pound butter or margarine in the skillet in which you cooked the onions and celery, and add whatever herbs you're going to use. For my taste, 2 tablespoons dried sweet basil, 1 tablespoon marjoram and 1 teaspoon sage are just about right. Or you can use a prepared poultry seasoning according to directions on the package. Put butter and herbs over low heat for a minute to release some of their flavor and add slowly to the stuffing, tossing all the time. Now eat a few bites and correct seasoning to your taste.

Put one third of stuffing in a separate bowl and add to it 12 large oysters or 24 small ones cut into pieces, mix well and add salt to taste. This is the stuffing for the neck of the turkey. It will be moist because of the oysters, but it will not be soggy. Into the larger bowl of stuffing put ½ pound uncooked smoked ham cut into slender slivers about ¾ inch long, and mix well.

Fill the neck cavity with the oyster stuffing, packing it in well, and sew down the flap. Fill the body cavity with the ham stuffing—and you needn't be afraid to give it all it will hold. This stuffing will be fluffy and light no matter how firmly the bird is packed. Sew up cavity, or fasten it with poultry pins and lace with twine. Using strong twine, fasten legs to sides of bird—don't let them stick up in the air. I always stuff my turkey the day before, not only for convenience—which is no small matter—but because I think it improves the flavor of the meat.

Now to the roasting. If you can get aluminum foil—and most of us can these days—completely wrap the turkey in an airtight covering of foil. Maybe the covering won't be completely airtight, but do as good a job as you can. The foil keeps the turkey from drying out or browning too quickly and eliminates the necessity of basting—a big nuisance too. If you can't get aluminum foil, cover turkey with a cloth that has been dipped in salad oil. Put the turkey, breast side down, in a roasting pan for the first hour of cooking and turn it breast side up for the rest of the time. Have a small quantity of water in the bottom of the roasting pan at all times.

Some birds of exactly the same weight will cook quicker than others, but here are some fairly safe rules to follow. If the turkey is wrapped in aluminum foil, which delays cooking action, allow 22 minutes a pound in a moderate, 350° F., oven, and if it is covered with a cloth allow 19 minutes per pound in a moderate, 350° F., oven. Test by inserting a skewer into the fleshy part of the second joint. If the skewer goes in easily and the juice that flows out is clear and not at all pink, cooking time is over. Don't cook the turkey until the legs and wings practically fall off. About ½ hour before cooking time is up, remove covering from turkey, brush well with softened butter or margarine and put it in a hot, 400° F., oven until beautifully browned. During the browning period brush several times with more butter or margarine. The skin should be crisp and brown but not hard and dried out.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Little Room

By Eleanor Halbrook Zimmerman

The little room beneath the eaves,
That slanted down so snug and low,
How rich and beautiful it seemed
In childhood's kingdom long ago.

The red geranium on the sill,
The little clock that showed the hour,
The star dust on the windowsill,
The sudden music of a shower,

The singing winds in spring and fall,
The colored dreams from Fancy's mart . . .
Were never quite lost, after all,
Because I have them in my heart.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

GIBLET GRAVY

While you're making the stuffing, cook the neck, gizzard and heart until tender in salted water to which 1 tablespoon mono sodium glutamate has been added. I always use a pressure cooker for this job because it saves time. Strain broth, and when gizzard and heart are cool, chop them into small pieces. Sauté liver a few minutes in a little butter or margarine, chop fine and add all the giblets to the strained broth. Cool and store in refrigerator. When you're ready to make the gravy, pour drippings from roasting pan into broth and giblets, add water and thicken with flour and water beaten into a smooth paste. Season to taste with salt and freshly ground black pepper. I'm not specifying quantities here, and perhaps I'm more gravy-minded than a lot of people, but I think it's a sin and a shame not to have plenty of gravy. It's so good, not only with the Thanksgiving dinner, but for making delicious concoctions out of leftover turkey and stuffing.

CRANBERRY RELISH

Wash and pick over 4 cups cranberries and put them through medium blade of food grinder with 1 unpeeled navel orange, center vein removed. Drain juice from 1 small can crushed pineapple and add pineapple and juice of ½ lemon to cranberries and orange with 1 cup granulated sugar. I think 1 level teaspoon curry powder improves the relish. The taste of the orange and raw cranberries is so dominant that the curry flavor is almost unrecognizable, but it's there. Make relish a couple of days in advance and store in refrigerator.

MASHED POTATOES

I don't have to go into complete details about mashing potatoes, but here are a few points I think are important. Don't cut potatoes into small pieces or they are apt to be soggy. Cover with boiling salted water to start cooking. When you're ready to drain them, don't hold lid of kettle and try to pour off water, but dump the whole business into a colander to be sure the potatoes are thoroughly drained. Return potatoes to kettle and set over low heat to expel moisture. Heat milk and butter or margarine before adding to potatoes. Put kettle in a pan of boiling water during mashing—never let the potatoes get cool. Don't spare the horses on the whipping, and use an electric beater if you have one.

ONIONS AND BACON

Peel small onions, leave them whole and put them in a kettle with a little water, enough vinegar to give the water a delicately acid taste, and a small quantity of bacon cut into slender strips—¼ pound bacon will be enough to season 24 small onions. Cook, uncovered, until flavor of bacon has been released, and add salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste. By the time the onions are tender, most if not all the liquid should have evaporated.

CAULIFLOWER

Cook a small head of cauliflower in salted boiling water until barely tender. It's so easy to overcook cauliflower, and just a little of that mistreatment will ruin both the

(Continued on Page 216)

Why not you ?

A new triumph awaits at your very finger tips—a cake with all the tender deliciousness, all the sumptuous come-hither as the one you see here. And must you go through a struggle to score this new triumph? Not at all. You merely have to add milk to either one of the two new Pillsbury Cake Mixes—White or Chocolate Fudge. Why don't you march in tonight with one of these truly wonderful cakes and give your family a thrill that they can feel right down to the tips of their toes? Why not? Why not you?

Just add milk—

Milk is all you add—no eggs, flavoring, or extras of any kind required. These are complete mixes.

Remember—
You and Ann Pillsbury
can make a great team

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

WHITE AND CHOCOLATE FUDGE

"Its Automatic Features won my heart and made sense to me. I found them only on a Tappan." Yes, the Tel-U-Set puts automatic cooking at your finger tips . . . the Visiguide gives correct times and temperatures for all foods. Other wanted features include "Oven-on" indicator . . . gleaming chrome-lined oven . . . Crisp-Chest storage space keeps salt, sugar, other foods appetizingly dry.

Its Beautiful Performance means cooking success is yours! Oven heats fast . . . Simmerset burners perfect for "waterless" and pressure saucepan cooking . . . Pyroglas burner plates for cooking custards and other delicate foods.

Its Beautiful Value. There's a Tappan range for every budget and every kitchen. Whether you use city gas, Philgas or other LP Gas, you'll get more value, more years of service if you choose a Tappan. For helpful hints on range buying, write The Tappan Stove Company, Dept. 12, Mansfield, Ohio. In Canada, John Inglis Co., Ltd., Toronto.

TAPPAN
Gas Ranges

Cp

Your guide to the best in modern automatic cookery automatic lighting of all burners — automatic oven heat control — automatic oven time control automatic oven illumination — automatic interval timer — automatic "burner on" signals taste and the texture. Test with a fork, and the minute the prongs go in without too much effort on your part, cooking time is up. If the fork sinks in with no effort, the mischief has already been done.

(Continued from Page 214)

To make butter sauce, melt 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in a saucepan, stir in 1 teaspoon flour and add ¼ cup boiling water. Cook until sauce thickens and add salt to taste.

PEAS

Cooked peas—whether you use the frozen kind or the canned variety—need nothing in the way of fixing up but salt and freshly ground pepper to taste, and a little butter or margarine.

If you're going to serve all the vegetables on one platter—which is a very attractive way—put the cauliflower in the center and pour the butter sauce over it. Around the outside rim of platter put a border of mashed potatoes. Arrange three or four groups of onions extending from cauliflower to potato border like the spokes of a wheel, and fill the remaining spaces with peas. Sprinkle cauliflower and potatoes with paprika.

> Youth, though it may lack knowledge, is certainly not devoid of intelligence. It sees through shams with sharp and terrible eyes.
>
> —H. L. MENCKEN.

PUMPKIN NUT PUDDING

Use a 3- or 3½-quart oven-glass baking dish, and the first job is to caramelize the dish. Into a saucepan put ¾ cup light brown sugar and 3 tablespoons butter. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until mixture has come to a boil. Let it boil 1 minute, still stirring, and add ¼ cup water. Again bring to a boil and cook 4 minutes. Let the dish stand in hot water while you're doing this so that the hot liquid won't crack it. Pour sugar mixture into baking dish and immediately tilt the dish in all directions to coat bottom and sides with caramel. If there are any spots at top of sides which aren't coated—and probably there will be—grease these well with butter or margarine. Set dish aside while you make the pudding.

Into a large mixing bowl put 4 cups mashed pumpkin (canned pumpkin is fine), 1¾ cups light brown sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons cloves, 3½ teaspoons cinnamon, 2 teaspoons ginger, ½ teaspoon grated nutmeg and 1 tablespoon grated lemon peel, and mix thoroughly. Beat 6 eggs with rotary beater a couple of minutes, add these t pudding with 3 cups undiluted evaporate milk and ¾ to 1 cup broken nut meats. St until well mixed.

Pour mixture into the caramelized bakin dish. If your dish holds exactly 3 quar there will be some left over. This can b baked in custard cups or a small dish. Pu baking dish in a pan of hot water in a mod erately slow, 325° F., oven and cook abou 2 hours, or until center is firm. When coo put in refrigerator. This is a day-before jo

VANILLA SAUCE

Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine i a saucepan and blend in 3 tablespoons flou Add 1 cup milk and ½ cup sugar and coo over low heat, stirring constantly, unt thick and boiling. Stir in a few drops yello vegetable coloring and 2 teaspoons vanilla. I you like, a few tablespoon brandy may be added fo flavor. The sauce shoul be made the day befor and stored in refrigerato

When you're ready t arrange the platter, let th pudding dish stand in ho water for a few minute Don't plunge the cold dis in hot water or it may, an probably will, crack. Start with lukewarm w ter and increase heat. Run a spatula arou top rim of pudding and invert dish on cent of platter. The pudding will unmold easil Decorate top with halves of nut meats, p cans or English walnuts. Whip 1 cup more heavy cream, mix it with the vanil sauce and spoon around pudding in a borde Service. I'll pass lightly over this depar ment, because serving a Thanksgiving dinn is bound to follow much the same patter The turkey is carved in the dining room part of the fun is seeing the beautiful crea ture in its glory. The other dishes are eithe passed to us or handed around the tab from person to person. Just a few suggestion I'll make: be sure that the gravy is on th table immediately after the bird arrives; an it's wise, also, to have two bowls of gravy two dishes of cranberry relish and two c pickles and other relishes. All the vegetable on one platter will avoid an endless proce sion of serving dishes. This is all in the inte est of expeditious service, so that everyon can enjoy the entire gamut of flavors at th same time. A happy Thanksgiving to yo and yours.

FAVORITE MEALS OF OUR EDITORS

(Continued from Page 66)

may have observed that there was a decided inclination to sit on the edge of the chair and fidget with the paper cutter and glance at the wrist watch and otherwise indicate a strong desire to say, "Well, get on with whatever you came for and make it snappy." But when you spring the sixty-four-dollar question, you're in. That's what, and you know what that means.

Demonstrating our theory. With all this in mind, and thinking you might like to know some of the things—I don't say all—that four JOURNAL editors eat, like and, on occasion, cook themselves, we picked out four and here they are. Two men and two women to keep the seesaw balanced, and I believe you'll find the menus surprising in some ways, and interesting in all ways. In fact, I find it difficult to tell you about them on a day when I'm sort of specially hungry and there isn't a chance of getting a mouthful until dinnertime—a long way off.

Let's start at the top. Beatrice Gould is one half of the two editorial high lights who guide the destinies of our JOURNAL. She is an ideal interviewee. She isn't in a hurry, no matter what. And when asked regarding her favorite meal, she came through without a moment's hesitation: "Why, it's curry—curry of chicken, the way you make it here at the Workshop. And don't spare the curry. I like it hot." (Mrs. Gould is slender an blond and delicate-looking. Hot curry woul seem far from her taste, but that's the way is, and the hotter the better.)

There were other and less lusty dishes o her favorite menu, but first I shall set dow the receipt for B. Gould's and the Worl shop's favorite and famous chicken curry.

CHICKEN CURRY WITH RICE—CONDIMENTS

Wash and simmer in 1 quart water a nic plump roasting chicken, weighing about pounds. Add salt, celery leaves, an onio peeled and cut up, and parsley, to make a ni stock. Cover and simmer until the chicken tender. Lift out the chicken and cool. Strai the stock and save for the sauce. When th chicken is cool enough to handle, remove th skin and take the chicken off the bones in a nice large pieces as possible. Put bones and ski back in the strained chicken stock. Add 1 cu more water and simmer slowly another minutes. Strain again and save. This make the stock richer and better for the curry.

When ready to make the curry, peel an chop 4 onions. Peel, core and chop 1 ta apple. (After peeling and coring, the appl can be chopped with the onion.) Cook th apple and onion slowly in 5 tablespoon butter or margarine, stirring often. Don have heat too high, for you don't wan

(Continued on Page 219)

Lo and behold! She's a Champion Chef with AMAZING REYNOLDS WRAP

(the pure aluminum foil)

Your Turkey Will Have More White Meat—
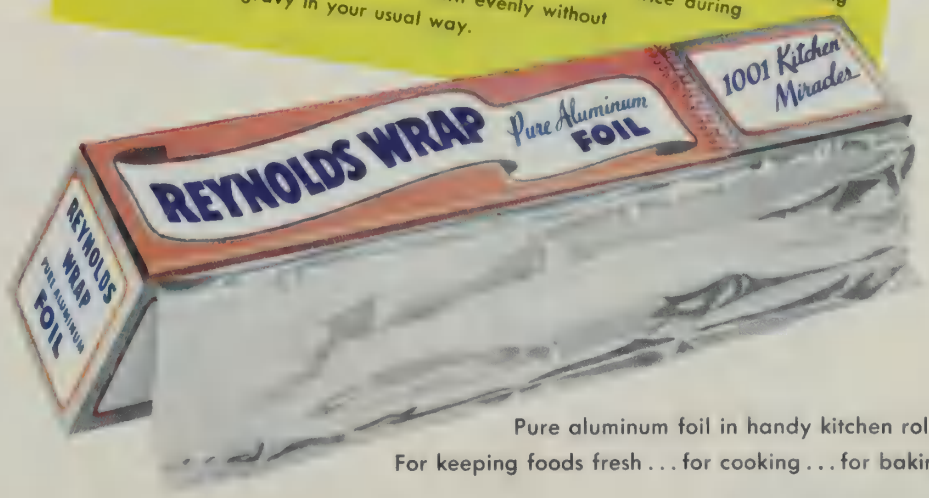
More Dark Meat—
BURSTING WITH FLAVOR!

Don't let that plump bird shrink! To be sure of turning out a holiday turkey full of all its natural juices... roast it the modern way, in a flavor-sealing jacket of Reynolds Wrap. Not only will your family rave about this "sealed-in" flavor...but you'll be free from turkey-tending! No basting necessary, no oven-watching. Easier to carve. And after dinner, you won't have the hard, tedious job of scouring that roasting pan. Illustrated folder containing full instructions with every roll. Sold in leading Grocery, Drug, Department and Housewares stores. Buy a roll today!

FOIL-ROASTED TURKEY

(recipe developed for use with Reynolds Wrap only)



Clean, stuff and truss turkey, rub with seasoning, salt and fat.

To wrap: Place turkey on a long sheet of Reynolds Wrap, more than twice as long as the bird. Fold foil over turkey, join edges firmly. For a large bird, join two long pieces with a tight double fold in center. (Turkey may be wrapped the night before and stored in refrigerator. Before roasting, open foil and bring bird to room temperature, then reseal foil for roasting.)

To roast: Place wrapped turkey on rack in pan, breast side up, in moderately hot oven at 400°F. Allow the following approximate times for stuffed bird. (Stuffed weight is about the same as undrawn weight; or allow 3 lbs. for stuffing.)

10–14 lbs.—18 minutes per pound—3 –4 hours
15–18 lbs.—16 minutes per pound—4 –4½ hours
19–24 lbs.—14 minutes per pound—4½–5 hours

To brown: During last 45 minutes, open and slip foil from around turkey, letting juices run into pan. Brush well with melted fat once or twice during browning. Turkey and juices will brown evenly without burning. Make gravy in your usual way.

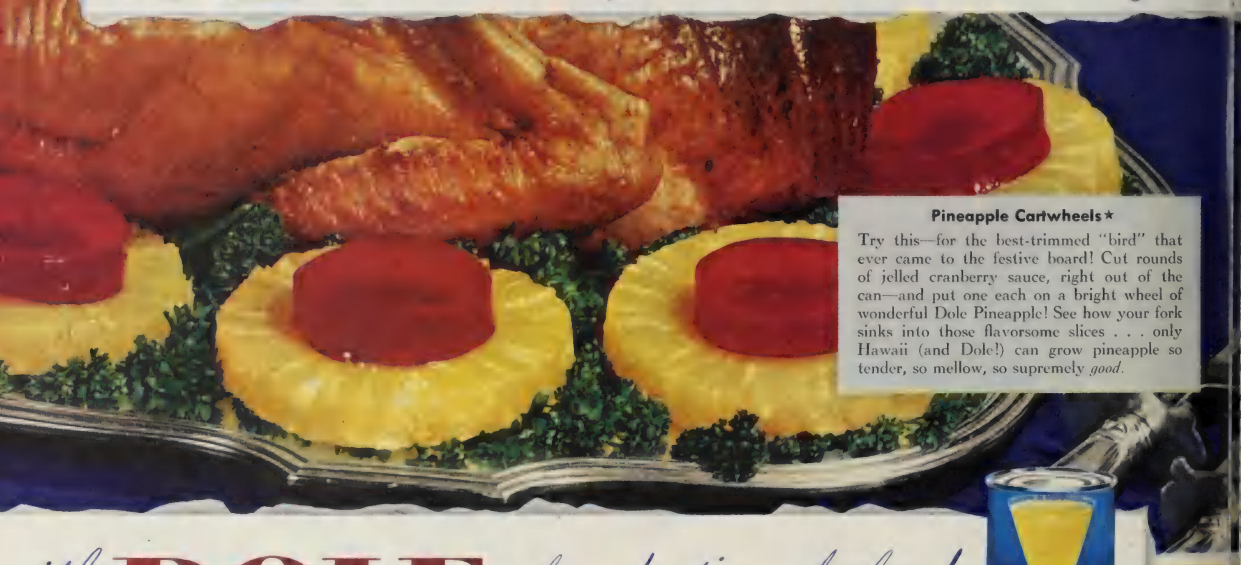
Pure aluminum foil in handy kitchen rolls.
For keeping foods fresh . . . for cooking . . . for baking

Buy it by name:

REYNOLDS WRAP

made by the World's Largest Producer of Aluminum Foil . . . used and praised by leading Home Economists throughout America

REYNOLDS Aluminum



©1950 REYNOLDS METALS CO., LOUISVILLE, KY.

Snow Cap Salad★

Company season calls for something party-special, and here it is—Dole Fruit Cocktail! Happy news for holiday menus, this medley of five different fruits—among them, Dole's famous pineapple! Heap it in a nest of cottage cheese. Then top with a saucy "snow cap" of cheese, too—and you'll have a real treat to grace your table!

Holiday the Hawaiian way—

Pineapple Cartwheels★

Try this—for the best-trimmed "bird" that ever came to the festive board! Cut rounds of jelled cranberry sauce, right out of the can—and put one each on a bright wheel of wonderful Dole Pineapple! See how your fork sinks into those flavorsome slices . . . only Hawaii (and Dole!) can grow pineapple so tender, so mellow, so supremely good.

with DOLE for festive dishes!

Pineapple Pumpkin Pie★

Pumpkin pie with a "plus"—that turns it from an ordinary dessert into one that's marvelous! Make your pumpkin filling using evaporated milk for extra richness; take pie from oven 10 minutes before it's done and give it the luscious-touch—Dole crisp-cut Crushed Pineapple across the top. Return to oven to let that true Hawaiian pineapple taste simmer in. Every forkful is pure heaven!

★By Patricia Collier, DOLE HOME ECONOMIST
DOLE, 215 Market Street, San Francisco 6, California

(Continued from Page 216)

vning here. They should be just golden ow. A large skillet is best for this. Push n and apple to one side of the pan and oth 4 tablespoons flour into the fat, ing and stirring slowly until flour and fat a light brown. Remove from the heat add 1 quart chicken stock. (If the stock reduced so much there isn't quite a t, add canned, clear chicken broth to e up your quart. That's 4 cups, in case don't remember.) Stir over low heat un-ne sauce is smooth and thick enough. If hick, thin with a little broth. Now add p seedless raisins, the juice of ½ lemon a strip of lemon peel ½" wide and 1½"
. Simmer 5 minutes and add 1 cup light
m. ason with salt—about 2 teaspoons.

2 to 5 tablespoons curry powder with a cold water and stir into the sauce.
better to start with 2 tablespoons curry work up to the point where it's just t for your taste.) And don't forget to
. It's the only way to tell. Add more at this point if you need it.

hen the sauce is well seasoned, remove n peel and add the chicken, cut into s that are easy to eat. Simmer until the ken is heated through. The sauce should f the consistency of very heavy cream.
good soft custard. Serve with perfect ed rice, every kernel rate. As all rice should cooked. For condi-
ts: chutney, of course,
ed chopped almonds
peanuts, and grated coconut. (Serves 4–

If all mankind minus one were of one opinion, and only one person were of the contrary opinion, mankind would be no more justified in silencing that one person than he, if he had the power, would be justified in silencing mankind. —JOHN STUART MILL sual and special. I shall have to move into the first-things-class and tell you t a rather unusual and remarka- ppetizer that is one of Beatrice Gould's rites. She often serves it with other meals curry.

OKED-SALMON-AND-CUCUMBER APPETIZER are the cucumbers at least an hour l of time, so they will have a chance to nate and chill and act like ladies.

mbers with sour cream and dill: Peel ge or 4 medium-size crisp cucumbers. thin but not paper-thin. Add 1 cup sour cream, 3 tablespoons finely minced s, 1½ teaspoons dried dill (or fresh, is wonderful), 3 teaspoons salt, a good of pepper, a dash of Tabasco sauce and lespoons vinegar. Mix very thoroughly hill 1 hour or more. (Cucumbers take lot of salt, and when you taste them they have stood or marinated, they at first taste too salty—but flavors ogether when they have a chance. before serving and be sure the season- just right.) Lift spoonfuls of cucumbers a slotted spoon onto cold plates to re- some of the juice. You will want some but not so much that it will run on late.

ound the cucumbers, arrange alternat- rips of thin sliced smoked salmon and les of buttered pumpernickel bread.

happy ending. And maybe to cool at Indian summer that makes the main e in this meal, is a dessert that Mrs. d's mother used to make and that Bea- still thinks is tops. It's three in one, and icious as they come. And it's as good any meal as it is with curry. It's some- to remember and surprise folks with, the same time.

THREE-FRUIT SHERBET

nd mash 3 small ripe bananas. Add the of 3 oranges and 3 lemons. Add 2 cups and 2 cups water. Stir until the sugar solved. Pour into 2 refrigerator trays eeze, setting up refrigerator to coldest n. During the freezing time, stir 20 minutes until mushy and sherbet- t runs to about 2 hours. Serves 4–6.

Last August we made this with puréed ripe peaches for Mrs. Gould and she didn't recognize it at first. Try it with peaches sometime—or apricots.

A designer next. The young man who eats such exotic fare as Shrimp Tempura and Beef Stroganoff and dates with oranges, an idea picked up in Bagdad, is one of our more Pegasus-riding architects and designers. He has done some pretty, eye-bewildering things around our Workshop, including the beautiful and fascinating entertainment room where parties and luncheons are given, and from where you look down on the magnificent panorama that is New York, set in its glorious jade-and-silver bracelet of river and park, with the towers of Babylon standing over all. Well, Hal Williams has been almost everywhere except Babylon for his inspiration. Come to think of it, I haven't asked him; maybe he has, since his favorite dessert comes right out of Bagdad, and I guess that's as romantic as you need to get. So let's get to it. The first item is:

FRIED SHRIMP TEMPURA

Wash, shell and take out the back veins from 1½ pounds raw shrimp, but leave the tails on. Cut almost but not quite in two, lengthwise. Press open. For the batter, sift ¾ cup flour with ¼ teaspoon salt. Beat 2 egg yolks and add to ⅔ cup milk. Beat into the flour. When smooth, add 1 tablespoon melted shortening or salad oil. When ready to serve, dip the shrimp one by each, as they say, into the batter by their tails. Plunge into hot fat (shortening or salad oil, heated to 375° F.). Fry until the shrimp are golden brown and cooked through. Two or three minutes—well, stand by, as all good fryers do. Serve with little bowls of soy sauce to which you've added a little canned chicken broth and a little dry mustard. Taste your sauce, as you ought to all sauces, and add soy or mustard or both, as you like it. To eat, dip each shrimp in the sauce.

Hal has a word for it. I mean the genesis of the dish you are to learn about now; but whatever its origin, Hal Williams describes it as "lyric." That's high praise for any dish, and I know a lyric when I see one. Hal's an accomplished cook in his own right as well as a genius with color, and I'm not questioning his phrases.

Knowing that Hal's masterpiece will soon become a specialty hither and yon (and isn't he pretty good to give?). I won't keep you waiting. Here's your ——

BEEF STROGANOFF

Cut 1½ pounds tender sirloin steak into thin strips—about the thickness of a pencil—first cutting off all the fat. Don't substitute round or chuck steak for this—it must be tender beef to begin with. Dredge the meat lightly with flour and season with salt and pepper. Sauté 2 onions, chopped fine, with ½ pound mushrooms, chopped or sliced, and 1 clove garlic, minced, in 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, for about 5 minutes. Add the beef and enough more butter or margarine to take care of the beef. Have the beef good and hot. At this point, stay with your masterpiece and keep tossing the mixture as it fries. This is a quick process and should take no more than 3 minutes, as you want the steak to be underdone. Lift out the meat and mushrooms. There should be about 2 tablespoons of drippings in the skillet. Pour off any extra. If not that much, add what is needed.

Now blend 2 tablespoons flour into the fat. Add 1 can condensed bouillon or consommé—don't dilute it—stir until smooth and thickened. Then add 1 pint thick sour cream, salt and pepper to taste. Keep heat low, so the cream won't curdle. Add 1 teaspoon paprika and 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce. Just before serving, add beef and vegetables to sauce and heat together a Baker's Magic!

Rustling in a light wind...bursting-ripe in a billion kernel in a billion hiding places, is flavor.

There's a trick to capturing it. It's turning the soft hea of the kernel to perfect flour. It's leavening . . . a delicat toasting touch—the things of a baker's magic! Yet the flav lives—excitingly—in golden HI HO crackers.

This flavor with the hint of sun-ripe wheat kernels yours . . . safely guarded by an exclusiv four-way wrapper. Remember . . .

It's Sunshine Hi Ho for Finer Flavor!

FROM THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES OF Sunshine Biscuits

try EASIEST-TO-USE

HAMILTON BEACH

...the Quality Food Mixer!

PYREX MIXING BOWLS! Mix, bake, serve, and store in the same bowl—less dishwashing! Always-useful Pyrex Ware is washable in hot water—more sanitary! Compare!

EASIEST PORTABILITY

New, lighter beater unit glides off the stand for use at a table, at the range—anywhere. No triggers, catches, or latches. Easy off, easy on . . . with one hand. Compare!

EASIEST OPERATION

The hand that holds the mixer sets the speed. Leaves your other hand free to hold a pan or add ingredients. Full power at every speed setting. Compare!

EASIEST SPEED CONTROL

MIXGUIDE puts 10 tested speeds right under your thumb, right under your eye—magnified for flash reading. Only Hamilton Beach has such easy speed control. Compare!

$35.25

($35.90 Denver—West.) Includes two Pyrex bowls and extra single beater.

BOWLS NOW PYREX!

JUICE EXTRACTOR $4.25

($4.35 Denver and West.)

NEW POWER UNIT!

For use with meat grinder and slicer-shredder. Fits every Hamilton Beach made since 1932. Easy to attach, remove, clean, and store.

$5.00 ($5.25 Denver and West.)

EASIEST JUICING

Juice, strained free of seeds and coarse pulp, flows directly into serving glass. Nothing extra to wash. Juice extractor lifts out for easy cleaning. Rustless. Compare!

EASIEST BOWL CONTROL

Shifts ever-turning Pyrex Ware bowl while beaters revolve. Gives even, thorough mixing every time, without stopping the motor or touching the beaters. Compare!

GET TIME-TESTED HAMILTON BEACH QUALITY!

Compare feature for feature and you'll choose Hamilton Beach because it's easiest to use! Also see these new work-saving attachments—meat grinder, slicer-shredder, coffee grinder, pea huller and bean slicer. Hamilton Beach Co., Div. of Scovill Mfg. Co., Racine, Wis.

New HAMILTON BEACH Mixette

BEAT, MIX, MASH, WHIP in any bowl or pan.
MIXES EVERYTHING. Quality Hamilton Beach motor has full power.
THUMB ADJUSTS SPEED. Other hand holds pan or adds ingredients.
HANGS ON WALL or fits in drawer—bracket furnished.
BEATERS SNAP IN for use—snap out for cleaning.

$17.75 IN GIFT BOX

($18.25 Denver and West.) Includes bracket and screws for wall mounting.

Made by the makers of top-value Hamilton Beach Vacuum Cleaners few minutes. Taste for seasoning, adding more salt if needed. The trick is to get the meat done to just the right stage and to keep it so. That last trick gives you a grand slam!

A simple-dish guy. Hal cooks more at his week-end house in the country than in town. "I'm a simple-dish guy," he says. He likes his spinach chopped and sprinkles Parmesan cheese mixed with sieved hard-boiled-egg yolk over it. He puts everything in the world in his salad, mixes the dressing in an old Navy cup. For seasonings, he uses garlic salt, plain salt, considerable dry mustard, a good shot of cayenne—always marjoram or rosemary.

And here is that contribution from Bagdad. As you see, it's simple too and very, very good.

HOT STUFFED DATES—WITH ORANGES

Stuff ½ pound pitted dates with pieces of walnut. Heat in a moderate oven, 350° F. Squeeze lime or lemon juice over the dates and sprinkle with powdered sugar. While the dates are still hot, serve with orange sections.

Another gourmet. This introduces Biffy Page, who claims that her husband, Tim, is the gourmet of the family and does most of the fancy cooking while she does the chores of peeling the vegetables, plucking the ducks and such. You would never dream it to look at her—would you? However, she comes into her own with centerpieces and table fixings, at which she has a master hand. In fact, she brought her own silver, china and place mats from Philadelphia, where she lives, and arranged the centerpiece for her meal. I should also tell you that the table settings of each of our editors are from their own personal collections.

Love is a journey into a new country; and like any other journey, its length depends entirely on what the country has to show. There should be woods with silent undergrowth, where comfort lives; bright rivers of vitality; clean cities built on foundations of fine tradition and splendid with tall towers of learning and religion; green fields where simple thought and senses play . . . and mountains so high that as one climbs one breathes quickening air not known to ordinary men—so high that by day the earth lies clear beneath like an open map, and by night the stars are just beyond arm's length above. In such a country a man can live forever. —REBECCA WEST.

Around the JOURNAL, one of Biffy's jobs is meeting with the cartoonists who come to the New York office every other Wednesday in droves, with cartoons by the hundreds. From their wares, Biffy makes the first—but not the final—selection of all those cartoons that you come upon in our pages.

But now we come to her chosen menu, and what a choice to make the mouth water—if you happen to have a husband who is a good duck shooter.

BREAST OF WILD DUCK

Lay strips of bacon or salt pork over the breasts of 2 cleaned and dressed wild ducks. Chop coarsely 2 peeled onions and place inside the birds. Put them in a shallow roasting pan with ½ cup water to prevent sticking. Then roast in a very hot oven, 500° F., 18 minutes. Birds should be underdone, as you will cook them again later. Carefully remove the breasts. Set them aside until this famous sauce is ready:

Sauce Bigarade: Pour 1½ cups canned clear chicken broth over the duck carcasses and legs. Add ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon grated onion and a bouquet (small piece of bay leaf, few whole black peppers, 1 or 2 small pieces of celery, 1 leek, diced, several sprigs of parsley and a pinch of thyme—all tied in a square of cheesecloth with a string). Now, girls, don't use the clothesline for this. A modest string will do it. Simmer 1 hour. Strain stock. Rub the grater sparingly over the outside of 1 orange to break the oil cells in various spots. Peel off the rind in pieces, making sure there is no white membrane attached. Cut into thin julienne strips or slivers. Boil 3 minutes in water. Drain.

To the drippings in the pan in which you roasted the duck, add 1 tablespoon flour. If there is no fat in the pan, use 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Now smooth in the flour for 1 minute over low heat. Add the duck stock, ½ teaspoon paprika, a dash of cayenne or Tabasco sauce. Stir until the sauce is smooth and slightly thickened. Strain. Add ¼ cup strained orange juice and the slivered orange rind. Put in the duck breasts and cook 2 to 3 minutes to heat up the duck. Serve the breasts in the sauce accompanied by wild rice. (Tim adds onion salt, and a little grated garlic to the rice when cooked.) Serves 4.

End of a perfect meal. There has to be an ending to every good beginning, and Biffy Page, after much thought and turning over of mind, settled for this one, out of a possible three or four. This is one of her favorites, and it's light enough and right enough to wind up—with coffee to follow on—this superb and superior menu. (By the way, she says that broccoli and green-beans hollandaise are her favored greens. "And," she adds, "lay out the beans in neat little rows." If you knew her, you'd know what that means.) Well, to get on and put you out of your "expense," as my mother's cook used to say, here's the dessert:

SPANISH CREAM

Pour 2½ cups milk in the top of the double boiler and soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in it for 5 minutes. Place over hot water. Add ¼ teaspoon salt and ½ cup sugar. Stir until the gelatin and sugar are dissolved. Pour slowly into 3 slightly beaten egg yolks. Mix until smooth and cook over hot water until slightly thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Pour into a bowl and add 2 teaspoons vanilla. Fold in 3 egg whites, beaten stiff but not dry. Pour into a mold. Chill until firm. Unmold and serve with fresh or frozen raspberries. Serves 4–6.

The easiest man. That, my friends, is Hugh Kahler, who screens and selects the stories JOURNAL readers pore over till the wee small hours. May I present Mr. Kahler, who says he is the easiest man in the world to cook for, and his simple favorite menu, which is steak. This, he says, he eats four nights out of seven, though the steak is more often hamburger than sirloin. Mrs. Kahler says she cooks by guess and by golly—a pinch of this and soupçon of that. Good girl, that Mrs. Kahler. Name is Louise, good-looking too.

Here it is. Most men will endorse this setup. Lots of women will, too, including yours truly. And so that you may have all the low-down, I'll give it to you as Hugh likes it.

BROILED PORTERHOUSE STEAK

Preheat the broiler. Slash fat around edge of a 1½–2″-thick steak. Place on broiler rack about 3″ from heat. A thinner steak can be placed 2″ away. Broil until top is well seared. Season with salt and pepper and turn over. Finish browning on other side. Season and serve. Steaks 1″ thick require 18 to 20 minutes for rare, 20 to 25 minutes for medium done. Steaks cut 2″ thick require 30–35 minutes for rare and 35–45 for medium.

You don't need receipts for his meal. The Lima beans are frozen, as is the pineapple. Black cherries and madrilene are canned. Well, he is the easiest man!

Oh, yes, indeed. We have other editors, and very good editors too. If you have been reading the JOURNAL in the past years, you have met some of them before. But I'm sure you're glad to meet these four. What could be a happier meeting than one around the dinner table? To paraphrase an old cliché and one I guess you'll agree with, eating is here to stay. And we're here to prove it, with you all to help us. THE END

My! My! ...what a PIE!

Pineapple-Custard . . . a marvelously rich, smooth custard made with famous Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese

2 POPULAR SIZES
3 oz. favorite since 1880
½ lb. saves you much 12%

DESSERT THAT'S DIFFERENT!

No ordinary pie, this. It's utterly different. In its filling there's the enrichening magic of fresh, delicate Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese!

Guests will beg for this recipe:

Blend ⅓ cup sugar with 1 tbsp. cornstarch and add a 9-oz. can of crushed pineapple, juice and all. Cook, stirring constantly, until the mixture is thick and clear. Cool.

Blend an 8-oz. package of Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese, softened at room temperature, with ½ cup sugar and 1 tsp. salt. Add two eggs, one at a time. Stir well after each egg is added. Blend in ½ cup milk and ½ tsp. vanilla.

Spread cooled pineapple mixture over the bottom of a 9-inch unbaked pastry shell. Pour in cream cheese mixture and sprinkle with ¼ cup of chopped pecans.

Bake in a moderately hot oven (400°) for 10 minutes, then reduce heat to a very moderate oven (325°) and bake for 50 minutes. Cool. And hide it from the family!

BE CAREFUL! This custard gets its smooth richness from fresh-tasting Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese. Other cream cheeses are in similar wrappers but they can't bear this brand name or bring you this quality famous since 1880. "Philadelphia" is so superior it outsells all other brands of cream cheese combined. So always look for and insist on genuine Philadelphia Brand.

TRY THIS BREAKFAST TREAT. Wholesome, nutritious Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese and jelly to spread on breakfast toast. It's grand! And, of course, for snacks and salads and sandwiches, this creamy-rich, fresh-tasting cream cheese can't be beat.

There's only one "Philadelphia" Cream Cheese...the brand that's made by KRAFT and guaranteed fresh!

Give the GIFT that Gives...

doubly delicious extra nutritious meals cooked 3 to 4 times faster

For Holiday Cheer,
(3 Times a Day, Every Day)
Throughout The Year . . .

The ideal gift for any homemaker is one or a set of PRESTO COOKERS! These best-of-all kitchen helpers can give her up to 300 extra hours of kitchen freedom in a single year, because PRESTO Cooking prepares foods in fractions of ordinary cooking times.

The tender-as-butter, 4 lb. roast (shown here) was prepared in a PRESTO COOKER in 35 minutes . . . the carrots in 3 minutes . . . celery in 2 minutes . . . whole onions in 5 minutes . . . potatoes in 10 minutes . . . steamed pudding in 70 minutes . . . tomato soup in 2 minutes. But these are only a few examples of the wonders of PRESTO Cooking . . . the easy, modern method praised by homemakers, everywhere.

PRESTO Cooking saves money on food bills because it retains more of the natural vitamins and minerals in foods. It saves money on fuel bills, too.

Millions of new, as well as experienced homemakers, know from their own experiences that for best results in cooking every time, PRESTO COOKERS can't be beat.

For the finest gifts imaginable for any homemaker, give PRESTO COOKERS! Available at better housewares stores.

©1950 N.P.C. CO.

NATIONAL Presto COOKERS

YOUR CHOICE OF 7 SIZES AND 11 MODELS

Illustrated is the new, beautiful COPPER BONDED STAINLESS STEEL PRESTO COOKER, priced at $18.95*. Other sizes include the "FRY-MASTER", the 6-qt. "MEAT-MASTER", the 4-qt. "COOK-MASTER" and the 3-qt. "VEGE-MASTER", priced from $10.95*.

GIVEN . . . with every PRESTO COOKER, at no extra cost, the finest pressure cooker recipe and illustrated instruction book ever published. 128 pages of valuable information.

NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER COMPANY, Eau Claire, Wisconsin World's Largest Manufacturer of Pressure Cookers and Canners
Makers Also of the Amazing PRESTO VAPOR-STEAM IRON

HIGHLY ELIGIBLE BACHELOR

(Continued from Page 40)

calmly. "I had nothing else to do. Nothing but come down and watch the hoary ones make spectacles of themselves."

"This is my wife's sister," Bud said. "Mabel Miller, Tim Carroway."

She looked around, and like a thousand others in the long and troubled life of Timothy Carroway, whetted the razor. "Carroway?" she repeated. "My, but you're a seedy one."

Bud and Tim looked at each other. Bud shrugged. "My wife's sister," he said again. "Don't look at me. I only made one Carroway-seedy crack in four years here and that was the first week."

"If I knew you were coming," Tim said to her, "I'd have baked a loaf of rye bread."

"I know I asked for that," she said, "but it still wasn't very good."

Tim studied her. She was about twenty-two and she had brown hair and she was nice-looking. She looked about a year out of Barnard. Mabel Miller. Bud Kinnaird's wife's sister. There was something about her.

"Wellesley," she said, looking up at him again. "I can't keep it."

"Watch the game. They're kicking off."

"Yes, sir," she said.

The ball spiraled into the sunny blue-gray sky, hung for a moment like Nijinsky in his Spectre de la Rose leap, and then dropped into the arms of a Pennsylvania back, who made fourteen yards up the left side of the field and was brought down on his nose by a Princeton end. They lined up for the first scrimmage, arranging themselves in fiendish positions; everybody in the stands stopped holding his breath and sat down, and she looked back at him once more.

"Hello, Carroway," she said.

"Miller," he said, nodding politely.

The game was played and somebody won and they had three hot dogs each. When they were walking back to the center of town, through the campus and past venerable institutions like Nassau Hall and Osborn Field House, Bud got nostalgic. Tim suggested that he can it.

"But we were happy here," Bud said protestingly.

"You sound like Noel Coward," Tim said.

MABEL MILLER was walking between them, grasping the inside arm of each one firmly. "No soul, Carroway?" she asked.

"College is college," he said. "I did all the required reading, sold the Tiger on football afternoons and even helped burn a big P in the grass at Yale Bowl with chemicals one Friday night. But it's over. It was over a long time ago. I got other adventures now."

"I'll bet you have," she murmured.

"Huh?"

"Nothing. We didn't have college at Wellesley. All we did was shoot bows and arrows and play field hockey. So I don't know what all this fond-reminiscence stuff is about. I'm just beginning to come alive."

"Where?" he asked.

"New York. I work for the Federal Broadcasting Company and I have a good job. A very good job for a twenty-two-year-old with the handicap of a Wellesley education. I write to my mother and I put the cap back on the tooth paste."

"I work in New York too," he said. "I live there too. As a matter of fact, is there any other place but New York?"

"Of course not," she said matter-of-factly.

Bud snorted. "You two make me sick," he said. "What's the matter with Westchester?"

"*West*chester?" she echoed. She looked at Tim and he shrugged at the suggestion of the idiot child.

They had reached the Nassau Tavern.

"Shall we wash the nasty word out of Mr. Kinnaird's mouth with some ale?" Tim said.

"By all means," she said.

He looked at her as they started up the steps. "New York, hey?" he said. She just beamed.

"Watkins seven-three-three-one-four," she said. "If my roommate answers, you're in luck. She's much prettier than I."

To be confronted at any stage of one's life with a woman whose nickname is "Mealy" is an unsettling thing.

But life in a girl's school is a precocious thing at times, and it involves the bestowal of such names on defenseless females. Thus, Mabel Miller: Mealy Miller. The girl at Wellesley who was most unlike a Wellesley girl. She abhorred field hockey, she wasn't particularly interested in the fate of the world and she had a 100 per cent record for absence from all lectures on how to be a successful wife and mother. The poor child operated by instinct—assuming, therefore, that becoming a successful wife and mother was the natural thing to do and she wouldn't have any trouble with it—and so she spent a great deal of her college career doing what she felt like. She never was in bed at the scheduled curfew, always coming in two hours late, through a window leading into the coal cellar, after having had not a heavy date but a peaceful evening sitting on a nearby hilltop and meditating quietly on the cosmos. She was a rugged individualist, but never obnoxiously so. To repeat, she was a creature of instinct.

But a number of things are necessarily forced on a girl coming to Manhattan fresh from the ivy halls. You must acquire a roommate because you can't pay the rent yourself. You need a telephone for assorted reasons, and when you are twenty-two you don't feel presumptuous enough to have a private listing of the number. So you are in the phone book for all your assorted schoolmates and their dates and your own dates to look you up when they hit New York, and they do. The roommate, the telephone, the beardless youths on the doorstep all do not make for the private, individualistic life, to any great extent.

But, Tim Carroway observed, Mealy Miller didn't seem to mind. He called Watkins 7-3314 two days after the Pennsylvania game, asked her to have dinner with him and got to her basement apartment in East 55th Street about 6:45 that night, to discover that Gloria Moore, the roommate, was entertaining a date, and that there also was on hand in the big living room a third couple, answering to the mystic names of Farthing (the boy) and Perkins (the girl). There was a spread of some thirteen years or so between their average age and that of Tim, but it has been mentioned that he is the Joe College type. They accepted him promptly as a peer.

"Where'll we eat?" Farthing asked.

"Who's got any money?" Gloria's date asked.

"Farthing," Perkins demanded suspiciously, "I thought you got your first pay check yesterday."

He looked at her blandly. "I bought this sports jacket. Cost me all but two bucks of my first pay. Don't you think it becomes me?"

(Continued on Page 224)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

No Bargain

By Jehanne de Mare

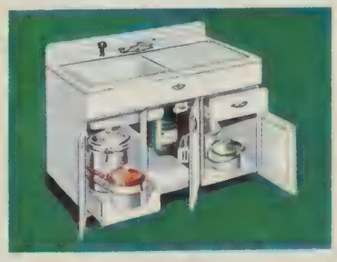
Love will not follow you dancing,
Nor follow you dead,
Nor put scented sheets of fine flax
On your bridal bed.

Love will do all of the asking,
And you, of the giving.
But those who grow tired of love
Are tired of living.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

OMPLETELY MODERNIZE DISHWASHING

-h the YOUNGSTOWN KITCHENS JET-TOWER DISHWASHER



…n Kitchens Automatic Dishwasher, …; the exclusive JET-TOWER …ydro-Brush Action. Beautiful …net of die-made STEEL. The …nes she has, the more time she'll …es all the dishes for a meal for …matically, electrically.

New Youngstown Kitchens Electric Sink with JET-TOWER Dishwasher. In just 9¾ minutes (average water pressure), 64 booster-heated jets wash and double-rinse every part of every dish. For full labor saving, add Youngstown Kitchens Food Waste Disposer (extra).

…" Twin Cabinet Sink. Designed for …line dishwashing. One-piece …id-resisting porcelain-enameled …se spray. Add the Youngstown … Food Waste Disposer (extra) …her kitchen clean as she goes.

Youngstown Kitchens 48" DeLuxe Twin Cabinet Sink has two bowls, one laundry-deep. Sliding drainboard covers either bowl. Note rinse spray, sliding shelf and cutting board. If you build or buy, insist on a Youngstown Kitchen. You'll save!

It's A Family Gift You Never Could Give Before!

It's true! This Christmas, for the first time, you can give her a real, year-round holiday from kitchen drudgery!

There's more sentiment in these gifts that say, "I love you"—and save time and work every day to prove it. Now you can completely modernize the only major household task she still does the old-fashioned, "by-hand" way.

Give her this greatest helper she ever had. She'll still be thanking you a dozen Christmases from now!

Yes, every day for many years to come, she'll be glad you gave her automatic dishwashing the Youngstown way.

See the features that make the Jet-Tower Dishwasher a year-round Christmas holiday; see how easy it is to finance! For exciting kitchen-planning ideas, write today.

(Illustrated: Modern Youngstown Kitchen, built of long-life steel, featuring Youngstown Kitchens Electric Sink.)

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

Call Western Union, Operator 25, and without charge get the name of a nearby dealer.

Youngstown Kitchens®

JET-TOWER JUNIOR FOR UNDER THE TREE!

A grand toy, any time! This clever working miniature works just like the Youngstown Automatic Dishwasher—even uses water. Comes complete with miniature dishes, pots, pans and silverware. A wonderful, new surprise for under the tree. See it at your Youngstown Kitchen dealer's.

© 1950 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

LITTLE LULU

Sneezin's greetings! It's Kleenex*!

Little Lulu says: DURING COLDS, GIVE YOUR NOSE A HOLIDAY WITH COMFORTING KLEENEX TISSUES. YOU'LL AGREE NO OTHER TISSUE CAN EASE RAW BEEZERS — STIFLE SNEEZES — JUST LIKE SOOTHING, STURDY KLEENEX. SERVES ONE AT A TIME!

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO. * T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Exquisite Form
BRASSIERES

STYLE 801
Embroidered Nylon Marquisette cups with satin frame and back.
A Cup, sizes 32 to 36
B Cup, sizes 32 to 38
C Cup, sizes 32 to 40
White and Black
$3.00

Hi Low Witchery
The exciting difference is this simple small wire

EXQUISITE FORM BRASSIERE, INC. New York 16 • Los Angeles 14 • Toronto

(Continued from Page 222)

Tim felt for the arm of the easy chair in which he was sitting, and sought his bearings. From the bedroom came the voice—the lovely, warm and young voice—of Mealy Miller.

"Carroway?"

"Um-m."

"We're going out with these characters, at least until we can give them the shake and go somewhere to neck. Okay?"

"Sure, sure. Fine."

What he had had in mind was the St. Regis, but looking around, he realized that that would be another time. This looked like a G.A. session. The G.A. is a place at Third Avenue and 17th Street, under the elevated tracks, called Joe King's Rathskeller. It used to be the German-American A.C., but world wars do wonders for names of restaurants. Tim Carroway had gone there first in 1934. If you called it the undergraduates' home away from home, you might be corny but you wouldn't be far wrong.

Tim studied Gloria Moore furtively as the conversation bubbled along. She was tall and blond and busty, and she had gone through four years at Wellesley, but she had fought off its influence successfully. Aside from a thin right-side-of-the-tracks veneer, that definitely was there, she looked more like a musical-comedy clotheshorse. And there was, it appeared, no lack of self-confidence in Miss Moore.

"What do you do, Tim?" she asked, coming around to his chair and sitting down on the arm. She was twenty-two, too, but in many ways she was not twenty-two. Tim wondered how she and Mealy became roommates. Nice legs, though.

"I'm a literary agent," he said, hunting for his pipe. "I discovered at a reasonably early age that my writing was not quite everlasting, so I try to sell other writers'."

"And who are the other writers?"

"Well, I make most of my money out of Harry McKinley—you know, The Love of Cara Hills, et al. I fastened onto Harry about three years ago, like the tsetse fly on the rhinoceros—no, that doesn't sound right—and he's been paying my rent ever since."

"I'd love to meet Harry McKinley."

"I guess you would," he said, smiling pleasantly. She looked at him candidly.

"Why don't we all go to the G.A.?" Perkins broke in.

TIM paid himself twenty-five cents for winning his mental bet. Farthing and Perkins both were small and dark and animated. They must have gone through college, he reasoned, but they looked like third term at Groton or Miss Hewitt's.

They got the show on the road, finally, piling into a taxi which Tim paid for as unostentatiously as possible, and then went in through the doors of the G.A. like Notre Dame on an end sweep. Dinner at the G.A. is a comparatively inexpensive process, but during the fumbling for funds to meet the check, Tim wondered if he could volunteer to pay it all. He vetoed that finally as the wrong gesture, and went along with the business at hand by producing four of his oldest and most tattered one-dollar bills. Mealy, sitting next to him under a dark wooden wall covered with carved initials and college emblems, squeezed his hand. When they got the check paid, however, they decided to stay awhile and drink some beer. It was only a little while before the strange chant began, in one corner of the smoky downstairs room, as it has every night for a hundred years.

"We are table number one!" roared the occupants of a corner festive board. "We are table number one! We are table number one—where is number two?"

From across the room, the cantata resumed: "We are table number two! We are table number two! We are ——"

Tim grinned and sipped his beer. Farthing was betting Perkins a dime he couldn't drink his beer chug-a-lug (no, wait a minute, that was Perkins betting Farthing)—i.e., without removing the glass from his lips. Farthing tried and won, and then eyed the big glass

Wake up... skin beau

10 minute home facial magically awakens your skin!

Tonight, unmask your real skin beauty with Hopper White Clay Pack. In just ten minutes . . . a lovelier YOU! So easy too. Simply smooth on. Let dr Rinse. Suddenly . . . your face feels refreshed, tingling clean, looks fabulou fine-textured, positively radiant. Try it t Money-back—if not completely satisfi *25¢ to $1. Also 10¢ trial size.

FOLLOW-UP your Hopper Home Facial with e softening Hopper Homogenized Facial Cr *prices p

HOPPER® white cla pack HOME FACIAL

EZO—The Soft Dental Cushion To Help False Teeth Wearers

Now, pleasant relief from ILL-FITTIN DENTURES can be yours with super EZO Dental Cushions. No need to both with paste or powder. EZO is SOFT PLIABLE.

Money Back If You're Not Satisfied

Order Direct from Laboratory
Send $1 for 20 EZO Lowers
Send $1 for 16 EZO Uppers or Send $2 for Both

EZO PRODUCTS COMPAN
Dept. 421B, Box 9306, Philadelphia 39, P

BOWLING BAL

YOU can easily win one of these nationally adv Mineralite Bowling Balls, bored to fit your within the next week!

Send us only nine 2-year Ladies' Home Journal sub tions or five 2-year Saturday Evening Post subscri which you sell to persons living outside your home full subscription price. Renewals count the same subscriptions. (2-year L.H.J. subscriptions, $5.00; subscriptions S.E.P., $10.00.)

Write subscribers, names and addresses on plain paper and mail to address below, together with your and address and checks or money order for the amount.

In return, we'll send you a gift certificate entitlin to a standard Mineralite Bowling Ball. Your initia be put on ball without charge.

This offer is good in Continental U.S. only, until ary 31, 1951. Your own or your personal gift sub tions will not count. Sorry, we cannot sell these bo balls.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPA
364 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5

Fill draft cracks around doors and windows with PLASTIC WOOD

RITZ CLOTHS

There's a Ritz Cloth for every household cleaning purpose at your local department or hardware store.
JOHN RITZENTHALER, 73 Franklin St., N. Y. 13

KILLS ALL MOTH LIFE!
Protects against future damage
APEX

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
MOTH VAPORIZER for large closets 79c

ZUD
Removes RUST and STAINS from BATHTUBS, SINKS, TILE, METALS, RANGES
AT GROCERY, HARDWARE, DEPT. and 10¢ STORES
FREE SAMPLE Give names of your dealers.

It's Yours FREE!
BIG 1951 GIFT GUIDE
Gifts From The World Over!
For every occasion . . . for young or old—for household, kitchen, friends, relatives—toys. World's latest gifts—right to your doorstep. We pay postage.
"Gifts Galore You Never Saw Before"
Shop from home the easy way. Skip the crowds. Truly, this catalog is a World's Fair of hundreds of bewitching gifts. Write today.
BANCROFT'S 536 So. Clark Street Dept. 927, Chicago 5, Ill.

CASH PLUS GIFTS!
FREE!
Make $50 cash selling only 50 boxes imprinted Christmas Cards and get FREE GIFTS besides. Sensational profit sharing plan gives you choice of over 300. Write Today—Send No Money—DeLuxe Boxes on Approval.
CREATIVE ART PUBLISHERS, INC.
45 Warburton Ave., Dept. R-4, Yonkers, N. Y.

BEST KNITTING WOOL
Send for FREE Samples • Prompt Mail Service
NATIONAL YARN HOUSE · 1231-R Cherry St., Phila. 7, Pa.

on the nearby bar that holds seventeen glasses. Drink that one chug-a-lug and you get the beer free, a dubious reward. Gloria's date, who had the nondescript air of a Harvard man, attempted holding her hand under the table and she kicked him, coolly, indifferently. A stout man with a violin stood at the piano and played the Maine Stein Song against the counterpoint of a corner group singing The Grim Gray Palisades.

I have been here before, Tim Carroway thought idly. What is it, what is it, I almost remember?

The night moved along, producing more of the same: a Greenwich Village tavern full of Characters, to each of whom Tim was introduced three times; a journey in the direction of the Staten Island ferry that ended instead at the one-room apartment of another ex-Wellesley girl in Hudson Street; many college songs in the night . . . until, at 1 A.M., Carroway found himself alone with Mealy Miller, walking through the dark paths of Central Park, the trees soughing gently in the night breeze of fall.

"So," she said, "I got back from my vacation in Guatemala in October and thought I would start scrubbing around for a job, and then this thing at Federal Broadcasting fell into my lap. I make a lot of money and I'm allowed to make suggestions at conferences. All in all, life is good, life is sweet."

"Are you going to stay there?" he asked, feeling for her hand.

"I don't know if I'll stay there," she said. "I just don't know."

"If you have any brains," he said, "what you really want to do is get married and have a couple of kids. And somebody who looks like you—no, somebody who is like you—shouldn't have any trouble doing that."

It seems as if we kept part of that happiness which we gave away.

They picked out a bench and sat down. A complacent water rat scurried out from under it, regarded them a moment and then shuffled off to the lake a few feet away.

"That's just it," she said. "I think I will have trouble. I'm afraid I'm going to be the dopey one—the one, you know, who won't get married unless the man is just right and she loves him completely. I just don't seem to have the knack, as a good Wellesley girl should, of picking out the best thing at hand and saying, 'Well, I can learn to love him, can't I?'"

"That's the way most marriages are made these days," he said, "and not in heaven, as popularly supposed. You know that, don't you?"

"Yes," she said, "and I wish I could be like the others, and compromise." She sat there regarding her toes for a moment. Then she looked back at him. "No, I don't, either. At least most of the time I don't. It's such a short life, and just to get married for the sake of being married isn't my idea of how to spend it."

"You," he said, tapping the ashes from his pipe, "are in for plenty of headaches." But he grinned at her. "And, it is just barely possible, some real happiness if you wait long enough."

They started toward the Plaza exit of the park, and she grabbed at his arm and shifted her feet so they walked in step. "What did you think of Gloria and Farthing and Perkins and so on?" she asked noncommittally.

"Fine," he said. "Fine. A little young, but fine."

She squeezed his arm and they continued along until they were just about to emerge into the glare of the Plaza. Then he stopped her and looked down at her.

"I was reading in a book the other day," he said, "that most young girls actually are scared to death of being kissed on their first date with a man."

"A Wellesley girl," she said, "is not a young girl. Never."

They kissed, and it was as he had known it would be, enveloping, warm and lost in the stars. When they were apart and at arms'

Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings
Perfume That Clings

Who Runs America?

RUNNING AMERICA is the joint job of 150,000,000 people. It's the biggest job in the world today—keeping it running for liberty and for freedom. And the whole world's watching to see whether Americans can do it!

IN MUCH OF THE WORLD today, the people have resigned from running their own countries. Others have been quick to step in—first with promises of "security"—and then with whips and guns—to run things their way. The evidence is on every front page in the world, every day.

FREEDOM COMES UNDER ATTACK. The reality of war has made every American think hard about the things he's willing to work and fight for—and freedom leads the list.

But that freedom has been attacked here recently—just as it has been attacked in other parts of the world. One of the most serious threats to individual freedom has been the threat of Government-dominated Compulsory Health Insurance, falsely presented as a new guarantee of health "security" for everybody.

THE PEOPLE WEIGH THE FACTS. In the American manner, the people studied the case for Socialized Medicine—and the case against it.

They found that Government domination of the people's medical affairs under Compulsory Health Insurance means lower standards of medical care, higher payroll taxes, loss of incentive, damage to research, penalties for the provident, rewards for the improvident.

They found that no country on earth can surpass America's leadership in medical care and progress. They found that able doctors, teachers, nurses and scientists—working in laboratories where Science, not Politics, is master—are blazing dramatic new trails to health for Americans—and for the world.

THE "GRASS ROOTS" SIGNALS CONGRESS. In every community in the Nation, people stood up to be counted on this important issue. Thousands of local women's clubs, civic groups, farm, business, religious, taxpayer, medical, educational and patriotic organizations spoke out—giving the great United States Congress its unmistakable Grass Roots signal from home!

And ever watchful, ever sensitive to an alert people, Congress saw that signal, and heard the people speak out, loud and plain. That's democracy in action. That's the American way!

Today among the 10,000 great organizations on militant public record against "Compulsory Health Insurance" are:

Gen'l Federation of Women's Clubs	American Protestant Hospital Association
American Farm Bureau Federation	Nat'l Association of Small Business Men
National Grange	United States Chamber of Commerce
American Legion	Nat'l Association of Retail Grocers
Veterans of Foreign Wars	Nat'l Retail Dry Goods Association
Nat'l Conference, Catholic Charities	American Bar Association

▪ Doctors of America are dedicated to serve their fellow citizens at home and their comrades in uniform, wherever service to this Nation may take them. ▪ And the thing they stand ready to fight for—to sacrifice for—to die for—is not the alien way of life of Socialism, but the prideful security of a free and self-reliant people!

THE VOLUNTARY WAY IS THE AMERICAN WAY!

▪ Throughout the Nation, free men and women, working and planning together, are finding the American answer to every question of medical service, care and cost. Hundreds of Voluntary Health Insurance Plans are in healthy competition—sponsored by doctors, insurance companies, hospitals, fraternal organizations—by industry, agriculture and labor. ▪ Today in America—70 million people are protected by Voluntary Health Insurance! ▪ Throughout the Nation, families are insuring themselves against the major costs of illness—at reasonable, budget-basis prices. Voluntary Health Insurance takes the economic shock out of illness. Protect your family now. ▪ For information, ask your doctor—or your insurance man.

An American's greatest heritage is the right to learn the facts—and to speak his mind. Maintained with honor and used with sincerity—that right will guarantee forever that

You and Your Neighbor Run America!

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION • NATIONAL EDUCATION CAMPAIGN • ONE NORTH LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Saves Time — Saves Steps — Saves Work

Hotpoint All-Electric Kitchen

● Work-Saving Cooking Center
Equipped With Hotpoint Electric Range
Featuring "Pushbutton Cooking".

■ Work-Saving Clean-Up Center
Equipped With Hotpoint Electric
Dishwasher And Disposall.

● Work-Saving Food-Storage Center Equipped With Great New Hotpoint
"Super-Stor" Refrigerator.

■ Work-Saving Laundry Center
Featuring Hotpoint Automatic
Washer And Electric Dryer.

Look To Hotpoint For The Finest . . . First!

Hotpoint—First To Introduce A Complete, Smart Styled, Custom-Matched, All-Electric Kitchen Wi Scientifically Planned Work-Saving Centers!

PIONEERED and perfected by America's leading kitchen planners, the Hotpoint All-Electric Kitchen brings new convenience and leisure into modern homes. Swift, efficient, economical servants lighten your tiresome chores! Four carefully planned work-saving centers help you do your tasks better—save hours, steps and energy needed for other vital duties!

■ "Pushbutton Cooking" with new Hotpoint Electric Ranges introduces an exciting new era of cooking ease. The new Hotpoint Electric Dishwasher-Disposall Sink banishes dishpan drudgery and garbage problems!

■ The brilliant new Hotpo "Super-Stor" is the world's m complete, convenient and e cient refrigerator. And with t amazing new Hotpoint Automa Washer you get the quicke cleanest washes ever!

■ Hotpoint, pioneer of the el tric range, electric dishwash and all-electric kitchen, is alwa first with the best. Comparis will show you that, point point, the Hotpoint All-Elect Kitchen, timeless in styling a beauty, is the world's finest! H point Inc. (A General Elect Affiliate), 5600 W. Taylor Street, Chicago 44, Ill.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeepi

Everybody's Pointing To

Hotpoint

Quality Appliances

RANGES ■ REFRIGERATORS ■ DISHWASHERS ■ DISPOSALS® ■ WATER HEATERS ■ FO FREEZERS ■ AUTOMATIC WASHERS ■ CLOTHES DRYERS ■ ROTARY IRONERS ■ CABIN

(Continued from Page 226)

nths out of Wellesley. The second was at these were the things he had done him-f, willingly and maniacally—fifteen years fore.

It wasn't only physical tribulation, this enilia. There was more. Like the time ealy felt miserable one night and suggested take Gloria to dinner. She leaned back ainst a green sofa in a lime-colored house-at, her brown hair clinging to the clean, aight face, and smiled at him.

"It's about time," she said, "that you ok a glamorous one out of an evening. Then me back to me tomorrow and tell me I nce better than she does."

"Are you," he asked, "making up Gloria's nd too?" But Gloria just smiled a soft and miliar smile.

"I'd love to," she said. "I'll get my coat." nd when she disappeared into the bed-om, Mealy just grinned at him.

"Have fun," she said, smirking.

He threw a sofa pillow at her, but she cked and then Gloria came back into the om with the familiar smile still glued ex-ctantly to her face, and they went out of evening.

Gloria was a doll type. Her nondescript en, Yale and otherwise, might make her ttle for Hamburger Heaven, but Tim ew that something like the Persian Room the Plaza would be expected of him, a an with a bank account. She wore a bur-ndy dress with gold choker and her long ond hair glistened in the amber table light Tim noted with relief that the program lled for, not a strenuous evening with ildegarde as entertainment, but a quieter, ore romantic one with Evelyn Knight. But might, he decided after a half hour of aking in Gloria's mood, be a strenuous eve-ng with Gloria. She was being serious.

It wasn't completely unexpected. Gloria's ts as a siren were enormously effective on enty-year-old Yale men. To someone who ad read the book through once, however, as ost thirty-five-year-old gentlemen have, e was somewhat obvious. Tim had known r a couple of weeks that she deeply appre-ated his poise, his well-made suits, the fact at he had a profitable trade, and his apart-ent in Beekman Place.

"This may sound silly," she said somberly er dessert, "but I think you and I have a eat deal in common."

"Do you, now?" he asked Gloria. "Why?"

"Oh, it's hard to say, but I feel it. We e the same songs and the same books."

"Do we?" he asked gently. "What books o we like the same, Gloria?"

HE tossed the blond hair in amiable nnoyance. "Well, we would like the same es, if we matched notes. I'll bet we ould." She was silent for a moment and en you could see the bells ringing and the ution signals going up in her twenty-two-ar-old head. "I'm so glad you come to see lealy. I couldn't have hand-picked a man r her any better."

Now, Tim thought, it will be all right if we ve ended that business right here. But it asn't that easy. The beautiful Miss Knight cluded the Kurt Weill tune, September ng, in her dinner-show program, and later, hen Tim took Gloria outside and started oking for a cab, he knew the song still was orking on her chemically, because she said e wanted to take a quick walk down to the ke in Central Park and get a little fresh air. e was pensive, almost silent—Gloria never as completely silent—during the walk, and e held his arm and every so often came close him to give him the benefit of the expen-ve perfume. Gloria's father had a wholesale quor business in St. Louis.

They stood for a moment and watched the ark lake. Gloria reached for his hand and queezed it. He politely let her squeeze. He ew better than to say anything, but when e turned her face up to him and closed her es and said "Kiss me," he knew the bull ad him pinned to the fence.

"Gloria," he said gently, "I'm Mealy's an. Remember?"

She turned away from him and, he pre-med, bit her lip. "Of course," she said, her voice just the tiniest bit flat. "I was just—I was just carried away."

She stayed turned away and carried away for a few seconds, then came back to him slowly and looked him full in the face, candidly, the way a very physical young girl does when she sees a man she wants to hang on her charm bracelet, never mind whether he was her roommate's.

Tim took her elbow. "We'll go home," he said, and they left the lake and went up the path to the hack stand.

He knew, the next night, he didn't have to tell Mealy. "You know," she said, in the ten minutes they had alone in the wildly Wellesley apartment before the rest of the chapter began drifting in, "it struck me last night after I had shooed you and Gloria off, that she might ——"

"Yes," he said.

She shook her head in sorrowful apology. "I'm sorry," she said. "I wasn't trying to test you or anything, and, you see, I'm used to Gloria. She tries that on . . . well, on what you might call My Men, I guess—and some she wins and some she loses. I just was trying to find something for you to do because I wasn't up to par."

"I didn't mind," he said, "except Gloria's line is pretty pat. I felt as if I were reading a comic book." He lighted his pipe and then exhaled with what possibly was the longest sigh he ever had sighed. "At my age"—he paused for a moment, but he had a point to make—"a man doesn't have the patience to listen too politely for too long to purple passages too full of movie dialogue. He feels, God help him, as if he were wasting his time. I did, anyway."

Mealy studied that for a couple of moments, but whatever comment she might have been ready to make was stillborn, because the doorbell rang and Farthing and Perkins came in with the news that they all were going to crash the Art Students' League costume ball at the Waldorf that night.

Three months. That was the extent of it.

If Tim had had a chance to catch his breath, he might have decided he was terribly, terribly in love with Mabel Miller and wanted to make her his lawful own.

But the 55th Street version of college life never gave him the opportunity to meditate. All his life he had looked darkly at the lives of those of his friends whose curiosity about living had ended in their mid-twenties and who had Settled Down and begun the long, sagging slide downhill to the grave.

Now he suddenly saw the other side of it. Now he knew that a man, although his mind might be as fresh and nosy as ever about the problems of existence, simply cannot be the eternal juvenile forever and ever. There were any number of reasons why—but the most important was that it didn't become him. There is a time to be born and a time to die—and, it might be added, a time to be juvenile and a time to grow up. Only the café-society playboys defy that time, and all in all they don't count, Tim thought.

ALL this, like the smoke from a fire fanned by the autumn breeze, was in his head one night when he knew, as they sat with Gloria and not one but three nondescript young men—one of whom, heaven forfend, appeared to be a Groton student—that the thing was ending. They were in a Bierstube in Yorkville, and the group of them was having an elegant conversation with the waitress, complete with gestures, when Tim looked across the table at Mealy and knew that it was too much for him. There were, he knew, too many years between them.

Well, he said to himself, because Timothy Carroway always was an honorable man, I will tell her and if she has any feeling for me, really, she will get over it. He wasn't being ruthless or rationalizing about that. He knew well that in all but one of a thousand cases, the heart forgets, the pain goes away for good.

The others took a cab on to someplace else in Yorkville, but he begged out for himself and Mealy and they walked down Third Avenue under the dark skeleton of the elevated tracks for a few blocks, before heading for 55th Street. He could tell, a little, by the way she walked along with him quietly that she knew the plot had thickened.

"Tim?" she said. "Tim—I've never seen your apartment. I'm grown up and you're reasonably honorable and it's not too late at night. May I?"

"Of course," he said, and they buttonholed a cab and made for Beekman Place.

It was one of the older apartment houses, but a well-kept one. The elevator let them out on the fourth floor and Tim fitted his key to the door lock and they went in. What Mealy expected isn't quite certain, but what she saw was an apartment that was smart, comfortable, restful and enormously interesting.

There was no particular motif, but everything fitted. There were a half-dozen horse prints in white frames—Citation, War Admiral, Whirlaway with the long tail—and a Picasso original that wasn't overoutlandish; a giant floor lamp with a chartreuse parchment shade; a dark green rug spread to the corners of the living room; a bedroom with an eight-foot-long double bed covered with a black corduroy spread piped in light blue; big hassocks; a wall covered with books to the ceiling . . . a lot of things that you took in one by one and decided you liked most of them. It was the apartment of a man who . . . well, Mealy took a swift but searching look and found no NO PARKING signs, no college banners on the wall, no bulletin boards—no juvenilia.

One look was enough, but she wanted to be sure, so she stayed there a moment at the steps leading into the dropped living room, getting it impressed on her mind.

Tim put his arms around her waist and kissed her ear. She leaned back against him for a moment, and, standing there, they could hear the hooting of a tug in the East River below. A faint smell of pipe tobacco hung over the apartment.

"Take me home, please, Tim," she said.

In the cab over to 55th Street, there was little talk; he held her in his arms against his shoulder, wheeling the side window up when her hair began to blow. I guess I love her, he thought; I guess I love her and it's a shame that I'm thirteen years older, because otherwise we might —— But he didn't want to think about it. The heart mends, he thought. The heart mends.

"Dinner tomorrow?" he asked, at her door.

She nodded. "Yes, Tim," she said, "dinner tomorrow."

He kissed her once and went up the steps from the basement apartment and walked east in 55th Street, in the night that was growing by easy stages into a winter night.

(Continued on Page 231)

I Gave My Love

By Hannah Kahn

I gave my love a silver word,
My lover could not hear . . .
I wound my love a golden cord,
It did not bring him near.

I wrought my love a slender urn,
I filled it to the brim,
It overflowed and yet it made
No difference to him.

I spun myself a silken robe
For no one's eyes but mine,
Resigned to live a lonely life
Of singular design.

Then all my love that was contained
In cord, in urn, in word
Spoke to him and suddenly
He understood . . . and heard.

There's only ONE graded margarine

Thousands of housewives are switching to Durkee's because they like it . . . their families like it . . . it means CASH SAVINGS on their food bills . . . and because it's the ONLY Grade AA on the market!

Durkee's Margarine is made from the choicest vegetable oils delicately blended with fat-free milk and other quality farm products. Its mild, delicate flavor is winning new users everywhere.

WHAT GRADE (AA) MEANS TO YOU

DURKEE FAMOUS FOODS GUARANTEES

- Mild delicate flavor
- Purity of ingredients
- Country-freshness
- Nourishment—(15,000 units of Vitamin A)
- Smooth texture for spreading
- Triple wrapped for sealed-in flavor

The exclusive Grade AA rating for Durkee's Margarine has been established for your protection by the trained chemists and nutrition experts of Durkee's own Research and Control Laboratories. Every pound must measure up to its exacting standards before it can be stamped Grade AA!

Yellow or White

Durkee's Own grade AA

© 1950, The Glidden Comp

Glidden

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF DURKEE'S FAMOUS DRESSIN

(Continued from Page 229)

ne world's greatest novel by Harry Mcey couldn't have kept Tim's mind on his ness, that next day.

e would work for twenty minutes, then back in his chair and look at the shops n on Madison Avenue and the passing going about their errands of lust and and think of something else to make this night a good one. They would start at Drake Room with cocktails and then dinner at—at where? Why, Chambord, urse. He reached for the telephone.

Paris?" he said. "Paris, I'm bringing a g lady for dinner tonight and I want the table in the house. That means a quiet n the corner, and at least five removed any movie stars. . . . Yes. . . . Yes. . . . listen—I'll leave the dinner to you, won't have to get mixed up with the u. . . . Yes. The very best. Nothing on ng swords. Just a superb meal."

e hadn't been in Chambord for months, there was an elegance and quiet and ort about it that he liked. We will dance, hought, at LaRue—no, not there. Too y undergraduates. The St. Regis—yes, would be it. Another phone call; another vation.

he could keep the evening going on dule, they would end up with a hansom around Central Park, and there was no- to phone for a reservation for that. Tim oway had waited thirty-five years to around Central Park in a hansom; it just ed there should be the most special of sions for that, and this was it. It dn't be the happiest of occasions—but nother day, another ten years before, it t have been. She was the girl; that he . She just had come g too late.

e walked over to 55th t that evening. The were stripped bare eir leaves by now, and en Hecht line went ugh Tim's head—"I a stranger, wandering always; only the trees know me."

e shook himself briskly. Carroway, he ered to himself, things are rough when get that corny. So a love affair is ending. 's happened to five thousand other people. — But even then it wasn't any good. He down the basement steps slowly and ed the bell.

hen she came to the door and opened it, then looked at him through the blackted iron-grill gate, she had on a black and a single strand of pearls. He ln't recall having seen her in that wonl costume before.

e took him by the hand and brought nto the apartment, and there was a difce.

e looked around. The NO PARKING signs gone, and so were all the other evidences llegiana. You no longer felt you had ped by mistake into the Tri Delt house. ooked at Mealy Miller.

t's different," he said, not very brightly. Yes," she said. She picked her black cloth up from the easy chair it was draped and he helped her on with it.

apartment, he decided, among other gs, was much quieter than usual. ere," he then added, as the night unto day, "is Gloria?"

he's gone to New Jersey for the week ' Mealy said.

ey started for the door, and just as she er hand on the light switch, he took her y by the shoulder and turned her to- him.

Why?" he asked her. "Why? The apart-t, I mean?"

e looked at him, and her twenty-two-old face was remarkably grave. "This," aid, "is the way I like an apartment. I t want to be considered old before my —but I'm not now and never was part he rowdydow, razzmatazz college life. t's what bothered me all through Welles- I'm sorry and I guess it makes me abnal, but I like my humor adult. Also my

He stared at her. Then he cleared his throat. "But the G.A.," he said feebly. "We are table number one." He shook his head like a terrier coming out of a pond. "The roller skating the wrong way and the two wheels around a curve on the West Side Highway. Football. Football."

She snapped out the light switch and they stood there in the darkness, with the faint light of the street lamp coming in from 55th Street through the basement windows. Then she pulled him over to the easy chair and sat down in it on his lap, in one motion. She held her cheek next to his and he could smell, faintly, lilies of the valley.

"I thought that was for you," she said.

He sat up. "For me?" he exclaimed. "That's blasphemy. For me—but how?"

SHE wasn't sure how to say it and she took a little time answering. "Well," she said, "every*body*—everybody but me, that is—is like that at one time in their lives, putting salt in somebody's coffee, rolling peanuts down Forty-second Street with their noses, stealing trash baskets and so on. I saw you that first afternoon in Palmer Stadium and you looked so strangely young and you had on the college costume and everything—you know, the striped tie, the flannel pants, the odd jacket—that I thought you still were like that."

Tim reached his free hand for his short hair. I will start growing an Actors' Equity coiffure tomorrow, he thought. And never wear anything but a blue suit again.

"Oh, I didn't mind your being the perennial undergraduate," she said. "I like you any which way. But I wanted to hold you, and a Miller never comes out and announces things like that. She becomes, it appears, what she thinks her man wants her to be."

We should all be perfect if we were neither men nor women.

There was a grin on his face as he looked at her, only it was more a faint grin of relief than anything else. "I thought it was you," he said. "After all, you're twenty-two and In Love With Life. You're supposed to—to want to play football in Fifty-fifth Street on a Saturday morning."

She snorted. "I broke two fingernails," she said indignantly. "Two beautiful, lovely fingernails. All for the love of a man. What I want to know, Mr. Anthony, is, was it worth it?"

He leaned over her in the lovely dark quiet of the Glorialess apartment and settled that question far, far better than Mr. Anthony ever could have. Then she kissed him back and for a couple of minutes there, the conversation was held up.

"Tim?" she said finally. "Tim—there's a little place over on Third Avenue, terribly expensive, where I would like to have dinner. It's called ——"

"I forget the name," he said, "but we have a table there for two. Why don't we start with a cocktail at ——"

"Darling," she broke in, "could we go to the Drake Room, just this once? I'm so tired of looking at girls in sloppy socks and boys in old school ties, that ——"

He squeezed the breath out of her at that point, and then ultimately they eased themselves out of the easy chair. When they were going out the front door and up the basement steps, he smiled to himself and said, Well, one thing she hasn't in the back of her little pinhead is the hansom ride around Central Park, later. And she hasn't mentioned anything about dancing at ——

"Have you a pile of money on you, Tim?" she asked. "Because there are just two other things I want to do tonight. One is to have at least one dance at the St. Regis, and the other —— "

"Don't," he said, drawing his topcoat around him. "Don't tell me. Let me guess." And they went out into the street of trees, she in high heels and a dinner dress and he in a respectable gray suit and not a football or a NO PARKING sign between them. The wind was up and the night was old. Well—not old exactly. Just grown up.

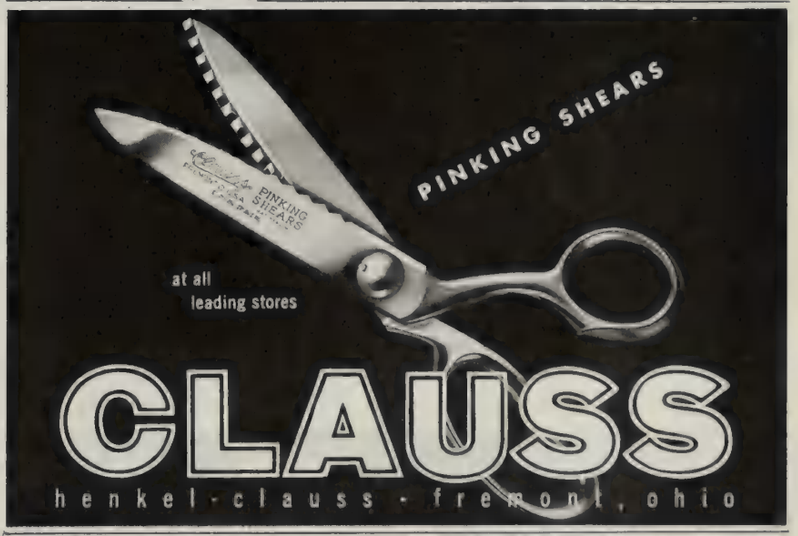
THE END

WIPES CLEAN WITH A DAMP CLOTH

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Princess PLASTIC PLACE MATS

NEW IVY LEAF PIQUÉ PATTERN features white organdy, with piqué leaves and center in 6 smart "House & Garden" colors: Grey, Red, Green, Gold, Blue, Brown . . . a perfect setting for modern pottery or traditional table accessories! Made of stainproof, guaranteed-to-lie-flat plastic, can be used hundreds of times.



SEE PRINCESS PLACE MATS' wide variety of colorful designs for every serving occasion. Choose from Organdies, Ginghams, Laces, Round-Shaped Mats with matching coasters, Children's Mats, many others. Economically priced from 29c to 75c each. Ideal as gifts.

Write for exciting new Hostess Guide, 32 pages in full color 30 clever ideas for place settings all-around-the-clock.

ON SALE EVERYWHERE . . . at department, gift, variety stores. By makers of All Plastic Shelf-N-Edge; shelf lining, edging combined

PRINCESS PLACE MATS LHJ11-50
The Ullman Co., Inc., 230 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N. Y.
Please send me your booklet, "Table Charm." I enclose 10c in coin, to cover cost of mailing.
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State____

Delicious! 3-MINUTE CHOCOLATE CAKE MIXED IN ONE BOWL

Have all ingredients at room temperature.

Beat together for one minute: 2 eggs
1¾ cups sugar

Sift together and add:
2 cups sifted cake flour
1 teaspoon Arm & Hammer or Cow Brand Baking Soda
½ teaspoon salt

Combine: ¼ cup vinegar
¾ cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Add: ½ of the liquid
½ cup shortening (emulsifier type)

Beat vigorously one minute.

Add: Remaining liquid
3 sq. chocolate (melted)

Beat one minute: Turn into two well-greased 8-inch layer pans, 1¼ inches deep. Bake at 350° F. (moderate oven) 30 minutes.

Chocolate Flake Frosting. When cake cools, spread 7-minute frosting on top, sides and between layers. Sprinkle top with shaved chocolate.

recipe

Thrifty Peach Bavarian...another quick, luscious dessert made with orchard-ripe Canned Cling Peaches from California

½ cup ice cold Pet Milk
6 canned cling peach halves
Syrup from peaches
1 package lemon-flavored Jell-O*
Few grains salt
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ teaspoon grated lemon rind

Chill milk ice cold in 2 quart bowl. Drain peaches well, saving syrup. Place in circle cut side down, in oiled 9-inch or deep 8-inch round pan. Chill. Add enough water to peach syrup to make 1½ cups liquid; heat to boiling. Dissolve Jell-O in hot mixture; blend in salt, lemon juice and rind. Chill until slightly thicker than unbeaten egg whites. Beat ice cold milk with cold rotary beater or electric mixer at highest speed until stiff. Gradually beat in Jell-O, beating until smooth. Pour over peaches and chill until firm. Unmold and cut into wedges. Garnish with cherries if desired. Serves 6. * Reg. Trademark of General Foods Corp.

Right from the can these gorgeous cling peaches taste as sweet and dewy-fresh as the moment they came from the orchard. They're quick-picked, quick-packed so that you get every bit of their natural sun-ripened goodness. And how thrifty they are! You can afford to keep them handy, serve them often in dozens of easy ways. Everybody likes cling peaches!

Quick and Easys for Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

OTA and Wes and their five-year-old son, Kip, live in one of New York's apartment projects. Kip goes to nursery school during the day. Ota teaches speech at Hunter College. Like most working wives and mothers, she has found her own quick-and-easy route to a good dinner.

"To me, a quick dinner is measured only in terms of the time I must spend in the kitchen, regardless of the cooking time of a dish. The easy part is in having an hour away from the kitchen, after I've finished my stint, to relax with Kip while the meal matures.

"Casseroles would be theoretically ideal for my needs—except for Wes. He has a profound and indestructible suspicion of such concoctions. Nevertheless, with little perceptible variation, our meals are of the oven or simmering type.

"This kind of meal works out well, for, though I teach, I'm usually through with classes in time to call for Kip at nursery school. I like to have dinner ready to serve promptly at five-thirty, when Wes gets home. A long evening is one of our most prized possessions."

MONDAY
Kip's Night

Liver in Sour-Cream Sauce
Baked-Potato Halves
Scalloped Tomatoes and Celery

"Now and then we have what we call Kip's night, as occasion arises. It might be because of a new book I have bought to read to him in the evening, or a building project he and his dad are going to start. Kip loves to make things and we encourage it. He chooses his own menu for that night. We treat him like a guest.

"When Kip chooses liver, I serve his plain—but we like ours with a sauce. Otherwise, we all have the same dinner."

LIVER IN SOUR-CREAM SAUCE

Cut ¾ pound sliced calf's liver into 1-inch strips. Season with salt and pepper. Melt 3 tablespoons bacon drippings in a heavy skillet. Brown liver and an onion, sliced, in the fat. Add a 3-ounce can sliced mushrooms. Use the juice too. Then add 1 cup commercial thick sour cream. Cover and simmer over low heat 15 to 20 minutes. Reseason to taste with salt, pepper and about ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce.

TUESDAY
Discovery Now Standby

Quick Spanish Steak
Peas
Green Salad

"Wes loves this dish that we call Quick Spanish Steak." Ota explains. "Originally I bought flank steak to make it. The whole flank was too much for one meal, or even two. And you have to buy the whole flank. This meant a series of three meals from the one flank—London broil, this dish and hash. One day I discovered skirt steak at the butcher's. It's similar in texture to flank, but much smaller. Now we can have our favorite dish as often as we want to without having to have two other meals more or less prescribed along with it."

QUICK SPANISH STEAK

Slice a ¾-pound skirt steak crosswise against the grain into thin slices, then cut into strips. Marinate overnight in ½ cup diluted wine vinegar (¼ cup vinegar, plus ¼ cup water), 1 clove garlic, crushed, and a good pinch of crumbled bay leaf. Half an hour before mealtime, drain the meat thoroughly and save the juice. Sear the meat quickly in 1 tablespoon very hot salad oil. Do this quickly, stirring with a fork. Add half the marinade, 1 onion sliced, ½ green pepper, cut into strips, and 1 can tomato sauce. Cover and simmer over low heat until meat is tender and sauce is of good consistency.

WEDNESDAY
Humoring a Husband

Acorn Squash with Sausage
Shoestring Potatoes
Green Salad

"The shoestring potatoes are a bi concession—and by no means a regu lar ne—to Wes. He is mad about Fr ch fries, but watching and turning hem take too much time to secu my enthusiastic co-operation fre ently. Since the rest of the meal en ls no effort at all, it's a good time to mor him. For this special occasio I fix enough potatoes to feed six pe le—and if Wes doesn't quite get is fill, he feels that at least he had more than a sample."

PHOTO BY DONALD STUART

When Ota fries shoestring potatoes, it's a family affair.

ACORN SQUASH WITH SAUSAGE

Cut good-sized acorn squash in half and scrape out the seeds. Mix ¾ pound bulk pork sausage with 1 onion, minced, and 4 tablespoons tomato sauce. Heap the sausage mixture in the squash halves. Bake in moderate slow oven, 325° F., about 1 hour or until squash is tender and soft when pierced with a fork. It all depends on the squash. Some may take less time, sometimes longer.

THURSDAY

Fortunate Accident

Ota's Meat Loaf
Baked Potatoes
Green Salad

My meat-loaf recipe was a wartime accident! Our stamp allotment for meat seemed to provide us with only frankfurters and hamburger in quantities sufficient to our desires. In order to stimulate Wes's interest in franfurters, I made a barbecue sauce to serve over them. That didn't help the ranks a bit, as far as he was concerned, and I was left with a pint of barbecue sauce in the refrigerator. The next day I started to make a meat loaf and threw in some of the barbecue sauce. At dinner, Wes took one bite of the meat loaf and said, 'What did you do to this meat loaf? It's wonderful.' Now I always add barbecue-sauce ingredients to the meat loaf."

OTA'S MEAT LOAF

Mix together ¼ cup catchup, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce, 1 tablespoon brown sugar, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, 1 onion, chopped fine, 2 tablespoons water, 1¼ teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and a dash of cayenne. Mix into a pound of ground beef with 1 egg and ½ cup dry packaged bread crumbs. Shape into a rounded oval-shaped patty and place in a greased shallow pan. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 45–50 minutes. Wes likes the leftover cold meat loaf for sandwich snacks.

FRIDAY

Bridge or Theater Night

Veal Birds With Wild Rice
Green Beans

"Friday night, with a week end forthcoming, we feel in a gala mood. We like to have what we consider an especially good dinner, then play bridge with friends or go to the theater. Veal birds with wild rice is one of our most favorite dishes. It's easy to do, adaptable to a few or many, and popular with our friends. We get a year's supply of wild rice, right after it's been picked and packaged, when we go fishing in Northern Minnesota every fall. When we have green beans we add sliced raw onions, vinegar and horse-radish to taste."

VEAL BIRDS WITH WILD RICE

Have ½ pound veal cutlet sliced thin and then pounded still thinner, as for veal scallopini. The pieces should be about 3″x5″. For each of the pieces (5 or 6) fry slightly a small link sausage—enough to remove some of the fat. Roll each sausage in a piece of veal and fasten with toothpicks. Season the birds with salt and pepper and roll in flour. Brown well on all sides in the sausage fat. Drain off fat in pan. Add 1 cup water and 2 onions, chopped. Cover and simmer about 25 minutes, or until tender. Remove toothpicks. Serve with freshly cooked wild rice. Double or triple for company.

Ota often bakes this in a covered casserole instead of simmering on top of stove. It takes longer in the oven, however—45 minutes to 1 hour in a moderately slow oven, 325° F. Do whichever comes easier.

Now! All ready to Serve

Choicest Mushrooms

Broiled in Butter!

Save Time and Money with B in B
Broiled in Butter Mushrooms.
Packed 3 ways
for every mushroom use!

WHOLE CROWNS add zest to steaks, chops, meat patties.

Use CHOPPED for spaghetti sauce, meat loaf, soups.

SLICED mushrooms are wonderful in chicken à la King, with peas.

Enjoy all 3 styles—
broiled in butter
and ready to use

B in B Mushrooms are freshly-picked hothouse mushrooms, broiled in creamery butter to a natural brown color, then packed in mushroom broth.

Three ready-to-use styles
B in B Whole Mushroom Crowns
B in B Chopped Mushrooms
B in B Sliced Mushrooms

You'll save time by using B in B Mushrooms already prepared as called for in your favorite recipes.

ONE OF THE QUALITY FOODS OF GROCERY STORE PRODUCTS CO.

FAMOUS PARKER GAMES

MONOPOLY

Most popular of the great Board games. A world wide favorite. Set No. 6 at $3.00; better set, No. 8 always bound in pebbled green, $3.50; Famous White box set with Grand Hotels, removable Bank tray, etc.

CLUE
UNIQUE DETECTIVE GAME

A New Best Seller. Exciting and of intense interest throughout. A game that would delight Sherlock Holmes. $3.00

SORRY

An immensely popular Board game, unlike any other, with original moves and thrilling situations. Don't count on victory until the last play. SORRY is full of surprises!
Price $2.50

MAKE-A-MILLION

A wonderful game. Quick climaxes and exciting play from beginning to end. Thousands of players consider MAKE-A-MILLION the most thrilling of card games. Easily learned. $1.00

ROOK—America's widely loved card game. $1.00
CAMELOT—A far better game than Checkers. Easily learned. Gray-box set $1.50; Pickwick Board set, a great favorite $2.00.
CAM—is a new quick-playing form of the famous game Lotto. $1.50
FLINCH—The grand old game. With 150 cards $1.50
HEX—The Zig Zag game of blocks and counters $2.00
TREASURE TRAIL GAME—Great fun! A delightful new game for children. $1.50

AT ALL DEALERS or by mail from Salem

PARKER BROTHERS INC.
SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK • CHICAGO • LONDON

MEN LIKE MARCIA

(Continued from Page 36)

comfortably large. My salary isn't so startling as Marcia's, but it's steady—and more than once I've advanced her half of the rent.

But we have no quarrels about money—or division of labor. It all works out beautifully. I get up first and prepare what we laughingly call "breakfast." Marcia doesn't keep office hours, so she washes the dishes and makes the beds. If we're dining at home, she heats the can of soup—and after dinner, I do the dishes. Neat, complete, and hard to beat! (There I go again, bringing business home with me!)

Well, let's get back to the most important subject—men. Gr-r-r-ough! Let's face it, friends: any woman who says they aren't important ought to have her mouth washed out with soap—Snowdrift Soap, of course, the soap that saves your skin! Pardon me, I'm so ambitious! Back to my subject: men—men and Marcia! In spite of looking like an angel, Marcia has a definite gleam in her eye—and the men, bless their hearts, never miss it! With her, it comes just as natural to flirt as to breathe—and every bit as innocent!

To give you an idea of what I mean, here's a typical example. If Marcia has a date and I haven't, I usually put on an old beat-up bathrobe, pin my hair up in curlers, put cream on my face, and curl up with a good book. I like this sort of thing. Besides, I can actually feel myself becoming better looking by the minute. After all, you can't write those things day after day without believing some of them.

But if the situation is reversed—I mean, if I have a date and Marcia hasn't (This has been known to happen. Honest! I'm no glamorous model—but I have nice brown curly hair and freckles which I like to call provocative. I'm clean, bright, a good sport, and my friends say I'm loads of fun!) well—if I'm the one with the date—does Marcia retire to the bedroom with a good book? Not her—er, she! She usually applies a fresh make-up, brushes her golden hair into a halo, and changes into some informal, simple little old thing—like the blue velvet Dior slacks—and an old last year's sweater that's too tight. Then she settles herself in the living room to wait for my boy friend. Marcia's awfully old-fashioned, really. She thinks a man will respect a girl more if he meets her family. I appreciate it, too, only sometimes I'd just as soon have a little less respect and keep a few of the men.

This situation is what the other girls have in mind when they pass those uncomplimentary remarks about my intellect. And I suppose, from one standpoint, they're right. But I prefer to think of myself as philosophical. Not many girls have the setup I have. I never have to lie awake nights wondering if a man is the true-blue type. My own home is equipped with the acid test! If the guy still goes for me after being exposed to Marcia—God bless his eccentric heart, he's a solid matrimonial risk! Surely someday a man like that will come along, I've always kept telling myself. Don't you agree? . . . Well—don't you?

But, I digress. After all, I do have a story to tell or I wouldn't have started this whole thing. Enter—Cory Bannister. He's the glamour boy at our office: young, good-looking in a Cary Grant-type way, successful—he's already an account executive—and single! So-o-o-o, two months ago, when he casually stuck his head in my office door, smiled pleasantly, and said, "May I come in, Ellen?" I knocked my rhyming dictionary off the desk with my elbow, blushed from head to toe and replied, "Gulp—yes." I always like to use the nonchalant approach.

"If you're not too busy, Ellen, I'd like to have a talk with you. I need your help."

"Of course, Mr. Bannister—anything at all," I think I said. I'm not sure because my brain was working overtime dreaming up all the ways Cory Bannister might possibly need my help. Perhaps he wanted me to help entertain an important client some evening soon. Then again, suppose he had recognized in me a kindred spirit to whom he could pour out his troubles, while I stood stanchly by stroking his fevered brow, murmuring soothing words of wisdom?

I guess he didn't notice the look of simple dedication on my face, because he went on quite naturally.

"I've just landed the Sparkodent Tooth Paste account—and it's big! Been trying to get them away from Stewart-Buxton for two years—do you know what finally did it?"

"I don't suppose you promised to marry the homely daughter?" I asked timidly.

"Not on your life!" he laughed, obviously in high spirits. "It was you. I owe it all to you!"

"Me?" I squeaked, forgetting completely to strive for the low, husky tones.

We Never Had Time

By Abigail Cresson

I never figured until he was dead
How much we had missed out of life, she said.
We were so busy—the children, the farm;
So many of us to keep fed and warm.
Planning ahead and working together,
We talked of the crops, the stock, the weather;
And there never was time for foolishness—
Leaving it out is a pity, I guess.
Sometimes I would look at him sitting there
All hunched up and tired in the rocking chair
And long to lay a hand on his shoulder
Or smooth his hair; but, when you get older,
Such things seem silly. It's sort of as though Loving was something you ought not to show.
So I never did it. He never knew
The time and again that I hankered to.
It isn't just death makes a body sad—
It's not to have done what you wish you had.

"Sure. I showed them some of your jingles. Mr. Matson was crazy about 'em! He can't wait to have you write some for Sparkodent!"

"Oh," I said—my pulse approaching normal again. I might have known. What else about me could possibly interest Cory Bannister but my own bizarre talent—advertising jingles?

"So you see," he was continuing, "you and I have a job to do. I promised Matson a complete layout by Friday night."

"Friday?" I repeated. "But this is Wednesday!" By this remark, I'm sure he deduced I'm the intelligent type.

"I know." He looked at me appealingly with that guilty small-boy expression that always does something to me. "It's a lot to ask, but this is such a big account—and he's so anxious—well, I want to strike while the iron is hot, so to speak."

"Naturally," I replied quickly.

"Good!" He smiled at me confidingly. "Actually, I'm depending on you, Ellen, for most of this campaign. You'll have to write the verses—but I'll work with you in any way I can. We'll keep at it day and night!"

Day and night! H-m-m-m! This was beginning to sound interesting—in fact, fraught with possibilities.

"We'll do it, Mr. Bannister!" I cr ringing tones. "Sparkodent! Now the product we can get our teeth into!"

He laughed uproariously, while I wa him, awe-struck. Cory Bannister was ing—showing all those gorgeous teet dimples. He was happy—and I was the of it! Ah-h-h—life was good!

The next two and a half days—Wednesday noon till Friday night—sheer heaven! I worked steadily, re reams of copy about Sparkodent Paste—its tangy zesty taste, its attr blue-and-yellow tube, the miracles it ised for healthy teeth and gums, the en astic endorsement of dentists, and the know-how and solid dependability company behind it. I wrote enough j limericks and singing commercials to Encyclopaedia Britannica—from A to vark, anyway. Lunches and dinners sent up to the office, or at the coffee s the building. I did sleep at home nigh der protest—but I was back at the bright and early ready to start in ag worked like a medieval slave and w envy of every girl at Sloan, Markha Bricker. For Cory Bannister was as good word, and stayed loyally at my side th it all.

Just between you and me, I could turned out those jingles a lot quicker solo. Let's face it, that's my trade—I'm to it! But when you see those pearly opening right before your very eyes, an those celestial harps playing sweet mus you going to say, "No, thank you"? you're a realistic, resourceful, quick- girl like me! No sir! Opportunity may more than once, but personally, I beli answering the first time!

Anyway, by Friday afternoon late, and I ("Mr. Bannister" disappeared W day at dinner) sat in my little cluttered tired but triumphant, surrounded b combined handiwork. The Sparkoden paign was complete. There were ma and newspaper layouts prepared by department, miniature billboards, re radio commercials. My contributio cluded such gems as:

The misguided square who neglects to care
Will surely be lost in the rush!
But the man worth-while has a Spark smile
And only his teeth get the brush!

And then I wrote:

Brush, brush, brush your teeth—
Morning, noon, and night!
Sparkodent—Sparkodent—Sparkode Sparkodent
Keeps them extra white!

All right! So Edgar Guest and Irvin lin have nothing to worry about! Cory them. And the only other person we convince was Mr. Matson.

"Well, Ellen—tonight's the night!" was arranging everything lovingly portfolio. "I'm seeing Matson at seven. soon know."

"Oh, Cory, he's just got to like said—and suddenly I had a moment of It was over—this delightful interlude Cory Bannister. "But, of course," I add most hopefully, "if Mr. Matson isn't fied, we can always do it over again."

Cory groaned. "Oh, no, not that cried with such a look of horror that my sank. Obviously, he didn't share my f

"I'll keep my fingers crossed," I murm weakly.

"I'll call you the minute I leave M Ellen, you've been wonderful these pa days! I'll never forget it—never!" He my hand soberly.

While I was still blushing, and murm "It was nothing"—my eyes modestly

(Continued on Page 236)

"Folks, it's Easy to make ALL these HOLIDAY TREATS with BRER RABBIT Molasses!"

Brer Rabbit Molasses Mint Brownies

Most unusual brownies ever!

½ cup butter or margarine
¼ cup Brer Rabbit Molasses*
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
¾ cup sifted all-purpose flour
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup chopped walnut meats
½ teaspoon vanilla
16 chocolate mint wafers, broken

Melt butter in saucepan over low heat. Remove from heat; let cool. Add molasses and sugar; mix well. Add eggs, one at a time, beating after each addition. Sift together flour and salt, add along with nut meats and vanilla; mix well. Line 8" x 8" pan with waxed paper; grease. Pour ½ mixture into pan. Sprinkle with mints; cover with remaining batter. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 40 min. Cool. Remove from pan; cut into 16 squares.

Brer Rabbit Raisin Pie

Dare to be different this holiday time! This out-of-the-ordinary pie will be a "conversation piece."

3 cups seeded raisins
½ cup Brer Rabbit Molasses*
1 cup hot water
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon lemon juice grated rind of 1 lemon
½ teaspoon salt
1 9" unbaked pastry shell

Cook raisins, molasses and water together for 5 minutes. Make a smooth paste of cornstarch and lemon juice. Add to raisin mixture and cook 5 minutes more. Remove from heat; add lemon rind and salt. Pour into pie shell; arrange strips of pastry on filling, lattice fashion. Bake in hot oven, 450°F., for 15 minutes; reduce to 350°F., and bake for 25 minutes.

Brer Rabbit "My Best" Gingerbread

(SAUCEPAN METHOD)

Hot homemade gingerbread gets cheers . . . and this is the best ever! Grand with butter, or perfect for dessert, topped with whipped cream!

½ cup shortening
½ cup sugar
1 egg
2½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
1½ teaspoons baking soda
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup Brer Rabbit Molasses*
1 cup hot water

Melt shortening in 3 or 4 quart saucepan over low heat. Remove from heat; let cool. Add egg; beat well. Sift together flour, baking soda and spices. Combine molasses and water; add alternately with flour to first mixture. Pour into a greased wax-lined 9" x 9" x 2" pan. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 50-60 minutes. Cool 5 minutes. Remove from pan.

Brer Rabbit Holiday Cookies

Perfect for Christmas Tree Cookies! Delightful for "homemade" gifts!

⅔ cup margarine
1 cup sugar
½ cup Brer Rabbit Molasses*
2 eggs
1¾ cups sifted flour
½ teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon salt

Melt margarine in saucepan over low heat. Remove from heat; let cool. Add sugar and molasses; mix well. Add eggs, one at a time, beating after each. Sift together flour, soda, cinnamon and salt; add to first mixture. Mix thoroughly. Drop by scant teaspoonfuls on greased baking sheet 2" apart. Bake in moderate oven, 375°F., 8-10 minutes. Remove from pan while warm. Yields about 7 dozen.

Molasses Coconut Cookies: Add ¾ cup shredded coconut to above recipe with flour mixture. Mix thoroughly. Bake.

Date Drops: Add ¾ cup chopped pitted dates to above recipe with flour mixture. Mix thoroughly. Bake.

Chocolate Molasses Cookies: Add ¾ cup semi-sweet chocolate bits to above recipe with flour mixture. Mix well. Bake.

Brer Rabbit Molasses Popcorn Balls

For Thanksgiving—for Christmas, these are fun to make, fun to eat!

3 quarts popped corn
1½ cups Brer Rabbit Molasses*
⅓ cup water
½ cup sugar
2 teaspoons cider vinegar
½ teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
5 tablespoons vegetable shortening

Pick over popped corn, discarding all hard kernels. Combine molasses, sugar, water, vinegar and salt; cook slowly, stirring constantly, to 270°F. (or when a small quantity dropped into cold water forms hard ball). Remove from heat; add vanilla extract and shortening, stirring only enough to mix. Pour over popped corn, stirring constantly. Grease hands; shape lightly into balls. Cool. Wrap in waxed paper. Makes 28-30.

© 1950 Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.

EXTRA! EXTRA!

Brer Rabbit Molasses an exceptionally rich source of food iron . . . vital to HEALTH!

More and more health-conscious people are turning to molasses . . . to provide food iron needed for glowing health and rich red blood.

It is easy to serve iron-rich molasses to your family every day in taste-tempting delicious cakes, pies, puddings . . . and nourishing milk shakes. FOR A DRINK EVERYONE GOES FOR, simply stir one tablespoon of Brer Rabbit Molasses into a glass of milk. Serve hot or cold.

Brer Rabbit* is richer than any other food (except liver)—in available iron. Richer than spinach . . . eggs, or steak! Use it freely, use it often—as a pleasant step towards health!

NO COST to Brer Rabbit users . . . this wonderful colorfully illustrated cook book! 124 delicious, tested recipes. Valuable tips for successful baking! An exciting, new, easier method for making gingerbread and cookies! FOR THIS VALUABLE BOOK, simply mail coupon, with any part of a Brer Rabbit Molasses label, to: PENICK & FORD, Dept. L4, New Orleans 7, La.

Name (print) _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

(Offer good in U.S.A., Alaska and Canada only)

*Use either Brer Rabbit Green Label Molasses—dark, full-flavored, richer in iron. Or Brer Rabbit Gold Label—light, mild-flavored . . . Made by the Makers of My-T-Fine Desserts and Vermont Maid Syrup

TALL GALS SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOKLET
USE DIRECT MAIL PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR YOUR FREE 20 PAGE BOOKLET L1
BANDWAGON $6.95 (sizes to 12). Red or green wool plaid. Order today! Give shoe size. Tall Gals 5th Av. shoes, famous fit: AAAAA to C. Money-back guaranteed if returned unworn in 10 days.
SHOECRAFT 693 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK 17

TALKING XMAS CARDS
GUARANTEED TO TALK
Or Money Refunded
Use over and over. Anyone can play them. 6 KINDS: Xmas, Birthday, Congratulations, etc. 4 for $1 postpaid. GIFT Order promptly and get one EXTRA card with one order of 4, or 4 extra with order of 12.
TALKING CARD
932 W. Washington Blvd. Los Angeles 15, Calif

(Continued from Page 234)

cast—he left, and there I stood, feeling a little like Cinderella after the ball, her coach turned to a pumpkin, her beautiful clothes in rags and Prince Charming only a memory!

I put in the time that evening while I was waiting to hear from Cory washing my hair, putting on fresh nail polish, and pressing my good black dress. That was Marcia's idea.

"It's the most natural thing in the world," she insisted. "If he has good news, he'll want to celebrate. If it's bad, he'll need consolation. In either case, you've got to be ready."

"But, Marcia," I protested, "he thinks of me simply as an animated jingle."

"Wait and see, my pet—wait and see!" Marcia smiled sagely.

She was right, of course. It was a celebration! I met Cory in a dimly lighted, gay little restaurant on Forty-ninth Street, where there was a good three-piece orchestra and plenty of atmosphere. He greeted me with open arms and kissed me on both cheeks like a French general conferring a decoration. The musicians came over to us grinning and playing Row, Row, Row Your Boat. Cory and I began to sing "Brush, brush, brush your teeth"—and from that moment on, I thought of it romantically as Our Song.

After things had quieted down a little, Cory put his hand over mine on the table, gave me a long look that for intoxicating effect had wine beat a mile, and said, "Ellen, you're lovely! We must celebrate often!"

It was nearly two weeks before my bubble burst. During that time I wore my good clothes to work every day, bought two new hats, and put on a double application of freckle cream every night. Cory and I had lunch together nearly every day, partly for business reasons, of course—there was more work to be done on the Sparkodent account—but the rest was for pleasure . . . and what a pleasure! Several times we had dinner together, after we finished our work at the office; once he took me to a play, and once dancing. By this time we had discovered a great deal in common, including a preference for New York steaks, piano music and a crazy kind of off-beat humor which we were sure nobody else understood.

Then there was the night we drove out into the country to a quaint little restaurant he knew on Long Island. It was one of those small, intimate places, pine-paneled, with a crackling log fire and plenty of gleaming copper everywhere. The food was superb. After dinner, which lasted a full two hours, we started driving slowly back to town, relaxed and at peace with the world. Just before we got back, he stopped the car, silently took me in his arms, and kissed me. While I was still weak and dizzy, he started the car without a word and drove me home. Now I'm not sweet sixteen. I've been around, and I've been kissed before—plenty—but never like that! Believe me, girls—never like that.

On our next date, the inevitable happened. It was Wednesday night, Cory was due at eight, and Marcia was settled comfortably in the living room playing solitaire. I was in the bedroom putting the finishing touches on my make-up. I took a deep breath and called out casually, "You—uh—staying home tonight, Marcia?"

"Yes, pet," she called back cheerfully. "I'm going to turn in early. I'm dead tired. I've got circles down to here."

I peeped around the door at her hopefully. I couldn't see any circles. In fact, I thought I'd never seen her looking lovelier. She was wearing her quilted satin housecoat—blue, just the color of her eyes—her golden hair was tied back carelessly, Grecian fashion, with a blue ribbon, and she'd taken off every speck of make-up and scrubbed her face with soap and water. It had that clean, glowing look that's so devastating if you have a complexion like Marcia's to begin with—that innocent guileless effect that throws a man off his guard while she moves in and gets the situation well in hand.

"Besides, sweetie," she went on, "I'm dying to meet your Cory."

"He's not 'my' Cory . . . not yet, anyway," I said a little crossly. Probably never will be now. I thought to myself gloomily.

SECRET OF DYE COLORING AT HOME
To get bright colors when you dye, follow this simple secret: Pick the materials that can be most successfully dyed at home—cotton, linen, wool and silk.
Specially made for these "live" fabrics, Putnam concentrated dyes give excellent results at low cost.
Hooked Rug Colors Must Last So Experts Prefer Putnam Dyes
A hooked rug can be treasured for generations if the material is dyed with true colors that last.
Leading hooked rug authorities recommend Putnam Dyes. They know the 40 shades are always full-strength and dependable.
Ask your dealer for the Putnam 40-Color Chart. Select your shades from Putnam's Self-Service Cabinet.
Write for these FREE color booklets, "The Charm of Color" and "Blending Hook Rug Colors". Address—Monroe Chemical Co., 326 Oak St., Quincy, Ill.
The Charm of Color
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
PUTNAM Fadeless* DYES 15¢
*TRADEMARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

WRIGHT'S
AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING SILVER CLEANER
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Buy him an UNUSUAL gift!
VERSA-VISE
THE VERSATILE WOODWORKING VISE
If He works with wood—as an occupation, as a hobby or just on an occasional "fix-up" job—here's a chance to buy him an unusual Christmas gift. VERSA-VISE is a new, different woodworking vise with an amazing number of uses. 16 lbs. of the finest semi-steel, carefully designed and manufactured for years of service. Handiest woodworking vise he ever used. Thousands sold. Letters from users express pleasure at VERSA-VISE's performance, surprise at its tremendous number of uses. Every woodworker on your gift list should have one. Just send $9.95 for each VERSA-VISE and pay small shipping costs upon delivery (Ohioans add 3% tax). Money-back guarantee. Made by the makers of the famous Will-Burt stoker. Ask any bank.
THE WILL-BURT CO., DEPT. LH, ORRVILLE, OHIO

Knitting Yarns
BY MAIL
Finer quality yarns of all types—spun in our own mill . . . sold to you at lowest possible price. Choose the colors you want.
Write for FREE Sample Card
Cliveden Yarns have been distributed for over 40 years by Walter McCook & Son, Inc. See and feel their lovely texture before you order.
WRITE TO DEPT. 1
CLIVEDEN YARNS
711 Arch St. Phila. 6, Pa.

.2 Make-Ups Only 25c

pletely new kind of make-up created otographic models to keep them g naturally perfect for 10 hours at without retouching, even under rrific heat of studio lights. Called I-VEIL and now, for the first time, eing made available for non-pro- al use. Helps transform even im- t skins into a beautiful complexion. o apply as face powder, yet per- on does not touch it. Rain won't it. Cry-proof too. Will NOT dry kin, and you won't know you have xcept for the wonderful attention you. Five shades. Choose from scription below.

ODELS WEAR IT 10 HOURS WITHOUT RETOUCHING

LS COSMETICS, INC., Dept. LH-1, est Hubbard Street, go 10, Illinois

ply check the shade (or shades) you want, and ogether with 25c which includes postage and nment tax, for each shade desired. Cream—, —, Beige—, Brunette—, Sun Gold—. Each pack- ives you at least twelve 10-hour TECHNI-VEIL -UPS. You'll receive yours by return mail.

.....

r.....

.....STATE.....

"You need some color at the neck of that suit, Ellen. Why don't you try my blue scarf?" Marcia suggested, as she eyed me appraisingly like a mother anxious for her child to make an impression.

"Thanks just the same, but it doesn't match my eyes," I answered. Nothing does, I thought to myself, and then I had an idea. Maybe if I made some excuse to go down to the lobby—like buying stamps or mailing a letter—Cory would come and we just might go right on from the lobby and —— Just then the buzzer sounded. Too late! Oh, well, I might as well relax and let nature take her well-known course.

I went to the door and opened it. There he stood looking taller and handsomer even than I'd remembered.

"Come in, Cory," I said in a resigned voice. "I'm so anxious to have you meet my roommate, Marcia Campbell. . . . Marcia, this is Cory Bannister, from our office."

They looked at each other and I could tell they were impressed. The way Rita Hayworth and Aly Khan were impressed the first time they met. Or Ingrid Bergman and Rossellini. Or Wally Simpson and the King. Or Romeo and Juliet. Then they both smiled—and for a minute I almost forgot to be depressed, there was so much high-voltage charm turned on in our tiny apartment.

"Well, why don't we all sit down?" Marcia said graciously.

"I'm sorry, Marcia, but we ——" I began edging toward the door, but Cory evidently hadn't heard me.

"Thanks. Let's do," he said, settling himself comfortably in the big chair. Right then I knew I might as well take off my hat. We wouldn't be going out that night!

The reason teaching has to go on is that children are not born human; they are made so.

—JACQUES BARZUN:
Teacher in America, Atlantic Monthly Press (Little, Brown & Company).

We didn't. Since Marcia had the cards handy we played three-handed canasta. It was a gay evening—and for some reason, Marcia forgot all about wanting to go to bed early. She didn't even seem tired. Instead, she put herself out to be scintillating—and so did Cory. Or maybe, I told myself, they really weren't putting themselves out. Those two didn't have to. People like that don't have to try. They just sit there and the magnetism oozes out all around. But all during the evening there was one hope I clung to.

We have something in common, I kept telling myself, Sparkodent. I knew how important that account was to Cory, and since I was a vital part of it, maybe that would give me a slight edge.

Then, toward the middle of the evening, when Cory said something amusing to Marcia she looked up at him with her dazzling smile, and he jumped to his feet as though he'd been struck by lightning.

"Why, that's it!" he exclaimed. "I've got it, Ellen— just what we've been looking for!"

"You have?" I said stupidly.

"Marcia's just the girl!" Cory practically danced around the room in glee.

"Excitable, isn't he?" drawled Marcia, amused. "Do you know what this is all about?"

"No," I answered, but I was afraid I did.

"Do you think you might tell us, Cory?"

"Sparkodent!" he practically shouted. "Marcia's the perfect Sparkodent girl! Look at those teeth! Look at that smile!"

I didn't look. I didn't say anything either. In fact, I felt a little sick.

The next day, Marcia came down to our office at Cory's invitation. She was introduced to all the top brass and finally to Mr. Matson of Sparkodent. It was decided she was the perfect choice for the Sparkodent girl. Then they all patted Cory on the back, shook his hand and agreed that it was uncanny the way he always came up with just the right idea at the right time.

(Continued on Page 239)

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

Pres-Toe Door

HANDS FULL? Just PRES-TOE—door opens! What's more, it stays open—until you PRES-TOE again, walk away, door closes. All automatically . . . NO HANDS! (Model 1151)

Touch-a-Tap

HOT? THIRSTY? Just TOUCH-A-TAP—enjoy cold running water any time. (Model 1131)

Super Locker

NEED EXTRA SPACE for frozen foods? Big 54-lb. Freez'r Locker and Fresh'ner Locker combine instantly into giant 109-lb. SuperLocker. No sub-freezing space wasted when you don't need it—plenty EXTRA space when you want it! (Model 1151)

You get these Features in the New 1951 Gibson and in NO other refrigerator!

Be a Gibson Girl!

You, too, may enjoy the advantages you want—that only Gibson offers you. Look for name of your Gibson dealer in the yellow classified pages of your telephone directory or write to Gibson. See your dealer now for a Gibson exactly right in size and price for your needs. Be a Gibson girl!

When you possess a Gibson you enjoy virtually every worthwhile feature found in any refrigerator—PLUS many truly outstanding advantages that are yours exclusively in Gibson. No other refrigerator gives you these and such other benefits as:

Supermarket Swing'r Crisp'rs — swing open at a touch, lift out easily, slip back into place easily.

Butt'ry keeps full pound of butter sweet, easy to spread.

Handi-Stor door—food variety at your fingertips. Yes, these and countless other features await your inspection at your Gibson dealer. See him promptly!

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY, GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

For Modern Convenience—Gibson Electric Ranges, Freezers, Refrigerators

Gibson 6,000,000 HOME APPLIANCES PROVED IN USE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD SINCE 1877

Copyright 1950, Gibson Refrigerator Co.

(Continued from Page 237)

For days after that, Marcia and Cory were sy together at the photographer's. You've bably seen those ads with the gorgeous nde, beautifully gowned, in a romantic ting smiling up at a man (only the back of head shows) and in the opposite corner a blue-and-yellow tube of Sparkodent. Or some of them, the girl is in front of the shbasin dressed in a filmy negligee—thbrush poised in one hand, Sparkodent e in the other. It takes time to get a whole son's campaign lined up—and sometimes y work long hours. Then, of course, it's y common decency for the account execue to take the model out to lunch, dinner nome.

Oh, sometimes I was included in the ty—in fact, lots of times we made up a y threesome. I felt like a heel because I ldn't help wishing that just occasionally, ry and I could be together again alone—hout Marcia.

And then the big blow fell. Cory and rcia were at the photographer's for a few akes Mr. Matson had ordered and I'd ved late at the office to finish up some y. It was a last-minute idea of Cory's, I was anxious to check it with him, so ok a taxi over to Sixth Avenue. I prom-l myself if they were still busy I wouldn't g around and wait without a special in-ation. I'd show them I had some pride! When I arrived, Joe, the photographer, n't around. Neither was his receptionist. idn't hear a sound so I opened the door the darkened studio, and was just about call out, "Anybody there?" when I saw m. Marcia and Cory. They didn't see me. ey weren't looking. They were kissing h other. I went out to the street, hailed ther cab, and went home.

didn't eat any dinner that night. I didn't n put on my freckle cream. What was the ? I just slipped out of my clothes and wled miserably into bed. But not to sleep. no! I had to suffer some more.

INKING back to that time, now, I'm minded of those scenes in fantasy-type vies where the person's other self, repreted by a transparent figure, appears and ries on a conversation with the flesh-and-od character. In my case, the other me med to be standing at the foot of my bed h an ugly sneer on her face.

"Well, what did you expect, you dope?" taunted me.

"I don't know," I replied, "but not this!"

"Oh, come now, Ellen," she said, "you surely can't pretend you're surprised!"

"No, I'm not," I said miserably. "I only hoped—I wanted him so much ——"

"Of course you wanted him! You and twenty or thirty other girls! Tell me, Ellen Carr, what's so special about you that you should win him when none of them could?"

"Nothing, I guess," I admitted. "But I thought—well, there was a chance that our work would bring us together."

"You mean that tooth paste?" she jeered. "You're dumber than I thought you were! Listen, when Cory Bannister falls for a girl, tooth paste will have nothing to do with it!"

"But I helped him—he was grateful—he said he never could have gotten the Sparkodent account without me!"

This time she was really disgusted with me. "Such colossal ego! You certainly don't think you're the only person with a rhyming dictionary, do you?"

"Oh, go away." I started to cry. "Leave me alone! Quit torturing me!"

"Don't blame it on me! You're the one who moved in with Marcia Campbell. Your friends all warned you!"

"I don't care," I sobbed. "I still think I was right about that. If a man doesn't want me after he sees her, then I'd rather find out about it right away! I like Marcia—and I'm not afraid to live with her!"

She raised her hand as if to strike me. "You!" she jeered. "You and your darn-fool philosophy!"

So it went on for hours while I tossed in my bed, cried into my pillow, and wondered what Marcia and Cory were doing—why he didn't bring her home. Later, when I heard her key in the lock, I quickly smoothed my covers and lay as still as a statue. I heard her open the bedroom door softly and then close it again. Then I could hear the water running in the bathroom and I knew she was getting ready for bed. Pretty soon she tiptoed in and slipped quietly into bed. I still didn't move. I had no desire to talk to anyone.

I tried to analyze my feeling toward Marcia. It wasn't her fault that she was beautiful and desirable—and I really couldn't honestly blame my failure on her. I couldn't blame Cory either. Faced with a choice between Marcia and me, how could any man in his right mind not pick her? Still, I couldn't help feeling resentment. I thought of all the men Marcia could have had—could have right now—just for the asking; all the men she would meet in the future—and charm without the slightest effort—and it didn't seem fair! Life handed happiness to some people on a silver platter, while others ——

Something that sounded like a muffled sob interrupted my reverie. I listened and heard it again. This time it was unmistakable. Marcia was crying!

I sat up in bed and whispered, "Marcia!" Everything was quiet. I turned on the lamp between the beds and said aloud, "Marcia, were you crying?"

"It's nothing," she answered in a muffled voice. "I'm sorry if I woke you."

"You didn't wake me—and you are crying!" I insisted. "Is anything wrong?"

She turned and looked at me then and I could see that her beautiful blue eyes were red and swollen! "Oh, Ellen!" she cried and buried her face in the pillow, her shoulders shaking with sobs. At that moment I forgot my resentment for Marcia. I went over and sat on the edge of her bed and put my arms around her.

"Marcia, darling," I pleaded, "what is it? What has happened?"

"I'm so miserable!" she sobbed. "I hate myself—I hate everything! I feel like jumping out that window and ending it all!"

"You'll have to wait your turn," I answered dryly.

"Oh, Ellen, how can you stand to live with me!" She broke out into fresh tears. "I'm such a mess!"

"Why don't you tell me about it, Marcia?" I said quietly. I was pretty sure what was bothering her—and I thought we might as well get this thing over with and try to go on from there.

"But you're so good, Ellen—you've been such a wonderful friend—and now you're going to hate me!" She sat up in bed and made an effort to stop crying. She dried her eyes and then said quickly, "Tonight, Cory—we—he kissed me!"

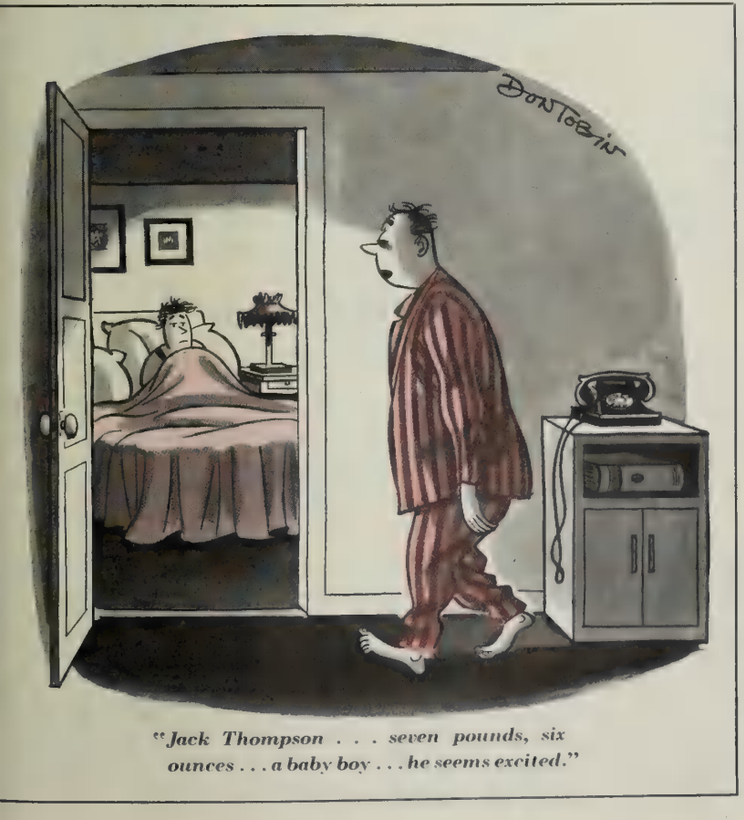
"I shouldn't think that's a cause for tears," I said, the bitterness coming back in a wave.

"But, Ellen, you don't understand," she went on painfully. "I'm in love with him. For the first time in my life, I'm really in love!"

So now it was out. I hadn't admitted it to myself before, but I suddenly realized I'd been hoping down in one corner of my heart that perhaps it was only a flirtation with Marcia—and when she tired of it and found somebody else, Cory might return to me. Pride? Never heard of it!

"Ellen, say something! Don't just sit there looking so—so crushed. I can't bear it!" Marcia was urgent now.

"What is there to say, Marcia?" I answered dully. "You're in love! So that's that! You didn't do it on purpose."



"Oh, no!" she agreed. "I'd give anything in the world if it hadn't happened—if he'd been anyone else! You do believe me, don't you, Ellen? You will . . . forgive me?"

"All right, Marcia," I said, turning out the light. "Let's not talk about it any more."

I crawled into my bed and pulled my misery up over me like a blanket. I couldn't talk to Marcia any more. I couldn't let her see how much I cared. She was taking it hard enough. Poor Marcia! Such troubles I should have. That night lasted a thousand years—and I didn't sleep a wink of it. By morning I was exhausted, but somehow I'd reached a kind of peaceful acceptance of the situation. I dressed carefully, as one might for a funeral, and went to the office with a sweet, sad smile of resignation on my face.

I DIDN'T see Cory all day. He didn't come to the office. Probably didn't want to face me, I guessed. By evening I was really tired and my beautiful serenity was wearing thin. I was just finishing up the dinner dishes when the phone rang. Marcia was nearer, so she answered. She said "Hello" lackadaisically, and then suddenly her voice came to life. It was Cory! I turned from the sink and stood tense, listening, my hands dripping water all over the floor. Ridiculous, isn't it, the way two grown women with fairly high I.Q.'s can change into quivering morons—just at a voice on the telephone?

After a brief conversation, Marcia hung up the phone and came into the kitchenette. "Cory's coming over right away," she said,

"Jack Thompson . . . seven pounds, six ounces . . . a baby boy . . . he seems excited."

Sick and tired of scorchy pans?

BRILLO

gives TWICE the SHINE in HALF the TIME!

New "Scorchy Pan" Tests prove Brillo shines greasy, crusty pans brighter and faster than other types of cleansers tested! A scientific shine-meter shows Brillo actually gives aluminums twice the shine in half the time!

Brillo has gumption! A square, metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap just whisks off scorchy crust! Gets right down to a lightning-fast polishing job with the jeweler's polish in Brillo soap. And Brillo guarantees results. If Brillo fails to clean a utensil—you get a new one—free!

★ RED box—soap-filled pads
★ GREEN box—pads and cake soap

There's jeweler's polish in BRILLO

Only Real Mayonnaise is good so many ways!

BEST FOODS
Real Mayonnaise
HELLMANN'S

not looking at me. I turned back to the sink and the dishes. "Well—aren't you going to change, or anything?" she asked, eying my faded cotton housecoat.

"What for?" I said shortly, stealing a glance in the small mirror above the sink. I really was a mess. Tossing all night doesn't do your hair any good; my eyes had about as much sparkle as leftover hors d'oeuvres.

"Well—all right," Marcia said hesitantly, "but I think he wants to see us both. He asked if you were here."

She went into the bedroom to make herself even more beautiful if possible. So Cory wanted to see me, did he? Probably about those new Sparkodent jingles I'd written yesterday. Well, he could just wait and see them tomorrow at the office. I was through knocking myself out for Cory Bannister!

A few minutes later, when the buzzer sounded, I was still scouring a saucepan. It was already cleaner than when we'd rented the apartment, but did I know what I was doing? Marcia went to the door and I heard her greet Cory in her most provocative manner. He was in high spirits. I looked around desperately for a hole to crawl into—but there was no escape. I'd have to face the music!

Then he appeared in the doorway and my heart did a nose dive right into my shoes. Every time I saw him, his handsomeness hit me like a blow!

"Egad!" he cried. "The little lady is domestic too! Is there no end to her talents!"

"I'll have you know I can tat a mean doily, and simply everyone raves about my candied potato peeling!" I said.

"It's lucky I found you home tonight," Cory went on. "I've been up to Boston today. Just got back an hour ago. I was so afraid you'd be out or something."

"I'm sorry, Cory," I said, pouring scouring powder on the saucepan for the ninth time, "I left the new Sparkodent jingles at the office ——"

"Never mind the Sparkodent jingles!" he said recklessly. "This is much more important. I'm in love!"

Marcia was standing just behind him—her face radiant. "Congratulations," I said.

"I drove all night last night," Cory said. "Up to Boston to see my family. I just couldn't wait to tell them! They were tickled to death, so now there's only one thing left to do—and that's propose!"

I WONDERED why he kept looking at me when Marcia was standing right there. The next thing I knew he came over to the sink and put his arms around me.

"Oh, Ellen, darling," he said intensely, "that last fifty miles was so long! I was thinking of you every minute! I love you so much! Please say you'll marry me!"

"Who—me?" I said stupidly. Everything seemed vague and out of focus—like in a dream. In another second he was kissing me.

"I'm so crazy about you, Ellen!" he murmured in my ear. "You're the sweetest, the cutest—the most lovable ——"

"Who—me?" I breathed. All my life I'd dreamed of this moment—and here I was acting like a half-wit, but Cory kissed me again.

"I'll probably make a terrible husband—but will you marry me and take a chance?"

Part of my brain began to function again. Marcia wasn't there. I didn't know when she'd left—but the thought of Marcia brought up a question I just had to ask.

"What about Marcia?" I asked. "Last night you—you kissed her. I thought ——"

"Yes, I did kiss Marcia, bless her!" he said jubilantly. "That was when I knew how much I loved you! Don't you see, Ellen?"

"Not exactly," I admitted.

"You will! You see, darling," he explained, "I knew from the first you were different—but I've never been in love before, so I wasn't sure. I kept waiting for some proof—some sign. And then I kissed Marcia!"

"And that—that did it?"

"That did it! Marcia is a beautiful girl. She has a gorgeous figure, a wonderful personality—and plenty of sex appeal!"

This was not news to me, so I made no comment.

HE went on triumphantly, "I just had to kiss her! It was the only way! And it worked. It didn't do a thing to me. Not a thing! All the time I was kissing her I could only think of one thing—how much I loved you!"

Poor Marcia, I thought in one part of me, but in all the rest, hope was at last rearing its lovely head.

"Oh, Ellen," he finished soberly, "you just can't say no! Please!" He looked at me anxiously like an eager small boy and my last doubt curled up and died.

Yes, folks, it's all true—he loves me! It wasn't a dream after all. I know that because I'm black and blue from pinching myself these past few days. He even thinks I'm beautiful. He said so right after I said "Yes"—and me in my old housecoat, no make-up, and dishpan hands! I don't remember who that character was who said "Love is blind"—but he was so right! I mean, not even a nearsighted guy with astigmatism would pass up Marcia, especially when she was just standing there waiting to give in.

Meanwhile, I refuse to let myself waste too much sympathy on Marcia. She's ever busier than usual these days with her modeling and her men. She had three proposals last week—which is about par for the course. But she has her mind on other things—to wit, finding a new roommate. And for Marcia, that won't be easy. In spite of her beauty, her intelligence and congenial disposition, there haven't been many applicants. Women are afraid of her. She looks like an angel and has a personality with the kick of nuclear fission. Yes, men—unless they have rocks in their heads—like Marcia. But, girls, don't let me discourage you! If you're interested in sharing an attractive apartment with a good address, go on, take a chance! After all, you, too, may find yourself a rockhead!

MEALS THAT WAIT

(Continued from Page 187)

Freezing for the future: Double or triple the recipe. Do not reheat after adding the beans. Cool to room temperature. Pack in freezing containers and freeze. Thaw and reheat when ready to use.

EASY STEAMED FIG PUDDING

Break up 2½ seven-and-three-quarter-ounce packages (a generous quart) of commercial fig-filled cookies. Pour 1 cup milk over them. Let stand 15 minutes, until they become mushy. Add ½ cup flour sifted with ½ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon baking soda. Blend well to avoid lumps of flour. Add the following additional ingredients: ¼ cup molasses, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, ½ cup melted butter or margarine, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon ground cloves. Mix and blend thoroughly. Pour into a 1½-quart pudding mold that has been well greased. Fasten cover on tightly and steam on a rack in a closed kettle about 3 hours. (If you have a pressure cooker, the steaming time is cut appreciably. Follow instructions for steaming given in the booklet that came with your cooker.) Serve hot with a lemon hard sauce.

Freezing for the future: You may wish to make up several puddings to have on hand for winter dinners, since steaming time for puddings is usually long unless you have a pressure cooker. When the pudding is removed from the mold and is thoroughly cool, wrap well in aluminum foil. To resteam: Without removing the foil, thaw and steam 30-40 minutes on a rack over boiling water long enough to heat the pudding through. Keep the lid on the steamer during cooking time. Unwrap and serve. THE END hen you want lust Everything to be Elegant...

n remember Ripe Olives. And have the magic touch that turns dest meal into a marvelous menu.
Ripe Olives for added appeal petizers, for sparking-up sands and salads, for making main s more delectable.
for genuinely good eating all emselves, any meal, any time, just t the Olive Bowl.

IPE OLIVES
FROM CALIFORNIA

or FREE booklet of Elegant Ripe Olive Recipes:
Olive Advisory Board, Room 1105
Beale Street, San Francisco 5, California

KITCHEN Bouquet

TO MAKE GRAVY
EXTRA RICH·
BROWN·DELICIOUS

It's easy to make your gravy extra-rich, extra-brown, extra-delicious every time. Just stir in Kitchen Bouquet! Ah! What rich, brown color and how it brings out that true meat taste! Adds no artificial flavor. Good cooks have used Kitchen Bouquet for over 70 years.

COSTS SO LITTLE —ADDS SO MUCH!

YARN SAMPLE CARD FREE

Over 200 samples finest quality yarns —all colors—send only 10c for handling—mailing. Write Dept. L.J.
PUN YARN CO., 219 Broome St., New York, N.Y.

COUNTRY DOCTOR

(Continued from Page 184)

begging to call them mother and dad. Kathë was only seven years old when war first came to her country; from that time until she was sixteen she knew nothing else. One brother served in the Russian army, another was killed with the German army, one brother-in-law was deported to Siberia, another died of tuberculosis in a displaced-persons camp. When the Germans left Estonia in 1944 and the Russians arrived, Kathë fled with her sister, her sister's husband and baby to Germany. Her mother and the rest of the family were to follow on another boat the next day. On the way to Gottenhaben, the boat was torpedoed in the Baltic Sea and about one third of the passengers perished. They heard on the ship's radio that all travel from Estonia had been banned by the Russians and Kathë knew then that her family would not be following them. She has not heard a word from them since.

Once in Germany, Kathë and her sister's family went to work on a farm where a German soldier stationed in Estonia had told them they could find help. They stayed there a year until the Russians moved in. Then they put the child, then three years old, in a little wagon together with all their belongings and hiked barefooted 300 miles to an American camp. They slept in barns and subsisted on one meal a day. When the little boy cried from hunger, German farmers would give him apples. The refugees spent the next three years in American DP camps, where the boy's father finally died of tuberculosis, then in 1948 the Lutherans sent them to America. When they arrived in Boston, Kathë was overcome with joy at the thought of being able to go back to school again, and felt a whole new life was opening up for her.

The Sheppards feel keenly their responsibility toward Kathë and have recently been a bit concerned at the enthusiastic rush Hutchinson boys have been giving her. When an invitation came last summer to appear in a scanty bathing suit on a water-carnival float, Lola put her foot down firmly, figuring that wasn't the kind of attention Kathë needed. She is very pretty, a quick-witted and gay person, in spite of her bitter memories of war and separation. "I used to cry myself to sleep every night, thinking of my family. Now I say I will not be sorry for myself," she says with determination. This year she will continue to live with the Sheppards while she works in a local factory to earn some money and improve her English. Then the doctor will help her through four years of the University of Minnesota.

Because they see so little of their father, both Leland and Barbie spend part of almost every day in the doctor's offices, where the refrigerator is well stocked with Cokes and popsicles as well as biologicals. The lab technician has been with the doctor for ten

NEXT MONTH

"We must care for more children."

ANNA THORPE has been "Mom" to hundreds at the Cleveland Christian Home for Children in the past 25 years. She grieves over each one turned away because "there's no room." Brought up in a Home herself, she knows that "home" and "institution" are words with quite different meanings. Meet Anna and the children she calls "Your other family," in

Life in an Orphan Home

by Roger Butterfield

How America Lives, in the December LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

HERE'S TO THE JOY OF GLOWING HEALTH!

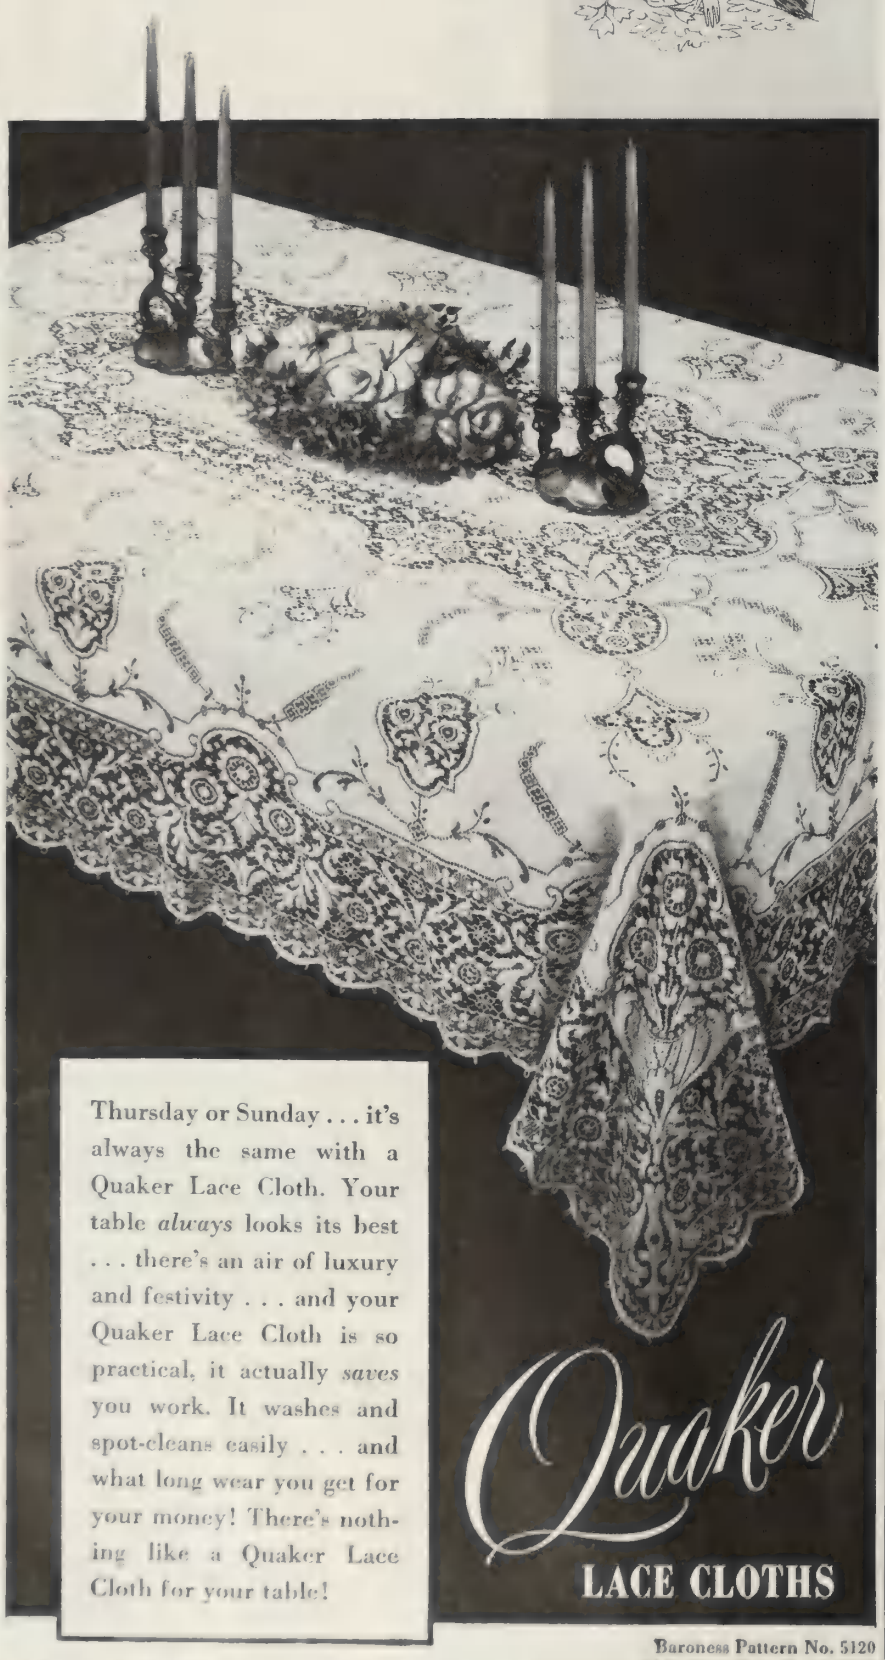
Florida's vitamin-rich Grapefruit Juice helps fortify you against colds and fatigue 24 hours a day!

FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT JUICE IS FULL-STRENGTH — BRIMFUL OF NATURAL HEALTH BENEFITS FOR YOU. NOTHING TO DO BUT HELP YOURSELF!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION
LAKELAND, FLORIDA

FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT JUICE OFFERS ALL THIS HELP TO HEALTH EACH DAY!

1. Helps maintain ALKALINE reserve
2. Supplies LIQUID— hostile to colds
3. A gold mine of VITAMIN C
4. Other VITAMINS and MINERALS
5. ENERGY from fruit sugars
6. Arouses sulky APPETITES
7. Stimulates DIGESTIVE juices
8. MILDLY LAXATIVE



FLORIDA CANNED

PRACTICAL on Thursday

FESTIVE on Sunday!

Thursday or Sunday . . . it's always the same with a Quaker Lace Cloth. Your table always looks its best . . . there's an air of luxury and festivity . . . and your Quaker Lace Cloth is so practical, it actually saves you work. It washes and spot-cleans easily . . . and what long wear you get for your money! There's nothing like a Quaker Lace Cloth for your table!

Quaker

LACE CLOTHS

Baroness Pattern No. 5120
U.S. Des. Pat. No. 142075

Quaker Lace Company, Philadelphia 33, Pa.
Sales Office: 330 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N. Y.
Also makers of Quaker Net Curtains and Quaker Nylon Hosiery years—a former housemaid of his, he took her into the office when he learned of her ambitions to be a nurse and trained her in all lab procedures himself. The doctor also employs a full-time receptionist-secretary, making a staff of three.

When he expanded his offices to nine rooms and two lavatories last year (at a cost of $10,000), he and his staff tended to get lost in the place. Now each room has a buzzer and a telephone, as well as a set of different-colored lights outside each door so that it is possible to tell at a glance down the hall what is going on in the various rooms (a system copied from Mayo Clinic).

Doctor Charlie handles as many as 40 patients a day at his office, generally charging between $1 and $3, and sometimes nothing. (He does tonsillectomies for about $35, and averages about $60 for a delivery.) He reaches his office at 8 A.M. and is not through until 5:30 or 6 P.M. Twice a day, usually, he gets over to the local hospital to check up on his patients there. Evenings find him back at the office until 9 P.M., writing up his records for the day. With such a schedule, he has cut home calls to the absolute minimum. Kids suffering from the usual run of diseases, even scarlet fever, are wrapped warmly and brought to the office where they are immediately isolated from all other patients. Works fine, he finds, saves him time and saves the patients money. When absolutely necessary, of course, he will drive fifteen or twenty miles out into the country on an emergency, but to discourage any unnecessary calls he and the other doctors in the county charge $1 a mile (one way) for such trips, plus $5 for the call.

LOLA used to save her evenings for him, but now that he is home only week-end evenings (and plenty of emergencies cut into them), she spends the time working on the many speeches she gives to various clubs, or sewing or mending. She long ago gave up much social life. One New Year's Eve they were dressing for a party when a call came for Charlie to deliver a baby. "You go on," Charlie told her, "and I'll be right over." It turned out to be twins, which arrived four hours apart, and Charlie arrived supperless at the party at 2 A.M. If they make a date with another couple for dinner and a show in Minneapolis, often as not they are frantically paging them in the hotel lobby at 6 P.M. to say they will be two hours late.

"At first people tried to pump me for information about patients, but since Charlie never told me anything, I wasn't tempted to say anything," says Lola. "They soon gave up."

One day Charlie came home with a worried and preoccupied look and finally confided in her that a patient had said she was in love with him. Lola laughed and didn't even ask the woman's name, which piqued Charlie, naturally. "Women are always falling in love with men in white, or thinking they're in love with them," Lola told him. "She'll get over it." She did, says Charlie.

For relaxation at home, the doctor likes to strum the piano—George Gershwin and Cole Porter are his favorites, and among the classics, Chopin. "I probably should say Bach, but I guess I'm not an intellectual," he says modestly. He is also a great home-movie fan and has a complete record in color film of his children from babyhood. When the children were still quite small he began to worry about all the weight Lola was accumulating—from a slim 116 pounds in college, she soared to 182. He mentioned it to her several times with no effect. Then one day when she was wearing a rather short and tight-fitting dress, he took some movies of her and the children. Then he invited a few friends in to see them. Stunned and humiliated at her image on the screen, Lola took the lesson like a good sport and said nothing, but that very night began to diet. In six months she took off 40 pounds and looked years younger. She now weighs herself religiously every day, keeps herself at a consistent 145 pounds.

Every August the doctor takes his family up to a charming and primitive lake cottage the family owns in Northern Minnesota

It's smart to buy

ALVIN*

STERLING

because it is styled to remain in fashion . . .
It is "solid" sterling silver through and through and constant use will only enhance its beauty.
Modestly priced for satisfaction and service, year after year, for a lifetime.

SEE IT . . BUY IT . . AT YOUR JEWELER'S
Write us for free illustrated price folders of these and other ALVIN patterns.

THE ALVIN SILVERSMITHS
Makers of Exclusive Silver Designs for over Sixty years
PROVIDENCE 7, RHODE ISLAND
*Trademarks

PREFERRED
for Perfect Tea

This lovely French shape is decorated gleaming gold that glistens on a colo glaze that will never craze. Like all gen Hall Teapots, it is made of secret pro china that will not stain or absorb. Us . . . for perfect tea, graciously served. Th why Hall Teapots are preferred!

The Hall China Compan
World's Largest Manufactur of Decorated Teapots and Cooking China

Hall Teapots
OF SUPERIOR QUALITY CHINA

Sold by All Leading Dealers

e they have no plumbing, no electricity
'Thank God," says Charlie, "no telee!"
I could draw a cartoon of that thing," ys, pointing to the telephone on his
"it would have a great long neck and a and arms—a monster!" From the mine gets up in the morning at 6:30, and all gh meals, it rings. In the office he some-handles as many as 44 calls a day, viched between 40 patients. "I'm try-get a difficult history from a patient," he doctor, "when the phone rings and I to switch my mind completely from hing like Hodgkin's disease to kidney
s. If I go to a friend's house or a movie, e to let the local operator know where I Then, when I'm finally in bed, dead there's that monster right at my elbow to blast me out of my sensibilities at inute of the night."
a, who shares a double bed with her nd, used to wake up whenever the rang at night, then lie awake and until he got home from a call. Now she ained herself to sleep right through, but ably awakens to the alarm clock.
k people always seem to feel sicker as with its accompanying fears draws . One night recently the phone rang at Charlie picked up the phone to speak ne unknown person complaining of a ch-ache.
ow long have you had it?" the doctor

n, on and off for about twenty years,
," was the answer.
that case it will wait until morning," l the disgusted medico, and hung up.

s past summer the oards spent two is living with Charnother in the big,
shingle house on Street where Charlie
orn, while their own was completely re-
led. The Sheppards
it their roomy red-house at 440 Grove Street for $7500
5. It is a substantial building with four-nch walls and granite-block foundation, us old shade, and lots of yard for Lola's ning; but like most houses built at the ning of the century, it was not designed reamlined living. There were only two closets in the entire house, and the iving room was so small that the chilad to have their friends visit in relays.
over, it ate up over $400 worth of coal
r.
h the help of an architect, the Shepmade extra space in both attic and so that the house now has twelve rooms ve baths. The partition between living ining rooms is down, making one big the whole width of the house. All the pes have been replaced with copper, n oil burner and baseboard heating re-he coal furnace and radiators. The attic en insulated and finished with two new oms, bath and huge storage room with closets. The cellar has a hobby shop big amusement room for the kids. The operation cost in the neighborhood of 0, and the Sheppards borrowed from nk to do it, but figure that if they l to save that much money, Leland be in college.
e need the space right now, and I it's worth paying some interest to get ys the doctor.

OUGH the doctor's gross annual income e, after he has paid office overhead and he keeps only 47 cents of every dollar ects. He finds that the average person about three months before paying a 's bill, and about 14 per cent of the e sends out are never paid at all. The owed him since he started practicing n years ago now runs well into five
"I'm not complaining, you under-
" says Doctor Charlie, who keeps a aborate set of accounts. "This state of is true of all doctors."
how has as many patients as one man ndle, and is beginning to turn a few away. Yet for the first two years he practiced in Hutchinson he despaired of even keeping his wife in shoe leather.

Charlie met Lola while he was in medical school at the University of Minnesota and she was business manager for the University Theater, where she had starred in many productions as an undergraduate. Lola, entirely self-supporting since a sophomore in high school, was determined to go on the stage. After high school, she worked for three years as a telephone operator, studying dramatics on the side.

She put herself through the University of Minnesota from 1928 to 1932 by tutoring French, washing dishes and reading proof for faculty, and managing Methodist Young People's work for pay. She was on the women's debating team, a member of the Maskers, and appeared in many university productions, such as the play l'Aiglon, with such top-ranking professionals as Ernest Lawford, Edward Fielding and William Faversham. Many backstage talks with these famous actors brushed some of the star dust from Lola's stage-struck eyes, and she decided that directing involved a lot fewer heartaches than trying to become an actress. When the University Theater offered her the job as business manager when she graduated, she accepted the $75-a-month job gladly.

CHARLIE and Lola met on a blind date, but she still teases him that it was two and a half years later before they went out together again. She had heard about Charlie for years—he was one of her brother's best friends in college—but their paths didn't cross again until Charlie came to her mother's boardinghouse one night to pick up his date. His date wasn't there, but Lola was, and as they sat talking in the living room he began to realize what he had been missing. From then on the romance progressed like wildfire. First they talked of getting married when he was through training (in four years), then in two years, then one, and finally Charlie said, "Oh, heck! Let's get married next Saturday."

The human mind has an entrance and an exit. The exit is much larger.

—JOHN W. RAPER: What This World Needs. (World Publishing Company)

On the Thursday before the wedding, Charlie announced the news to his father, who first said, "Who?" and then, "What will you live on—buttons?" Charlie explained patiently that it was all arranged—Lola would support herself while his father continued to support him. Fortunately, the Sheppards had already met Lola and had pronounced her quite the nicest girl that Charlie had ever brought home.

Lola took the day off from the university production of The Taming of the Shrew, and they got married in Minneapolis, Lola in a navy suit and no flowers, since the harried groom had forgotten them. They then drove up to Wisconsin in her ancient Buick to a little hotel, munching chocolate bars and peanuts on the way. The next day they both moved into her mother's boardinghouse next to the University of Minnesota and stayed there for four years. Asked if she would marry again under like circumstances, Lola says, "I only regret waiting six weeks!"

There were six other practicing physicians in Hutchinson when Charlie hung out his shingle in 1937, after an extra year of internship at Miller Hospital, St. Paul, concentrating on pediatrics, obstetrics and internal medicine. The first year he averaged 1.3 patients a day. One of his first patients was a black Labrador. The owner said he couldn't afford to take the dog to a vet.

Charlie sat in his office, across the hall from his father's, and read medical journals until he thought he would go blind, then snoozed. Once Lola wandered in, and although he was sitting alertly at his desk, she burst out laughing. Sleeping with his head on his hands had left a telltale strawberry mark on his forehead. Thereafter Charlie carefully placed a small sponge on his forehead when sleeping.

When he walked down the street, old friends would say, "Well, well, Charlie, so you're a doctor now! Don't expect to see me

NO OTHER CLEANSER gives your bathtub and sink SUCH A POLISH

Just one reason why millions of women won't use anything but grit-free Bon Ami

IT'S tough ✓ ON ALL DIRT gentle ✓ ON ALL SURFACES kind ✓ TO YOUR HANDS quick ✓ POLISHES AS IT CLEANS

You'll clean your best with

BON AMI

"hasn't scratched yet!"

in your office—can't learn everything in books, you know!" Charlie would summon up a sickly grin and stride home to Lola in a fury, wondering whatever possessed him to think he could build up a practice in his own home town, where everyone remembered him as a shaver. Then Lola, who was herself rather lost and lonely, and finding endless games of honeymoon bridge a poor substitute for the stimulation of the theater, would attempt to cheer him up. Generally she would tell him once again about her mother, who with no education beyond the third grade and no money except what she could earn herself, managed to see three children through college. "Charlie was always used to money and security—I never had either. I had to instill in him a sense of his own ability," recalls Lola.

The next year Charlie had 2.5 patients per day and Lola had a baby. The month Leland was born, her hospital bill came to $88, and Charlie's total earnings to $60. To buy office equipment and pay the grocery bills, Charlie borrowed steadily from his family until he was $6000 in debt. Often he was paid only in chickens, and once was presented with a dead duck highly perfumed with skunk. Then the third year he got a break. One of the town doctors died, and Charlie moved into his offices and took over his practice. In 1940 he averaged $342 a month and he and Lola staged a hilarious sponge-burning ceremony. He's been short of sleep ever since.

Aside from the physical exertion of his twelve-hour day, Charlie's job is a severe emotional strain. Here is one of his typically hard days, which he begins at 6:30 A.M. after four hours' sleep because of a delivery during the night:

First, he drives about town checking up on a couple of complaints that have come to him as local health officer. Then over to the hospital to check up on his patients there. One of them, a woman of 80 with a broken hip, must be made to walk again, and Charlie works hard at persuading her. Another patient has decided he has come to the hospital to die—"I figured I had a one-way ticket, doctor"—and Charlie spends five minutes making him laugh and another ten extracting a promise that he will let his daughter take him home again. He examines the chart of a 12-year-old boy with pneumonia; penicillin has reduced his temperature to normal in twenty-four hours—one of those miracles his dad liked to talk about.

DOCTOR CHARLIE then roars over to his pale-green-and-yellow air-conditioned offices and just has time to dictate a few letters to other doctors about some puzzling cases when the patients start flocking in. There are ten Boy Scouts for health examinations, new babies to be checked and weighed, a kid with a broken elbow, a farmer with an allergy to hay. A young bride-to-be comes in perfectly distraught—her fiancé has complained about her halitosis! On her heels comes a 60-year-old lady with pernicious anemia; the doctor can control (not cure) all symptoms of her disease in as little as two weeks with vitamin B_{12}—another miracle of modern medicine.

A 20-year-old girl enters his office with great diffidence. Her story comes out haltingly. She is unmarried and pregnant. After he confirms this fact, the doctor tells her to bring in the boy to see if there is any possibility of marriage. He advises her in strongest terms against having an abortion.

In the next hour, he is trying to persuade an eager young mother not to have a baby. "With that rheumatic heart of yours, you can either live as long as possible for the children you already have, or have some more babies and leave them motherless," he tells her sharply, trying not to notice her tears.

A MOTHER brings in a boy with bad tonsils. Doctor Charlie takes tonsils out all year round, even during the hottest summer months. Surveys show no connection, he says, between tonsillectomies and susceptibility to polio.

A woman whose courage and good sense he admires tremendously comes in complaining of shooting pains from the tips of her fingers to the back of her neck. Outwardly, the doctor's cheerful, sympathetic manner does not change. Inwardly he is seized with dread. Because of the woman's past history, this could mean cancer of the brain. He leaves her a moment to put in a long-distance call to a cancer specialist and arranges to have an EEG test made. "It's the toughest hardest thing I ever have to do," he says, his face looking tireder than ever, "to decide whether to tell the patient (after I'm sure, of course), and then to admit that there is nothing any one can do for her."

He goes on to the next patient, an old case. Every time he sees her, she has picked up another old-country superstition about pregnancy. Last month she had seen a barn in flames and was convinced her child would be born with a red birth mark. This time she has a sure-fire way of telling the sex of her infant: "You tie a ring to a piece of string and hold it over your stomach. If the ring goes round and round it's a girl. If it goes back and forth, it's a boy."

The doctor uses a radically new technique with maternity patients which is quite a controversial subject around Hutchinson. In most hospitals nowadays, the mother gets up the second or third day after she has had a baby. Doctor Charlie encourages his patients to walk from the delivery table to their beds. Some women react violently to the idea, thinking it is the most brutal thing they ever heard of, and these patients are wheeled back to their beds. Among the hundred patients who have tried it, however, it has been an outstanding success, he thinks, in preventing circulatory complications after childbirth.

Finally the waiting room empties of patients. Charlie picks up the phone to tell Lola he's on his way. The reports on the thirty-six patients he saw that day are still unwritten—he'll have to come back tonight.

His mind still preoccupied with the suspected cancer victim, he says good night to his staff and slides his long legs into his car. So his father thought modern medicine a marvelous challenge! Cancer cases like this he'd rather not see—could be neuritis—just a chance ——

Leland pops out the door of the big brick house. "Hi, dad, look at this!"

The doctor bends over to examine an object in his son's hand and gets a spray of water square in his eye. For a moment he is angry and nonplused—then his head rolls back and that explosive laughter rolls out. Leland throws his arms about his neck and kisses him violently. "Daddy's home!" he cries jubilantly. THE END

Sanctuary

By Joseph Auslander

Our love is like a meadow in the sun,
A little island in the marshy grass,
A limpid mirror for oblivion,
And for the steel-blue heron a smooth glass.
The straight reed, the unrippled osier,
The starry water hyacinth softly stand;
The six gold goslings paddling here and there
Maintain a guard upon this holy land.

Behold the bright pavilion of our peace
Far from the madness in the heart of man,
Our ocean-sentineled Hesperides,
The final archipelago of Pan:
Against the world we pit the horn of snail,
The piper's signature sand-pricked in Braille.

Printed in U.S.

Ladies' Home

Journal

wishes you a Merry Christmas

BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

December 1950-25¢

MOTHER OF THE GROOM
Complete in This Issue
by Harriet Fitts Ryan

ROOM IN THE INN
by Pearl S. Buck

Stories and Articles
Roger Butterfield, Robert Craig,
Laurence Kirk, Marjorie Carter,
Harry Emerson Fosdick,
Gladys Denny Shultz

You can be confident you're keeping your mouth and breath more wholesome, sweeter, cleaner—if you guard against tooth decay and gum troubles both. So don't risk halfway dental care. Depend on doubly-effective Ipana care for healthier teeth, healthier gums—better all-around protection for your whole mouth.

Fight tooth decay and gum troubles both—to keep your Whole Mouth Wholesome!

Teach your children doubly-effective Ipana care

To help your youngsters grow up with healthier, cleaner mouths, show them how to fight tooth decay and gum troubles both. Remember, tooth decay hits 9 out of 10 children before the age of six. And later in life, gum troubles cause more than half of all tooth losses. So start your children today on the Ipana way to healthier teeth and healthier gums both. Ipana is another dependable Bristol-Myers product.

Only one leading tooth paste is specially designed to give you this double protection!*

Yours can be a healthier, more wholesome mouth—if you do what dentists advise: fight tooth decay and gum troubles, too.

With one famous tooth paste—*with Ipana and massage—you can guard your teeth and gums BOTH.

No other tooth paste—ammoniated or otherwise—has been proved more effective than Ipana to fight tooth decay. And no other leading tooth paste is specially designed to stimulate gum circulation—promote healthier gums.

Remember, Ipana is the only leading tooth paste made specially to give you this doubly-protective, doubly-effective care.

So be sure of double protection—keep your whole mouth "Ipana Wholesome." Ipana's wholesome flavor is refreshing, too—you'll enjoy it. Get Ipana today.

NEW!
Big economy size Ipana saves you up to 23¢

IPANA

For healthier teeth, healthier gums

Libby's IS THE PEAK-FLAVOR PINEAPPLE

ALL IN FAVOR OF FLAVOR

say "Libby's!"

Slices • Chunks • Crushed • Juice

Easy dessert with tropical tang! Serve cold, sweetened rice with Libby's crispy Crushed Pineapple. Instead, like Libby's slices, chunks and juice, it's peak-flavor pineapple—luscious! Garnish your easy, economical dish with mint and maraschino cherries.

Whenever they're thirsty, Libby's Pineapple Juice is the thing!

It's sweetened only by Hawaiian sunshine—this sparkling, natural juice pressed from Libby's famous peak-flavor pineapples.

It has a wonderful, wake-up tang . . . a luscious, thirst-quenching quality that makes Libby's a round-the-clock favorite.

Above, the glasses of Libby's "liquid sunshine" are garnished with Libby's peak-flavor Pineapple Chunks and maraschino cherries speared on tooth picks. You just cut a little slit in each cherry to make it fit over the rim of the glass.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

LOOK TO Libby's FOR PERFECTION!

JOURNAL

CONTENTS

DECEMBER, 1950

VOL. LXVII, No. 12

MOSER

HARRIET FITTS RYAN

"I am still an Alabamian at heart, although I have lived in Albion, New York, for many years. I have been a feature writer for several Eastern newspapers. My husband is a judge. We have four sons, ages 28, 26, 21 and 20. Twice in less than a year I was Mother of the Groom (Page 36) and, while not everything in my story did happen to me, it all well could have."

GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ

(Why Can't Our Mothers Breast-Feed? Page 42

"I was born in Des Moines, Iowa, graduated from Drake University. After five years of newspaper work, I retired to start my family and began free-lance writing. An amateur mother, I studied child psychology, which became my special field. I joined the JOURNAL staff in 1945. My children tease me for making them finance their own upbringing, but it doesn't seem to have hurt them."

ROBERT CRAIG

"Born in Saltillo, Mexico, of American parents . . . reared in Harmon, New York . . . graduated in 1934 from Columbia . . . two years of postgraduate work in drama at Yale . . . met Jenny . . . Jenny and I were married in 1941 . . . I volunteered for the Army in 1942 (there is absolutely no connection between the two events!). Jennifer, our little girl, is the model for Maggie (Page 40)."

Journal's Complete-in-One-Issue Novel

Mother of the Groom . . . Harriet Fitts Ryan 36

Fiction

A Breath of Air (Second part of three) . . . Rumer Godden 38
Maggie's Christmas Tree . . . Robert Craig 40
Love at Second Sight . . . Laurence Kirk 56
Part-Time Job . . . Marjorie Carter 60

Special Features

Community Begins at Home . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
Vitality is Mightier Than Size . . . Harry Emerson Fosdick 11
Tell Me Doctor—No. 11 . . . Henry B. Safford, M.D. 31
Room in the Inn . . . Pearl S. Buck 34
Why Can't Our Mothers Breast-Feed? . . . Gladys Denny Shultz 42
Our Grandparents' Maxims . . . Judith Chase Churchill 50
There's a Man in the House . . . Harlan Miller 51
Baby's First Year . . . Photos by Wayne Miller 54
Our Own Young Marrieds . . . 58
How America Lives: Life in an Orphan Home Roger Butterfield 145

General Features

Our Readers Write Us . . . 5
Under-Cover Stuff . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
Health Emergency Volunteers . . . In Ogden, Utah . . . 23 Home Care . . . Margaret Hickey 23
Reference Library . . . 24
Making Marriage Work . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
From Me to Me With Love (The Sub-Deb) Edited by Maureen Daly 28
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town . . . 33
This is a Present-Pester . . . Munro Leaf 81
Diary of Domesticity . . . Gladys Taber 168
Ask Any Woman . . . Marcelene Cox 175
Nutrition—Still the Key to Good Teeth Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 188
Bringing Up Parents . . . Dr. Barbara Biber 192

Fashions and Beauty

To My Favorite Beauty . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 46
Dance Time . . . Wilhela Cushman 48
Separates in a Holiday Mood . . . Nora O'Leary 52

Food and Homemaking

Merry Christmas to All . . . Ann Batchelder 62
Line a Day . . . Ann Batchelder 64
Quick and Easys for Two . . . Louella G. Shouer 138
Conversation Piece . . . Ruth Mills Teague 162
No Place Like Home . . . 178

Architecture and Interior Decoration

Kenmore . . . Richard Pratt 44
At Home Anywhere . . . H. T. Williams 104

Poetry

The Wind . . . Jessamyn West 70
Still Night . . . William Stafford 83
Image . . . Dan G. Hoffman 91
Winter: Maternal Version . . . Marjorie Lederer Lee 98
Song . . . Elizabeth-Ellen Long 111
Winter Afternoon . . . Elizabeth Coatsworth 120
Third Birthday . . . Polly Toland 135
It's Better to be Sorry . . . Bianca Bradbury 158
The Tree in the Cloud . . . May Sarton 167
Winter Evening . . . Eleanor Alletta Chaffee 196

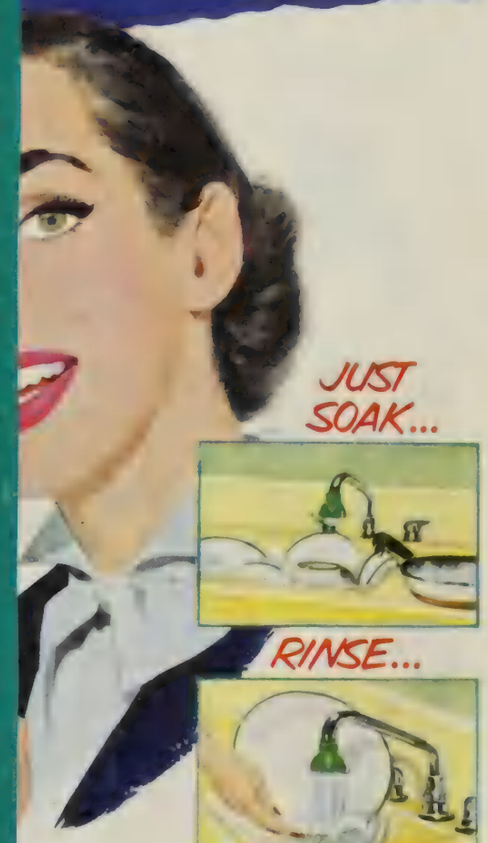
Cover Design by Al Parker

CHANGE OF ADDRESS Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.
Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1950 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.



The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U.S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 5 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U.S. payable in U.S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kobler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Washing DREFT
ISHES FOR YOU
VES WIPING_SAVES SCOURING

out wiping!
tion Does It!
simply let your for 2 minutes –
se – and you're e...even withnout scouring.

their magic on ng "floataway" ats away grease
rld. Even stub-couring. Yet! –

Dreft is safer, gentler for dainty silks, nylons, lovely new wool sweaters than the mildest soap flakes.

WASHES YOUR DISHES FOR YOU

Libby's IS THE PE FLAVOR PINEAPPLE

ALL IN FAVOR C

say

Easy dessert with tropical tang! Serve cubed sp Libby's crispy Crushed Pineapple, drained. U chunk and juice, it's peak flavor pineapple—lus easy, economical dish with mint and maraschi

HE Coater or Johnson's Glo-Coat)
e . . . . only 9¢
(In Canada 59¢)
h Johnson's Glo-Coat at regular price ng handle holds lightweight plastic head. Aluminum insert, with fluffy chenille pad, clicks out in a jiffy and pad detaches for washing. Same pad can be used again and again. The Glo-Coater is also handy for wiping up splashed water and spilled liquids, and for dusting down cobwebs.

no more, my lady!

Now you can stand up as you wax your floors with wonderful water-repellent Glo-Coat Waxing floors can be so easy-easy-easy!

Hurry to your dealer's today. He has two work-savers for you . . . Johnson's Self Polishing Glo-Coat and the sensational new Glo-Coater applier!

Now you're ready! Just pour a little Glo-Coat on the floor . . . and spread it, standing up, with your Glo-Coater.

That's all you do! In minutes . . . without a stroke of polishing . . . your floor is sparkling with a protective Glo-Coat shine!

Glo-Coat is water-repellent— one application lasts for weeks!

Cleaning a Glo-Coat shine is easy, too. Dirt doesn't penetrate into the hard bright wax. It stays on the surface where it can be quickly wiped up or swept away.

Remember, you don't wash away the wax when you swish over the floor with a dampened kitchen mop. Glo-Coat is positively water-repellent . . . it's guaranteed to stay on longer than other self polishing waxes . . . up to 4 times longer than some!

The Glo-Coater is now featured at your dealer'

Get yours today!

"Johnson's", "Glo-Coat" and "Glo-Coater" are trademarks of S. C. Johnson & Son, In © S. C. JOHNSON & SON, INC., Racine, Wis., 195

Our Readers Write us

A Tree She Remembers

Newman, Kansas

Dear Editors: I've known the JOURNAL for years, my mother having taken it when I was a child in the early 1900's. I can almost see the Christmas number, 1907, when I was seven. It was the one which had the adorable story about the little Christmas tree that was dissatisfied with its fragrant green and wanted to be silver, then green, and then crystal, as I recall, but in each case something drastic occurred which gave it cause to be glad to resume its green needles.

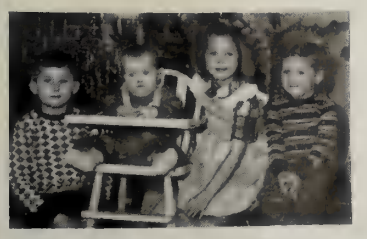
We took the JOURNAL through my teens. I enjoyed it then, and I enjoy it now.

Sincerely,
SARAH SHONER

Solution for Busy Mothers

Arvida, Quebec

Dear Editors: Eight years ago a miracle occurred in our household. I had a baby boy. I immediately took steps to do the Right Thing by my son. Everything was to work on schedule, and it certainly did. I began the Holy Rite of the Formula at ten-thirty every morning and not even the phone was allowed to interrupt. I boiled the bottles, sterilized the spoon for measuring the sugar, the can opener, the top of the evaporated milk, the measuring cup. I wonder now why I didn't sterilize the sterilizer.



When the baby was about eight months old we became aware of the fact that there was another baby coming. The second baby caused very little commotion in our home. Ronald was too young to be jealous, and too placid to bother me when I was caring for her. When Diane was about nine months old I discovered that children coming off the same assembly line aren't necessarily alike. She wasn't staying in any play pen, as Ronald had. She discovered that the world is a wonderful, exciting place and set forth to share her adventures with her older brother. Diane taught her two-year-old brother the facts of baby life and she's been doing it ever since. Ronald simply stared at his first Christmas tree; she climbed hers. All I can remember of the next two years is looking for the two children, trying to keep them clean, producing some nourishment for the family, and always picking up toys.

I did not enjoy these two years, and to be perfectly honest, I'm afraid I did not enjoy the children either. How could I get through the day and still care for two young runabout children? I didn't know the answer. I have the solution now, but few mothers will believe me. It is to have another baby.

Really, now, I was dismayed to think we were having a new baby. How could I find the time to care for it? To keep up a neat and tidy home? To care for the two older children? This, I said, is a physical impossibility. But as time went on, Nature took care of a lot of my problems. Physically I had to slow down my tempo, and my nervous tension subsided accordingly. As a matter of fact, I so enjoyed this low ebb I've stayed there ever since. This above all I have learned from rearing young children: if you want to do something very, very much, just do it and never wait until you have the time, as that will never come.

In no time, it seemed, we had still another little boy. Why do we have to wait until the birth of a fourth child to discover that after three, it doesn't matter how many one has? There is always a place for one more and more persons to love a new baby. Our last baby, Yvon, has had better care and love than all the rest put together. How? I don't know, unless it's because he's so dear to so many more hearts.

Sincerely,
ANGLYN B. MARCOTTE

They guarantee a merry Christmas.

When Babies Wore Clothes

Miami, Florida

Dear Editors: About fifty years ago my mother was planning my christening robe. Naturally, as I was her first-born, it had to be exactly right, and she turned to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL for advice. She gave her findings to a seamstress, and in due time the robe (I think it is fifty-four inches in length), with its accompanying slip, was finished.

Young lady with an old, old look.

On the twentieth of February, 1950, my namesake, Harriet Blackwell Lovelace, was born to Capt. and Mrs. Richard Meredith Lovelace in Tokyo. It must have been genuine inspiration that made me remember my christening robe and slip. I sent them to my great-niece. Here is her picture, taken at her christening.

Of course I might be prejudiced, but I think the robe, made according to specifications in that long-ago JOURNAL, is still lovely. As for the baby, don't get me started! Sincerely yours,

HARRIET GRAY BLACKWELL

Why Write to Editors?

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Dear Editors: I have read your magazine for quite a few years now and I always read Our Readers Write Us. I used to wonder what made people send in their suggestions, comments, appreciations and criticisms. I thought they must be people with hardly anything else to do, but now I have thoroughly changed my attitude. Some things in your magazine strike so deeply that one cannot resist letting other people know about it. Sincerely,

MARGIE BOWERS

California Has Cameras

Overton, Texas

Dear Editors: We Texans are getting mighty tired—m-i-g-h-t-y t-i-r-e-d—of Cal-

NEW Self-Washing DREFT WASHES DISHES FOR YOU

SAVES WASHING...SAVES WIPING...SAVES SCOURING

Dishes and glasses shine —even without wiping!

Amazing "FLOATAWAY" Action Does It! With new self-washing Dreft you simply let your dishes stand in warm Dreft suds for 2 minutes – give a swish of the cloth as you rinse – and you're through. Dishes and glasses shine...even without wiping.

Pots and pans soak clean without scouring. These self-washing suds also work their magic on pots and pans. Have an amazing "floataway" action that gets under grease – floats away grease – better than any soap in the world. Even stubborn grease rinses away without scouring. Yet! – self-washing Dreft leaves hands beautifully smooth and white because it's so mild, and your hands are in the water such a short time. Get self-washing Dreft today. Let Dreft wash the dishes for you.

NEW SELF WASHING dreft

Dreft is safer, gentler for dainty silks, nylons, lovely new wool sweaters than the mildest soap flakes.

PRACTICALLY WASHES YOUR DISHES FOR YOU

ifornia, or some other foreign country, supplying all the JOURNAL cover girls. We say, "What does California have that we haven't? Nothing! Not even pretty girls!"

Sincerely yours,
KEN and MAY KENDALL

Home Visits Teacher

Metropolis, Illinois

Dear Editors: I want to tell you how much I enjoy reading the series, How America Lives. It is just like a visit, and I do like to visit in homes of every type. Being a teacher, I read innumerable magazines each month, but the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL is my favorite. Sincerely,

EUNICE DICKERSON

Are American Women Free?

Los Angeles, California

Dear Editors: Are American women, with all their gadgets, as free as the women of many other countries which follow the so-called Old World pattern of life? The European and Latin woman either lives in a large family, along with her mother-in-law (and often her mother as well), plus other odd in-laws and sisters, or she has servants. This takes away from privacy, but it adds up to more free time for the wife. She is not at the beck and call of her children 24 hours a day. She does not have to shop, keep house, take care of her children, wash clothes, iron, and do a hundred other things while trying at all times to remain attractive to her husband. She is able to place that last item first. Nearly every middle-class family in these countries is able to afford at least one servant, and frequently two or three. She does not have to force a smile when she speaks of how "free" she is.

Sincerely yours,
JOHN A. CROW

Journal is Textbook

Naylor, Missouri

Dear Editors: Did you know the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL is going to school as a textbook? In our high school the junior and senior classes are required to take hygiene. I teach the girls and I have used all your articles, Tell Me Doctor. Two girls said, "I have learned more about myself in those articles than I ever could in a textbook." Thanks for your aid in teaching a required subject. Sincerely,

ELIZABETH M. DAVIS

So Through Seven Doors

Columbus, Ohio

Dear Editors: You and I and all the rest of us have only one life to live, as far as we know, so it is only common sense to want to make the best and most of it. How to do that is your personal problem, and mine, and no one else can solve it for us. We are so busy living that we say we don't have the time to formulate a philosophy of life. I took the time. This is my philosophy:

From each day tribute should be exacted. The easiest way to be sure that you get it is to go through "seven doors" every day. One gains entrance to the first door simply by laughing—a laugh that ripples clear from the heart from the pure joy of living. One enters the second door by some good deed. The third door gives at the pressure of some enjoyable sound—a symphony, the song of a bird, the voice of a friend. The fourth door opens if you eat something good. One gains entrance to the fifth door by experiencing some fragrant odor—a perfume, a rose or a newly cut lawn. One goes through the sixth door just by looking at something lovely—a sky, a fine picture, the lithe body of a fish gliding through the green plants. You pass over the threshold of the seventh door by thinking of some pleasant memory. These are my seven doors to happiness. They have made life richer for me. They can do as much for you. Sincerely,

E. NEAL SOUTHARD

Reason for Reading English

Santiago de Chile

Dear Editors: Mother never felt sorry she didn't know English until she discovered she couldn't read your magazine. Its beautiful pictures help make it up,

[Continued on Page 8]

Perfect Gravy every time... ANY TIME!

SMOOTH ... BROWN ... DELICIOUS!

Just heat and serve... over Beef Sandwiches!

• No more gravy failures! Make perfect gravy *every*time . . . *any*time . . . with Franco-American Beef Gravy. Made from fine, selected beef. Has that real pan-browned beef flavor. Already to serve—just open the can and heat.

Serve this rich brown gravy to your family . . . over beef sandwiches as shown above. Or, use it on most any meat sandwich, and with meat loaf and roasts. Wonderful in stews, too—or add it to your own gravy, when you find you haven't enough and want more as good as your own!

Good cooks everywhere praise Franco-American Beef Gravy. You will too! Get several cans soon!

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY READY TO SERVE!

Beatrice Cooke's Mealtime Adventures

FOR DECEMBER: Bohemian butter tarts, an unusual turkey stuffing, a quick Chow Mein dinner, and a new holiday dessert Holidays Ahead!

ey're drawing near—those festive days which end e year on such a glowing note. Christmas soon, then w Year's! Glorious days when your hearth—and le—draw friends and family close! And here, to add your holidays, is the recipe for one of my favorite eetmeats:

Bohemian Butter Tarts

lb. Meadow Gold Butter cup confectioners' sugar
Meadow Gold Egg yolks, well beaten cups all-purpose flour
¼ tsp. salt
1 tsp. vanilla extract
Jam or Jelly
4 Meadow Gold Egg whites
4 tbsp. granulated sugar

eam butter and add sugar; beat in egg yolks. Gradually d flour, salt and vanilla extract. Chill dough thoroughly. ape dough in balls ¾ inch in diameter, place on lightly eased cooky sheet. Press dent in center of each ball and l with a half teaspoonful of jam or jelly. Chill for 15 minutes. ke in a moderate oven (375°) for 12 to 15 minutes. Meanile, beat egg whites to stiff foam, add sugar gradually, ating to a stiff meringue. Remove tarts from oven and duce temperature to 350°. Using a cooky press or pastry bag, ge tarts with the meringue, then replace them in the oven til meringue is browned, about 10 minutes. Makes 60 tarts.

nce butter is so important to the success of these arvelous cookies, I do hope you'll be sure to use EADOW GOLD. For I've seen it churned at Beatrice Foods Co. plants—in rooms as spotless as your own kitchen. I've seen it tested (did you know that 17 tests are regularly made on MEADOW GOLD from the fresh cream to the finished butter?) And I've watched it being foil wrapped in rooms so clean even the air is filtered. So I know—and you will discover—that nowhere on earth can you buy a purer, finer, more delicious butter than MEADOW GOLD!

Simplest dinner you ever served!

I'm a great one for investigating packaged dinners—they're so handy when it suddenly turns out to be later than you think. And by far the best I've ever found is LA CHOY CHOW MEIN DINNER. Do try it! Serves two to four people with a savory, truly home-made-tasting Chow Mein—Beef, Chicken, or Meatless as you prefer. Gives you a can of delicious Chow Mein, a can of crisp Chow Mein Noodles, and an ample bottle of Soy Sauce—all in one carton, ready to heat and serve. You'll thoroughly approve the flavor and quality. And you'll find the price a well-worthwhile economy!

FREE BOOK of 24 unusual Chinese Recipes (like Yet-Ca-Mein, Pagoda Salad, Lobster Cantonese!) Write Dept. J-17, LaChoy Food Products Division, Beatrice Foods Co., Archbold, Ohio.

Would you wash each dish 27 minutes?

That's carrying cleanliness pretty far! But that's how long your Meadow Gold Dairy washes and sterilizes every MEADOW GOLD MILK bottle! And I'll bet you didn't know that it's standard practice at Meadow Gold Dairies to take pipes and equipment apart and steam-sterilize them at the end of each day's work. That's like taking your stove apart to clean it at the end of a day's meal-making! I like to think about these extra measures of care and cleanliness when I buy a bottle of MEADOW GOLD MILK. To me they're a guarantee that it's always the purest, sweetest bottle of milk my money can buy. I know you'll like MEADOW GOLD—for serving "as is" or for making a grand turkey stuffing like this:

Meadow Gold Mushroom Stuffing

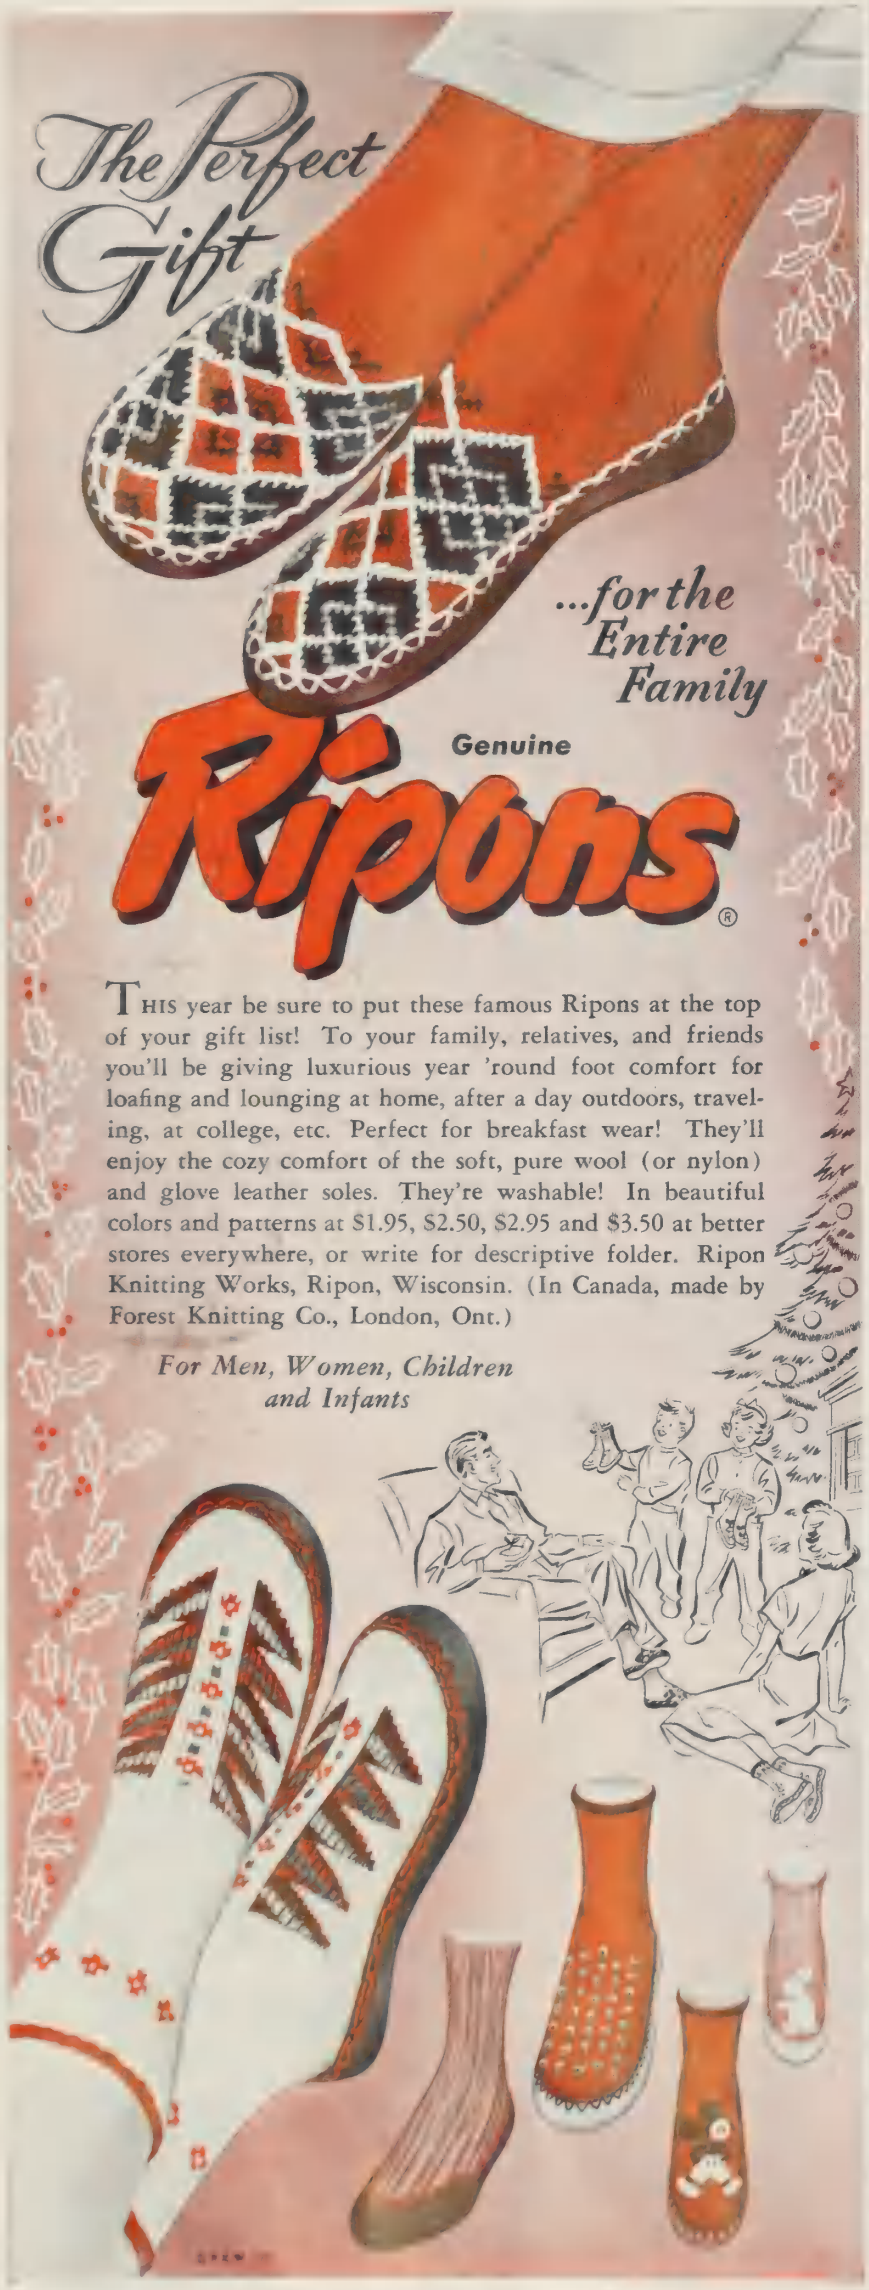
2 cups sliced mushrooms (fresh or canned)
2 medium onions, finely chopped
6 tbsp. Meadow Gold Butter
12 cups toasted bread cubes
2 cups chopped celery
1 tsp. thyme
1 tsp. marjoram
2 tbsp. chopped parsley
½ cup melted Meadow Gold Butter
2 tsp. salt
½ tsp. pepper
3 cups Meadow Gold Homogenized Milk, scalded

Cook the mushrooms and onions in butter until soft but not brown. Add the remaining ingredients; combine lightly. Makes enough stuffing for a 15-pound turkey.

Do try MEADOW GOLD MILK—and MEADOW GOLD BUTTERMILK and CHOCOLATE MILK, too. They're all exceptionally fine. And you may buy them in throw-away paper cartons or in glass bottles protected by sanitary Silver Seal tops.

A new dessert for your Holiday entertaining

This is the season for surprises. And here's one I've fallen in love with—the season's very newest, and most exciting, ice cream dessert creation! Let me introduce the marvelous new ready-to-serve MEADOW GOLD CAKE A LA MODE! Really, here's a dessert that will make a sparkling impression at your most festive party. Each dessert is a wonderfully delicious individual ice cream "shortcake", with a generous mound of creamy-rich MEADOW GOLD ICE CREAM on a tender, feather-light gold cake. Sprinkled with pecans. And topped with a bright maraschino cherry for a note of holiday color! Served just as they are, these cakes are a delight to everyone. And they're grand for making individual Baked Alaskas, too. (Just top generously with a meringue and brown 3 minutes in a very hot—450°—oven.) You'll find MEADOW GOLD CAKE A LA MODE, packaged four cakes in a box, wherever you buy MEADOW GOLD ICE CREAM. And I do hope you'll try this delightful new Beatrice specialty . . . right away!



Get my new FREE folder of dessert recipes—Now!

Do send today—for one of the handiest collections of unusual dessert recipes you've ever seen! It's my very latest folder of exciting ice cream desserts—Ribbon Cake, Baked Alaska, Peach Sunburst, Double Strawberry Shortcake—15 in all. Yours free. Just write to me, care of Beatrice Foods Co., Dept. BC-1, 120 S. LaSalle St., Chicago 3, Illinois.

Remember to send for my newest free recipe folder of 15 unusual ice cream desserts.

© 1950, Beatrice Foods Co.

THIS year be sure to put these famous Ripons at the top of your gift list! To your family, relatives, and friends you'll be giving luxurious year 'round foot comfort for loafing and lounging at home, after a day outdoors, traveling, at college, etc. Perfect for breakfast wear! They'll enjoy the cozy comfort of the soft, pure wool (or nylon) and glove leather soles. They're washable! In beautiful colors and patterns at $1.95, $2.50, $2.95 and $3.50 at better stores everywhere, or write for descriptive folder. Ripon Knitting Works, Ripon, Wisconsin. (In Canada, made by Forest Knitting Co., London, Ont.)

For Men, Women, Children and Infants

(Continued from Page 6)

and we are planning to remodel our old uncomfortable kitchen according to your advice. I hope it comes out all right, for we haven't decided which one we like best. It will have to be all in one. I believe How America Lives and other features we find in the JOURNAL help us to understand the United States better. Although I was born in Europe, I have learned to love America and its people as much as my own country and people.

Sincerely,
M. MARTINEZ

Club for Fat People

Jackson Heights, New York

Dear Editors: If the group-therapy idea of Alcoholics Anonymous works for alcohol addicts, mightn't a similar group work for food addicts? I know Overweights Anonymous sounds silly. In fact, the whole idea of food as an opiate strikes most people as either a joke (which it most certainly isn't) or simply an excuse for lack of will power.

Those of us who are compulsive eaters haven't any "will power" as far as food is concerned. That's exactly what's wrong with us. Perhaps if we help ourselves as a group we can bolster up our sagging will power.

Sincerely,
JEANNE M. KATZ

Love Letter

Wendell, Idaho

Dear Ed: Give us more articles on world affairs in the JOURNAL! Women's magazines are the best method to awaken the interest of women in world affairs. As for the JOURNAL, I'll love, read and subscribe, through criticisms and praise, for better or worse, until death do us part.

Sincerely,
MRS. CLAIR KING

Other Half Likes Hair Long

Djakarta, Indonesia

Dear Editors: We Indonesian girls wear our hair long. Mine is over three feet long and I have one friend whose hair comes halfway down to her calves. To us a woman without beautiful hair is not even to be considered beautiful, and a woman with short hair is not even a woman.

I am really horrified by the almost bald heads of your models. Could you—oh, please!—find a model with long hair, and let her show us what can be done with it and how it is done? Do you realize that most of the world's women wear their hair long?

Yours,
R. SOEMIPARTI

In the Eyes of God

San Fernando, California

Dear Editors: While the pietists, bigots and casuists are dipping their pens deeply to censure you for daring to print His Eye is on the Sparrow, may I dip my pen to thank you for such a story. Some will not see the magnificence of Ethel's character but will see only the sordidness of her early life. Her faith has made her whole, but evidently from the beginning her soul was majestic.

Sincerely,
LAURA A. WHITBECK

Not many readers, eight to be exact, criticized us for publishing Ethel Waters' story. Thousands cheered. ED.

Suits Her, Suits Him

Nalspruit, Transvaal

Dear Editors: Besides agreeing with JOURNAL policies and admiring its technical excellence, I love being on first-name terms with all of you. There are all the Diary of Domesticity chapters to appreciate—I save them for a special mood. Ann Batchelder's luscious tables, Gladys Taber's kitchens and the lifelike reporting of How America Lives have a special appeal to a reader who hasn't seen the U. S. since early 1940. I read Conversation Piece with joy, although ingredients above the flour-sugar-eggs level are not available here. My husband claims he chose me according to advice from the Making Marriage Work page.

Yours sincerely,
MRS. H. T. KRIEL

After 25 BEWARE of Dry Skin

After 25 every woman ought to use her mirror with a more critical eye.

From 25 on, the natural oil that keeps skin soft and pliant, starts decreasing. Before 40, skin may lose as much as 20% of its own softening oil.

But you can help offset this drying out—by giving your skin an oil especially suited to its needs. You can use a dry skin cream that is extra rich in lanolin, which is very like the oil of the skin itself—this special cream is Pond's Dry Skin Cream.

See its effects on your skin. Work it in thoroughly for night softening. Use it lightly for a smooth look under make-up. The rich cream brings skin a fresher, younger softness immediately.

By your Nose and Mouth—"dry skin" tenseness and "down-lines" can harden your expression.

To Help Soften "Knuckle in" Pond's Dry Skin Cream. Use knuckles of first fingers to knead this lanolin-rich cream firmly—out and up from nostrils and mouth. See that dry look soften.

On your Cheeks—you often notice dryness first . . . little flaky "dry skin" patches can spoil your make-up.

To Correct—Work in plenty of Pond's Dry Skin Cream nightly. Swirl it from chinline up in front of ears. This lanolin-rich cream is homogenized to soak in better. You can feel its softening help immediately.

. . . . .

3 features: These 3 features make Pond's Dry Skin Cream so effective: 1. It is rich in lanolin, very like the skin's own oil. 2. It is homogenized to soak in better. 3. It has a softening emulsifier. 89¢, 49¢, 29¢—Trial size 10¢ (plus tax). Get your jar—today!

PRINCESS PHILIPPE DE BOURBON says, "Pond's Dry Skin Cream is a perfect cream to use—rich, soft, smooth."

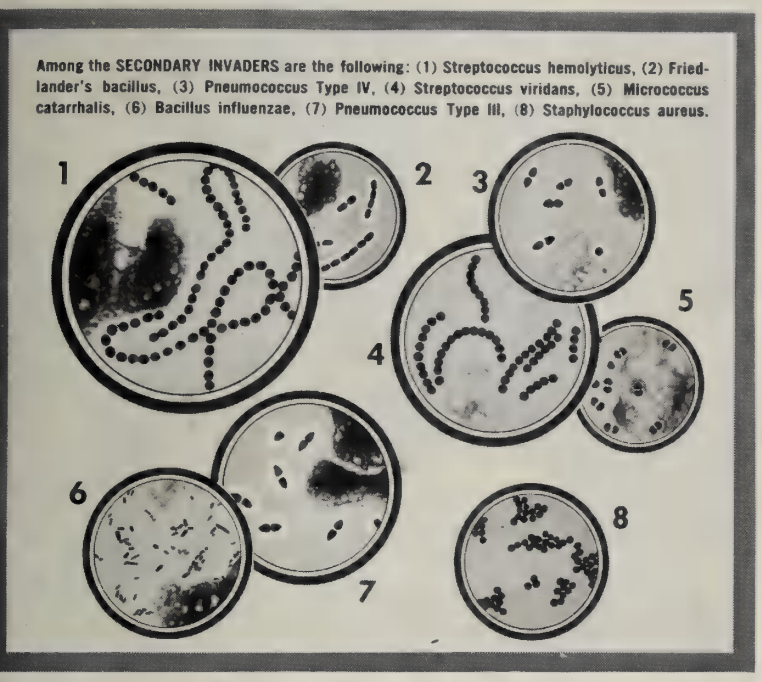
Start this truly remarkable correction of Dry Skin today!



SUDDEN CHILL? . . .

Sudden changes of temperature, like wet feet, cold feet, and drafts, may reduce body resistance so that threatening germs in the throat can make real trouble.

YOU START SNEEZING . . .

That sneeze or cough is usually a hint that germs are active, a cold may be on its way, and that you'd better do something about it.

'HESE "BUGS" MAY INVADE THROAT . . .

hese "bugs" in throat go into action . . . They are alled Secondary Invaders . . . can attack tissue nd cause much of the misery associated with colds, ay numerous authorities.

Gargle

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC—QUICK!—for Colds and Sore Throat

a safe, direct way with no dangerous side-effects

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC, gargled early and often, may entirely head off a cold, or sore throat due to a cold—or lessen its severity, once started.

It has been doing that year after year. Careful tests made over a twelve-year period, showed that there were fewer colds and sore throats, and generally milder ones, for those who gargled Listerine Antiseptic twice a day than for those who did not gargle. That is understandable.

Kills Secondary Invaders

Listerine Antiseptic reaches way back on throat surfaces to kill, by millions, the threatening germs doctors call Secondary Invaders . . . the ones responsible for most of a cold's misery. It attacks them before they attack you . . . halts mass invasion of the tissue.

Tests showed germ reductions ranging up to 96.7% even fifteen minutes after the Listerine Antiseptic gargle, and up to 80% one hour after.

So, whatever else you do, at the first sign of a sniffle, or cough, or a scratchy throat, start with the Listerine Antiseptic gargle. You may spare yourself an unpleasant siege of trouble.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

Vitality—radiance—zest-for-life go hand-in-hand to make you a lovelier and more glamorous woman.

Yes! Your hair can look "Radiantly Alive" Softer, Smoother...Younger-looking!

Prell leaves hair so Sparkling
. . . so "RADIANTLY ALIVE"

Prell is better than cream shampoos, better than soap shampoos . . . in fact—leaves your hair more sparklingly radiant than either, in hushed water! Yes, after Prell, hair looks "radiantly alive," because Prell's marvelous cleansing ingredients leave free rinsing action, leaves no dulling film.

Prell leaves hair so much Younger-Lookin
. . . so "RADIANTLY ALIV

Your hair has "body" and "spring" after a Prell shampoo—it's easier to manage, to set, to curl. And it's more vibrantly youthful-looking—softer, smoother—with all its full, rich, natural color and radiance simply shining for the world to see. After just one Prell shampoo you'll be thrilled with the lovely "RADIANTLY ALIVE" look even dull, lifeless-looking hair can have. Try this amazing, different Procter & Gamble shampoo today and see

Created by Procter & Gamble

DIFFERENT! Emerald-clear for that "Radiantly Alive" look!

Vitality is Mightier Than Size

By HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

Millions of years ago, turbulence reigned on this planet—earthquakes, volcanoes, floods. Along the huge ocean's edge was protoplasm, microscopic, invisible, feeble, quiet, vital; and, had we been there, we would have wagered everything we had on the victory of volcanoes, not of protoplasm. That had no credible chance against the earth's vast violence. Yet see what God did with it at last! Life, spirit, art, music, prophets, martyrs, scientists and saints! The utterly unforeseeable, the unimaginable did happen. Vitality is mightier than size.

Vital persons, ideas, movements always command the future. The lump may be huge but, in the end, the leaven decides the issue. Size, noise, violence never have the last word.

The dull, sodden mass of man's thinking confronts a single person, unknown, unrecognized, but vital. Men deride his truth and fight against it. The dough says it will have none of the leaven, but at last Galileo, Darwin, Pasteur win.

Empires crumble and dictators perish, overpassed and damned in history, while repeatedly the incredible miracle happens:

The head which once was crowned with thorns is crowned with glory now.

Ideas are born small, inconspicuous, negligible and lo! they turn out to be the most momentous events of the era, until Victor Hugo's words catch fire: "Nothing in this world is so powerful as an idea whose time has come."

One man, seeing that truth, took a notch in his belt, and went out to face the world refusing to be bulldozed by its size, noise and violence. As protoplasm outlasts a planet's colossal upheavals, so amid the world's chaos today are living ideas, movements, persons, whose issue is mankind's peace and brotherhood, and, as there is a God in heaven, our children's children will someday say again, "Vitality is mightier than size."

THE END

Community Begins at Home

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

Some weeks ago an interesting news story appeared in a New York newspaper. In Camden County, New Jersey, a meeting was called of civic, educational and social-welfare leaders, who read reports and discussed "problems and needs of youth." According to the reporter, these professionals talked in somewhat pedantic language, filled with statistics, and flavored with "trends" and "tendencies." After some hours of this, five teen-age high-school students took over, without prepared manuscripts, to tell their elders how they saw their wants and needs. And a blue-eyed teen-ager walked away with the meeting, as she talked with utter simplicity to the educators and civic leaders.

I was greatly struck by one thing she said:

"We want to lead our own lives, but we also want to take part in the family discussions, share in the budget planning, have it explained why we can't afford this and that. We want to be considered old enough to share in some of the secrets of the family."

The girl's words took me back to my own youth, in a minister's parsonage, and afterward in the home of an aunt. Didn't all youngsters in those days have this want, that Betty Boeger expressed, fulfilled? It seems to me, on recollection, that all my friends knew exactly what the family income was, how it was expended, and what the family needs were.

My own home was a cheerful one, but on my father's average salary of $1000 a year plus a house and coal, there were precious few luxuries, though, of course, the purchasing power of a dollar was several times what it is today. But every one of us knew what contribution each had to make, and what sacrifice too. I clearly remember from early childhood my mother's writing desk—a remarkable piece of furniture installed by a parsonage committee, of golden oak much ornamented with curlicues and brass ornaments, with an oval mirror in the midst of a "whatnot" above it, and a chest of drawers below the drop-down lid. In the back of the desk part there were the usual pigeonholes—in each of which was an envelope or two. These were labeled: Food, Clothing, Utilities, Savings, Refurnishing, Education, Pocket Money, Tithe. Every month my father's salary was distributed into these eight envelopes, and often I saw my mother's brow pucker and heard her sigh and murmur to me, "This week I'll just have to take something

Football's in full swing—and so are these future gridiron-greats! They'll have All-American appetites when they get home, so give 'em their favorite—real, genuine Minute Tapioca dessert. It's nourishing and they love it!! Serve them this

Taste-treat

Quick to prepare...wonderful to eat...made the real Minute Tapioca way!

CHOCOLATE DREAM CREAM

1 recipe Minute Tapioca Cream
1 square Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate

Prepare Minute Tapioca Cream according to package directions, adding 1 square Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate to egg-yolk mixture before cooking. Cool pudding as directed. Garnish with whipped cream and pecan halves. Makes 4 or 5 servings of honest-to-goodness lusciousness—smooth, creamy, real tapioca. Budding athletes love it, and so do their dads (what a thrill to watch your family gobble a healthful milk-and-eggs dish . . . and come back for more!). And you'll applaud its quickness and easiness, as well as its thrift. For "country-kitchen" goodness no ready-made dessert can match, get real, genuine Minute Tapioca today!

REAL TAPIOCA! MINUTE BRAND TAPIOCA

FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS!

FREE! Wonderful New Recipe Book! Over 50 recipes for delicious Minute Tapioca dishes—creamy desserts, cookies, and candies that make us over, and FREE one-cent cards. Get your FREE copy—send your name and address to Minute Tapioca, Box 871, New York 46, N.Y.

Offer expires May 1, 1951. Good only in U.S.A.

A product of General Foods

out of Education" (a tiny sum deposited against the children's future) "for shoes for your brother." I think, but I do not know, that nothing was ever taken out of the eighth that was for charity.

That we lived, on the whole, a life that in those days was called "refined" was possible only through the mutual labor of the whole family. The smallest child had duties: the girls to set the table (and set it properly), to make their own beds and their brother's, and wash the supper dishes and, on Saturdays, clean and polish the silver; the boy to clean the family's shoes, mow the lawn, and turn the ice-cream freezer when we had that special treat. All the female garments were made in the house, the yard goods shopped for carefully, with an eye peeled for desirable remnants. I made the first dress for myself when I was fifteen. I wanted a new dress for a party, and the only chance to get it was to make it myself—out of 50 cents' worth of dotted Swiss. (Later, when I went to college, the knowledge of sewing stood me well. I made much of my pocket money whipping up last-minute dresses for my sorority sisters.)

We never could have eaten as well as we did had my father not been a passionate gardener. All the children helped with the weeding. As the vegetables and fruits ripened, all of us were engaged for two or three hours a day, shelling peas, scraping corn, cutting green and wax beans, hulling strawberries, washing tomatoes, and boiling sirups for sauces and jellies.

And if we usually left the parsonages of our somewhat transient habitation more comely than we found them, it was because we early learned to calcimine ugly wallpapers and refinish shabby woodwork with our own hands.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

—MATTHEW 22:37–40.

In a family of such intimate labor and mutual aid, budget secrets were impossible. We knew that father had to wear his threadbare overcoat another winter because the youngest child had had a bad illness and there were doctor bills. We knew that if we wanted ice cream, we had to skim the cream for it off the milk—very rich milk, too, from Farmer Heist, who knew nothing of "grading" by removing part of the cream. We knew that if we didn't process the fresh green vegetables, we would live over winter on potatoes, carrots, beets and parsnips. We knew that the rich birthday cakes meant no eggs for next day's breakfast, and applesauce for dessert when the cake was consumed.

Nobody "protected" us from knowledge of unhappy experience. When our favorite aunt died quite young, nobody told us she had gone on a long trip. We sobbed unconsolably, went to the funeral, repeatedly thereafter referred to her with love—and learned that we all die.

We all expected to go to college; it was taken for granted. But we also knew from the time we were little children that we should have to make good enough high-school grades to win scholarships, and that those who graduated first would have to help the younger.

In short, we were active members of a small and very affectionate community, in which we always had limited but adult responsibilities. I can't recall that anybody ever discussed "the problems of youth." And few people had ever heard of a "complex." In fact, I wonder whether "youth" is not a somewhat modern invention. We were children, in short dresses and loose hair, and then, along the way, our dresses got longer, we put our hair up, and we were "young women." Of course, in our teens, we had problems—the same problems that adolescents have today. But our parents observed them and helped us out; they didn't expect teachers to enlighten us on intimate matters; and we certainly beca adult-minded earlier than today's you for we had been "old-fashioned" childr which in the semantics of that generati did not mean "old fogy" but "respo sible." It was not any theory that made so. Families, then, lived in larger hou than they do today, even families of limit means. There were few modern conv iences in those homes. To live "graciously as it is now called, required much m effort. There were few commercial amu ments, even if we could have afforded the and we had to create them for ourselv out of such internal and external resour as we had. But, curiously, it seems to in retrospect that we had more "tim More time to read, walk, dream, constr toys for ourselves, perhaps because th was nothing else to "do"—no automobil except for the very well-to-do to ride in; radio to listen to; no television to wat and only an occasional "movie."

We, too, as we came to our middle tee "led our own lives," away from consta family disciplines. But they were ne quite so far away, or quite so much o own. Childhood, and its disciplines of ea to bed, obedience and no secrets, w longer; "youth," however, was mu shorter.

Perhaps because my generation led force of circumstance a more simple li with perhaps too early responsibilities, tended to spoil our own children, and a ficially to prolo their youth—son times to the point absurdity.

I remember so years ago a delegat of "youth" called me to solicit my terest and sympat for one or anoth "youth movement I can't remember t movement, perha because I was so e grossed and perplexed by the leader of t delegation. Upon my asking a direct que tion, he informed me he was twenty-six. couldn't suppress exclaiming, "The sa age at which Keats died, leaving volum of immortal poetry. How long is a pers a 'youth'?"

That, too, is changing. One is impress nowadays by the baby faces one sees great research laboratories, performi work of extraordinary skill. It would see that scientific interest peculiarly encourag precocity.

Yet, it seems to me, there is still t great an underrating of the adult capaciti of the young. Some time ago a young rel tive of mine, aged eleven, was ill in a scho infirmary, and I took him a book: L Misérables, by Victor Hugo. I was rep manded by the headmaster for offering t boy mental fodder "beyond his years What nonsense! The French classic is superb story, full of suspense, excitemer unforgettable characters, pathos, histor and the boy gobbled it up as voraciously I had done at the age of ten! Suppose t boy didn't understand all of it. I don understand all of Whitehead, or Russell, studies on Einstein when I read them for t first time at my age. But I understan enough to make me want to understan more, and the effort is part of that educ tion which continues for the curious min until the mind fails. We learn by attemp ing what is initially beyond our mean

Parents who "protect" their children t much simply stunt the growth of the minds and characters. And this ove protection is not particularly characterist of the rich. Some years ago, in my home i the country, I employed for the summer village girl aged sixteen, to help out. H tasks were light—making beds, tidyin rooms, helping to serve and to wash th dishes. Like the two other household em ployees, she was supposed to wash an iron her own clothes, for which she ha

(Continued on Page 186)

Get 1 superb flavor—in all 5 styles

There's not a flavor let-down in a single one of the five wonderful DEL MONTE styles.

Each is so deliciously tart-sweet, tempting, and golden as the tropic sun. Magnificent pineapple by anybody's standards!

Set your spoon to a dish of tender Chunks... put a spot of sun in a salad with gorgeous Sliced... try convenient Crushed in your favorite gelatin dessert... surprise the family with dainty Tidbits... or pour a glass of refreshing Juice. You'll find DEL MONTE Brand your best buy for value in pineapple, too!

TROPIC ISLANDS

¼ cup uncooked rice
1¼ cups DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice
Dash of salt
1½ tsps. unflavored gelatin
2 tbsps. cold water
6 tbsps. sugar
½ tsp. grated lemon peel
1 #2 can DEL MONTE Crushed Pineapple
½ cup whipping cream

Place first 3 ingredients in top of double boiler. Cover and steam over boiling water, stirring occasionally, about 1 hr. or till rice is done but not mushy, adding more pineapple juice if needed. Meanwhile, soften gelatin in cold water. Remove rice from heat. Stir in softened gelatin, sugar, lemon peel and ¼ cup of the crushed pineapple. Cool. Whip cream; add to gelatin mixture. Pour into individual molds; chill. Unmold; serve with remaining pineapple, chilled. Top with mint jelly, if desired. 4 to 6 servings.

Del Monte PINEAPPLE

—the brand that puts flavor first

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

BLACK STAR

Santa Claus once more holds court in department stores.

CHRISTMAS is coming and you can't miss it! In New York a Greenwich Village pet shop is showing Christmas stockings for dogs and cats; the Fire Department men are collecting toys, new and old, to give to poor children, and mending the broken ones in the firehouses; the wash is coming home from enterprising laundries done up in Christmas wrapping paper; and old and handicapped men of all creeds are applying to the Salvation Army for Santa Claus jobs. The Washington Times-Herald, which last year headlined its Christmas edition, "There is no bad news on Page 1 today," will have trouble this year filling the page.

Last year we saw a rendition of the Nativity, played by small children. "I am the Virgin Mary," the little girl began, holding the infant in her arms, "and this is the little baby Jesus, our first President."

The Christmas-tree capital of the world is already up to its ears. This is Eureka, Montana, a little town high up in the Rockies, numbering 912 souls, whose whole activity for the year is concentrated on the 150-and-more freight-car loads of trees that it sends to all the states in the Union. The cutters get around 20 cents a tree and earn upwards of $25 a day, which may be why they call the town Eureka.

The tallest Christmas tree on record was put up last year at Bellingham, in

(Continued on Page 16)

COLLIER'S

"I need one more Wise Man."

Betty Crocker Pineapple Festival Cake

- YOU DON'T CREAM SHORTENING
- YOU DON'T BEAT EGGS
- USE ONLY ONE BOWL
- MIX IN JUST FOUR MINUTES!

A Wonderful Holiday gift

SO SIMPLE—SO EASY—SO SURE

Say "I think you're wonderful," the best way of all . . . with a glamorous cake, made with your own two hands. Perfect for the Holidays.

This Betty Crocker Double-Quick Cake, topped by a touch of the tropics, is made with Softasilk Cake Flour, milled for cakes alone. Softasilk is the only flour to use for "special occasion" cakes like this—because Softasilk cakes are higher, finer, more delicate than cakes made with ordinary flour.

• • •

New Betty Crocker Picture Cook Book

• SHOWS YOU HOW! • SIMPLIFIED METHODS!

2161 tested Betty Crocker recipes. 449 pages with hundreds of pictures. At all book stores: Regular Case-Bound Edition $2.95; Deluxe Ring-Bound Edition $3.95.

Betty Crocker of General Mills

Betty Crocker Pineapple Festival Cake

(MAKE ONLY WITH SOFTASILK)

FOR SUCCESS—do these first:

1. Have ingredients room temperature (70° to 75°). In hot weather, use milk and eggs directly from refrigerator.
2. Preheat oven to 350° (moderate).
3. Grease generously and dust with flour 2 round layer pans, 8 x 1½-in.
4. Measure level for accuracy with standard measuring cups and spoons.
5. Sift SOFTASILK Cake Flour, then spoon lightly into cup and level off. Do not pack.

Sift together into bowl
- 2½ cups sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour
- 1½ cups sugar
- 3½ tsp. double-action baking powder
- ¾ tsp. salt

Add
- ¾ cup high grade shortening
- 1 cup liquid (half water, half milk)
- 1½ tsp. flavoring

Beat vigorously with spoon for 2 minutes by clock (about 150 strokes per minute). You may rest a moment when beating by hand; just count actual beating time or strokes. Or mix with electric mixer on medium speed (middle of dial) for 2 minutes. Scrape sides and bottom of bowl constantly.

Add . . . . ½ cup unbeaten egg whites (4)

Continue beating 2 more minutes, scraping bowl constantly.

Fold in . . ⅔ cup cut-up shredded coconut

Pour batter into prepared pans. (Batter may appear curdled.) Bake 25 to 30 minutes in moderate oven (350°). When cake is cool, frost with Creamy Pineapple Icing.

*Such as Crisco, Spry, Swift'ning or Snowdrift.

CREAMY PINEAPPLE ICING—Cream together thoroughly 2 tbsp. high grade shortening, 1 tbsp. butter, ¼ tsp. salt and ½ cup sifted confectioners' sugar. Add alternately 2½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar and ½ cup drained crushed pineapple. Beat until creamy. Tint the icing with just a few drops of yellow food coloring.

If you live at an altitude over 2,000 feet, write Betty Crocker, General Mills, Minneapolis 1, Minnesota, for recipe adjustments. Specify recipe wanted.

The Secret of this Wonderful Cake is Softasilk

So Good IT'S BETTY CROCKER'S ANGEL FOOD CAKE FLOUR

General Mills

Give the Quality Food Mixer
HAMILTON BEACH ...it's EASIEST to USE!

PYREX MIXING BOWLS! Mix, bake, serve, and store in the same bowl! Less dishwashing—and how she'll love you for that. Sanitary—Pyrex Ware can be scalded. Compare!

EASIEST PORTABILITY

New, lighter beater unit glides off stand for use at a table, at the range—anywhere. No triggers, catches, or latches. A one-hand wonder that saves her time. Compare!

EASIEST OPERATION

The hand that holds the mixer sets the speed. Leaves her other hand free to hold a pan or add ingredients. Full power at all speeds. A wonderful work-saver. Compare!

EASIEST SPEED CONTROL

MIXGUIDE puts 10 tested speeds right under her thumb, right under her eye—magnified for flash reading. Only Hamilton Beach has such easy speed control. Compare!

$35.25

($35.90 Denver—West.) Includes two Pyrex bowls and extra single beater.

BOWLS NOW PYREX!

JUICE EXTRACTOR $4.25

($4.35 Denver and West.)

NEW POWER UNIT!

For use with meat grinder and slicer-shredder. Fits every Hamilton Beach made since 1932. Easy to attach, remove, clean, and store.

$5.00 ($5.25 Denver and West.)

EASIEST JUICING

Juice, strained free of seeds and coarse pulp, flows directly into serving glass. Nothing extra to wash. Juice extractor lifts out for easy cleaning. Rustless. Compare!

EASIEST BOWL CONTROL

Shifts ever-turning Pyrex bowl while beaters revolve. Gives even, thorough mixing every time, without stopping the motor or touching the beaters. Compare!

GIVE TIME-TESTED HAMILTON BEACH QUALITY!

Compare feature for feature and you'll know why this mixer is easiest to use—why this is the Christmas gift she's hoping for. Also see these new work-saving attachments—meat grinder, slicer-shredder, coffee grinder, pea huller and bean slicer. Hamilton Beach Co., Div. of Scovill Mfg. Co., Racine, Wis.

New HAMILTON BEACH Mixette

BEAT, MIX, MASH, WHIP in any bowl or pan.
MIXES EVERYTHING. Quality Hamilton Beach motor has full power.
THUMB ADJUSTS SPEED. Other hand holds pan or adds ingredients.
HANGS ON WALL or fits in drawer—bracket furnished.
BEATERS SNAP IN for easy snap out for cleaning.

$17.75 IN GIFT BOX

($18.25 Denver and West.) Includes bracket and screws for wall mounting.

Made by the makers of top-value Hamilton Beach Vacuum Cleaners

(Continued from Page 14)

Washington State—a 153-foot Douglas fir. Duluth, Minnesota, on the other hand, sent forth a million or more little trees—the tops of useless stunted bog spruce.

The precursors of our Christmas trees—like so many Christmas customs—go back to pagan days. Fir branches were used to deck the houses for the goddess Hertha, protectress of the home, who, like Santa Claus, descended in the smoke of burning boughs to her altar stones. Because the church fathers disapproved of heathen ways, the Christian use of the Christmas tree dates only from the sixteenth century, and it took German Prince Albert to introduce the Tannenbaum to Queen Victoria and England.

The mistletoe has some connection with the magic oak of the Celtic lands. The roast pig with the apple in its mouth is related to the pig offered to the god Frey to induce the fertility of the coming year. The lights on the tree may stem from the Jewish Hanukkah (Feast of the Lights, which occurs at this season), and it is heart-warming to think of all the houses in the Holy Land alight on the night that Jesus was born.

In Scandinavian countries the house is cleaned for Christmas and everything prepared for the spirits to inspect—which they do when the family leaves for church and the house is quiet. In Northern Sweden a special table is spread for them.

In a small village on a wind-swept island off the North Carolina coast, the residents still celebrate Christmas, we hear, on January 6th, the old Twelfth-night.

•

THE BARONS, by Charles Wertenbaker, is the chronicle of a large family of Delaware-Pennsylvania industrial aristocrats, manufacturers of explosives, who build up an enormous business dynasty. It is a lurid tale, built around a passionate love affair that defies convention and ends in tragedy. Guaranteed to hold its readers in a vise.

•

A BOOK OF CHILDREN'S LITERATURE we have mentioned before as a good Christmas gift to the family. Most of the stories in it are best read aloud.

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

". . . and the rabbit said: 'Wait for me!' . . . and the fox said: 'Wait for ME!' . . . and the muskrat said: 'Wait for ME!' . . . and the beaver said: 'Wait for ME!' . . . and the crow said . . ."

In fact, all stories—and certainly all poetry—gain enormously when read aloud. Think how much better ALICE IN WONDERLAND is in the spoken

(Continued on Page 18)

Chicken Livers 'n' Bacon

1 pound chicken livers
4 tablespoons French's Mustard
4 tablespoons minced olives
½ pound sliced bacon, cut in half

Wash the chicken livers. Spread with French's Mustard mixed with olives. Wrap each in a half slice of bacon and fasten with a toothpick. Bake in a hot oven (425°F.) for 10 to 15 minutes. Crisp the bacon under the broiler for another minute, if necessary. Yield: four to six portions.

with that special

French's flavor!

Chicken Livers 'n' Bacon. Different! Delicious—so easy to make! French's Mustard gives the intriguing flavor that makes these tasty morsels something really special.

FREE! New recipe book . . . "Dining Delights"
Send name, address to The R. T. French Company, 1638 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

SMOOTHER CREAMIER!

Largest selling prepared mustard in U. S. A.
(Also made in Canada)

Dazzle 'em with SWIFT'NING'S* MARIGOLD CAKE in this Gala Candle Ring!

Ring with 8 holders and candles

75¢ with paper disc from inside a can of Swift'ning

Here's a new, exciting way to light up your party cakes . . . a Gala Candle Ring that only Swift'ning can offer you at this very special price.

Glowingly beautiful, it's practical, too. Prevents wax dripping on cake or table linen, eliminates holes in frosting.

The ring . . . a flexible band of gleaming metal . . . fits around your cake, can be adjusted from 7″ to 15″ diameter and holds from 1 to 70 candles. Removable holders attach to ring, will take birthday candles of both sizes, also tall tapers. Extra holders are available.

Lighted this dramatic, new way . . . and baked with wonderful Swift'ning, your party cakes will be "the talk of the town". For Swift'ning, with its own special quick-mix ingredient, was specially developed to give you heavenly light, luscious cakes.

You'll love your Swift'ning pies and fried foods, too. No other all-purpose shortening makes such flaky pies as Swift'ning . . . or is more digestible! Get Swift'ning today and send for your Gala Candle Ring while this great bargain lasts.

NEW! DRAMATIC! Regular $1.85 Value!

So many uses
For birthdays and special occasions. As gifts—Christmas and throughout the year.

Around holiday decorations!

Flexible—ring fits all shapes!

With tall tapers and flowers!

For place cards . . . individual candles! (Extra holders available.)

MARTHA LOGAN'S QUICK-MIX Marigold Cake

Preparation: Have all ingredients at room temperature. Preheat oven to 375° F. Line bottoms of two 9″ or three 8″ pans with two layers of waxed paper.

Ingredients: (Level measurements)

½ cup Swift'ning
2¼ cups sifted cake flour
1¾ cups sugar
1½ tsp. soda
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. vanilla
1 cup sour milk† or buttermilk
2 sq. chocolate, melted
2 eggs
½ cup sour milk† or buttermilk

Step 1: Place Swift'ning in bowl. Sift together flour, sugar, soda, and salt into bowl. Add vanilla and 1 c. sour milk. Beat 2 min. on med. speed of electric mixer, or by hand, using 150 strokes per min. Throughout mixing time keep batter scraped from sides and bottom of bowl with rubber scraper. Scrape bowl and beaters.

Step 2: Add chocolate, eggs and ½ c. sour milk. Beat for 2 additional min. on medium speed. Scrape bowl and beaters. Pour equal amounts of batter into cake pans. Bake 30 min. Cool on cake racks.

†To make 1½ c. sour milk place 1½ tbsp. vinegar in measuring cup and fill to ½ c. mark with sweet milk. Combine with 1 c. sweet milk.

To decorate: Make 7 min. icing, using 2¼ c. granulated sugar. Tint it cream or very pale yellow. Tint about 1 c. deep yellow. Spread pale yellow icing between layers, on top and sides. Allow to set. Finish top with deep yellow as shown.

MORE PARTY IDEAS COME WITH YOUR CANDLE RING!

Martha Logan's Recipe Folder with cakes for birthdays, anniversaries, children's parties and teas. Also many other clever ways to use the ring itself!

DIGESTIBLE...AND NUTRITIOUS, TOO!

HAVE YOU TRIED SWIFT'NING'S EXCITING NEW "77" MIX? You make it yourself, store it in the pantry, use as needed to make any of 77 super-delicious baked treats! Saves you time, work, money. Write for FREE booklet offered on back of Swift'ning can.

*Swift'ning is the trade-mark for Swift & Company's Shortening.

Good cooks are switching to Swift'ning!

CLIP THIS ORDER BLANK! SEND TODAY!

Swift'ning, P. O. Box 5935, Chicago 77, Ill.

Please send me.....Gala Candle Ring(s), each with Direction and Recipe Folder, @ 75¢ each. Enclosed are.....paper discs from inside can of Swift'ning Shortening (1 for each ring) and $.....in coins (or money order). (B)

Name _____

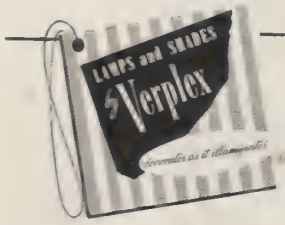
Address _____

City _____ Zone ____ State _____

This offer good only in U. S. A. and void in any state, or subdivision thereof, where prohibited, taxed or otherwise restricted. Offer expires March 31, 1951, or when supply is exhausted. Allow 2 weeks for delivery.

'suasive Modern

. . . beckons you!



LAMPS and SHADES

by Verplex

A surprising selection of occasional lamps affords a rare opportunity to browse where the persuasive modern influence permeates all things beautiful.

Under $25.00

AT LEADING DEPARTMENT STORES AND WHEREVER BETTER LAMPS AND SHADES ARE SOLD

THE Verplex COMPANY

at Essex, Connecticut

Excitingly Beautiful Curtains

(Continued from Page 16)

word, and THE WIND IN THE WILLOWS, and Hans Andersen and Kipling. Don't just give the children a book and call it a day. You can have so much more fun if you're in it too. And so can they.

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE INC.

"It's the only way I can get my kid to look up to me!"

When America was new—in the 1600's—the Old World couldn't hear enough about it. When sailors visited its shores, and adventurous businessmen, scientists and potential colonists began to dribble over in small numbers, they wrote down what they saw. In AMERICA BEGINS, by Richard M. Dorson, we now have a collection of these letters, diaries, tales of voyages, records of the flora and fauna, and strange accounts of witches and Indians—all written in the seventeenth century. For people with a history sense for their own past, this book will be a delight, and also for stay-at-homes who have the space and time and leisure to read and digest these quaint narratives of a faraway day.

•

FRITZ KREISLER, by Louis Lochner, is a fulsome biography which will be dear to the hearts of the thousands upon thousands who have been held spellbound by that greatest of all fiddlers, complete with photographs, lists of all his records, and a lifetime of tellable tales.

•

FASTER! FASTER! by Patrick Bair, is a symbolic shocker. An allegorical novel taking place on a train, the front cars of which are unbelievably luxurious, the rear ones, where the work is done, a shambles. Since the windows are misted over, the train is the world. It is only after the train has been wrecked, and most of the first-class passengers killed, that the workers get into the front cars—the boss workers, that is—and the circle starts again. This is oversimplification on our part. The novel is very dramatic, and even if its truths are obvious, they are nonetheless absorbing.

•

A HUSBAND FOR MAMA, by Louis Paul, is high comedy on the farcical side—full of laughs, but with underlying good sense. The improvident Gaines family pervades it. Everybody in town talks about the Gaineses. And believe me—before you're through, you yourself know everybody in town.

Unless you're very very conventional, you'll like the Gaineses, even down to little Lucy, who hopes to be a trapeze artist. They're first cousins to the You-Can't-Take-it-With-You because it is styled to remain in fashion . . .

(Continued on Page 21)

It's smart to buy ALVIN* STERLING

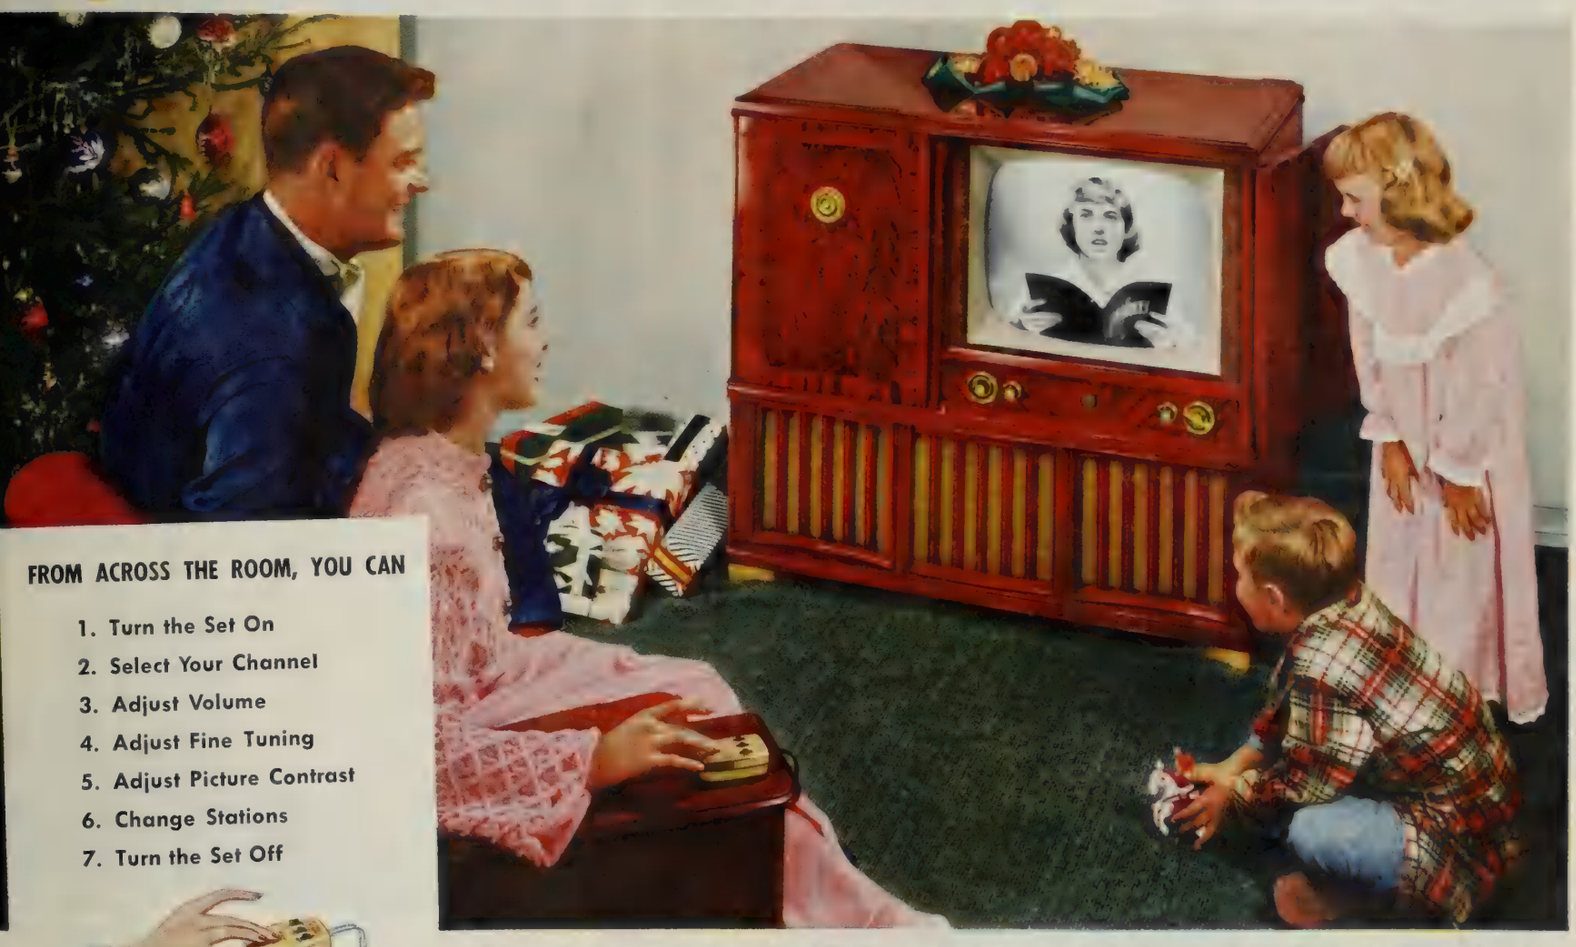
It is "solid" sterling silver through and through and constant use will only enhance its beauty.
Modestly priced for satisfaction and service, year after year, for a lifetime.

SEE IT . . BUY IT . . AT YOUR JEWELER'S
Write us for free illustrated price folders of these and other ALVIN patterns.

THE ALVIN SILVERSMITHS
Makers of Exclusive Silver Designs for over Sixty years
PROVIDENCE 7, RHODE ISLAND

*Trademarks

Give an Oxford Bible at Christmas



America's Gift Bible since 1675

That your boy or girl may draw more freely upon the world's greatest storehouse of wisdom and guidance, the Holy Bible, Oxford brings you the Pilgrim Edition. Authorized King James version, with 14 wonderful new helps to a fuller understanding of the Bible. Blue cloth; gold stamped. Large type; lightweight Bible paper. $4.50; also in French Morocco, $9. At your favorite bookseller's.

Just in time for Christmas

ANOTHER GREAT PHILCO FIRST... FULL REMOTE CONTROL TELEVISION!

FROM ACROSS THE ROOM, YOU CAN

1. Turn the Set On
2. Select Your Channel
3. Adjust Volume
4. Adjust Fine Tuning
5. Adjust Picture Contrast
6. Change Stations
7. Turn the Set Off

• COMPLETE REMOTE CONTROL AND BALANCED BEAM TELEVISION in this luxurious Philco Model 2176. Great 215 sq. in. true-focus picture on a 20 inch gray filter-face rectangular tube...with Philco's superlative No-Glare Optical System, Electronic Built-in Aerial, and sensational Custom-Duplex Chassis. Powerful, golden-toned AM-FM radio and Philco phonograph that plays all records automatically. The absolute ultimate in a combination!

NOW a giant 20 inch true-focus picture that you can control from across the room

ANOTHER unprecedented triumph in Philco engineering! Never before in any set has full and complete remote control been possible. But now Philco enables you to control your set completely—turn it on or off, adjust the picture—without rising from your easy chair!

Only Philco has it! And only Philco gives you Balanced Beam Television which balances the electron beam that "paints" the picture on the tube . . . locks it in positive focus over the entire picture area. Now you can enjoy thrillingly sharp, clear pictures . . . entirely free of blur or smear . . . the first true-focus picture in television history.

But these are only two of Philco's great advantages. The new 1951 Philcos offer you the sensational Philco Custom-Duplex Chassis which means vastly increased sensitivity, performance, and picture quality with remarkable freedom from "ghosts" and "snow," and other interference.

The new Philcos also have the famous Philco Electronic Built-in Aerial that outperforms all others by as much as 3 to 1.

Compare Philco point by point with any other set! Compare for picture quality . . . tone . . . design . . . value. Prove to yourself that Philco Balanced Beam Television tops them all!

• HUGE 20 INCH TELEVISION in distinguished mahogany console. 215 sq. in. true-focus picture, 20 inch gray rectangular tube. Model 2134, $429.95. Complete range of new Philco 1951 table models, consoles and combinations, 97 to 215 sq. in. pictures, 12½" to 20" tubes, in distinguished mahogany, walnut or blond decorator type cabinets from $169.95 to $750.00*.

*Tax and Warranty extra on all models. Prices slightly higher in South and West. Prices subject to change.

TUNE IN! Philco Television Playhouse, Sunday evenings, NBC-TV Network . . . Don McNeill's TV Club, Wednesday evenings, ABC-TV Network.

AND BEST OF ALL, A PHILCO

Four boxed corners hold sheet to mattres like a second skin. Fitted "tuck-under" prevents sheet from wrinkling.

FOR HER SHEET WRESTLER—GIVE MOTHER

Cribfast CONTOUR Sheets FOR CHRISTMAS won't wrinkle, can't pull out

CRIBFAST* SHEETS save work for busy mothers every day in the year! These amazing sheets are pull-proof, wrinkle-proof; they stay anchored to the mattress, keep rubber pads in place no matter how baby sleeps, crawls or pulls. Only Pacific makes Cribfast—the baby sheet that stays put.

Fitted corners "lock" the sheet on 'til mother takes it off. A deep tuck-under on all four sides holds the sheet completely wrinkle-free.

Sheet changing is a breeze—so is laundering and ironing's optional. Cribfast Sheets fit perfectly washing after washing because they're Sanforized. In super-soft percale (white only) or pastels in sturdy muslin: white, pink, blue, and maize, at leading baby departments.

You, too, can sleep like a baby! Play Santa to yourself with Contour* Sheets for your bed. Same as baby's in percale or extra-strength muslin. twin or double bed size. White only. Try your favorite store or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. K-12, 214 Church Street, New York 13, N. Y.

*TM Pacific Mills Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Cribfast Sheets cellowrapped in pairs, white, pink, blue or maize. About $2 each in combed percale, slightly less in muslin.

It's a PACIFIC sheet

BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS

'What's all the shootin' about Lastex? What is Lastex anyhow?"

"I know what Lastex is. It's an elastic yarn that makes things stretch so they can fit you proper."

"I know what Lastex does for me. It gives comfort and trim fit to my underwear, pajamas, swim trunks, socks, supporters..."

"And don't forget shoes. All my shoes, and even some of the new men's shoes are now elasticized for real walking comfort with

Lastex
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

...the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
1230 Avenue of the Americas • New York 20, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 18)

family, and the best-natured people in the world.

"For heaven's sake," murmured Mrs. Caswell, gazing after Halcyon Gaines. "That Gaines girl will say anything that comes into her head."

"Is you talkin' to me or somebody else?" inquired the Caswells' colored girl.

"I was speaking about Halcyon Gaines."

"If you astes me, Miz Caswell, them Gaines people is all nuts."

"I fail to remember asking you, Elsie."

"Tha's all right. I ain't anybody to wait fo' no invitation. My Cousin Susie work three days a week fo' Miz Harvey that live out in their neighborhood. Seems like she went ahead and won a hawg on a raffle ——"

"Who won a hog?"

"Them Gaineses. Stid o' sellin' it to the butcher, they roast it in a washtub in the back yard, then take it down and serve it to the prisoners in the town lockup. Nex' day they is over to the Harveys' astin' fo' a couple o' dozen aigs to tidy them over ontil Halcyon's payday. If'n that ain't nuts, you tell me!"

"I'd rather tell you to go in and get the beds swept under," said Mrs. Caswell. "How you do talk, Elsie."

"If Gawd hadn't wanted us to talk," declared Elsie primly, "He wouldn't of gave other people ears to hear with."

•

"A ballad depends upon oral transmission," says Evelyn Kendrick Wells, author of THE BALLAD TREE. "A ballad in print is a ballad already dying." Though this book is a serious study, it does contain sixty traditional ballads and their tunes, which should be a godsend to the guitarist in need of a repertoire, and to his family who have been listening to the same old chestnuts for years.

•

How the GI's are speaking Korean we haven't heard, but their Second-War French was wonderful! Joyeux

COLLIER'S

"Now that you've said in French, 'Do not unsaddle the horses, the innkeeper has been struck by lightning,' would you care to order in English?"

Noel was translated by the N. Y. boys as "Happy Sixth Avenue" (where the el had just been taken down); Mal de Mer was "Ma's sick"; Ile de France was "I'm sick of my friends," and Carte Blanche was "Take Blanche home."

■

Nero Wolfe is not so much our favorite detective, as Rex Stout is our favorite detective-story writer. We don't care for Nero Wolfe's orchids or personality, but our mouth does water over some of his gourmet dishes, and he sure has interesting cases. Besides, there is his Archie Goodwin, who outwatsons Doctor Watson for ideas. . . . If you missed last year's case, THE SECOND CONFESSION, you might still be able to pick it up. And this year's IN THE BEST FAMILIES is very exciting and funny.

Here's Wonderful Deodorant News!

New finer Mum more effective longer!

NOW CONTAINS AMAZING NEW INGREDIENT M-3—THAT PROTECTS AGAINST ODOR-CAUSING BACTERIA

New Protection! Let the magic of new Mum protect you—better, longer. For today's Mum, with wonder-working M-3, safely protects against bacteria that cause underarm perspiration odor. Mum never merely "masks" odor—simply doesn't give it a chance to start.

New Creaminess! Mum is softer, creamier than ever. As gentle as a beauty cream. Smooths on easily, doesn't cake. And Mum is non irritating to skin because it contains no harsh ingredients. Will not rot or discolor finest fabrics.

New Fragrance! Even Mum's new perfume is special—a delicate flower fragrance created for Mum alone. This delightful cream deodorant contains no water to dry out or decrease its efficiency. Economical—no shrinkage, no waste.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Mum's protection grows and GROWS! Thanks to its new ingredient, M-3, Mum not only stops growth of odor-causing bacteria—but keeps down future bacteria growth. You actually build up protection with regular exclusive use of new Mum!

Now at your cosmetic counter!

New MUM cream deodorant

■ PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

Beautiful Hair

B R E C

BRECK HAIRDRESS HELPS KEEP HAIR SOFT AND IN PI

Breck Hairdress, formerly called Trucene, will leave your hair soft and easy to arrange. It may be used daily without leaving any appearance of oiliness. Breck Hairdress also helps condition hair that has become harsh or dry, and is especially recommended for use after permanen Breck Hairdress may be applied directly to the diluted and applied as a cream rinse. Use Bre dress daily to keep your hair lustrous and easy to Breck Hairdress is available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold.

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHU
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CAN

HEALTH EMERGENCY VOLUNTEERS...

HOME CARE

By MARGARET HICKEY

PIONEER women accepted their responsibility to care for the sick, their own or their neighbor's, whenever the need arose. They had no pediatricians to attend a sick baby, no modern hospitals to rush to when disaster or sickness occurred. We may smile at many of their homemade remedies, but we can admire their fortitude in meeting the emergency, their skill in making the ill comfortable.

The knowledge of simple nursing techniques, once considered an integral part of every future housewife's training, has been too long neglected. Today's average homemaker knows little about coping with even minor illness. Epidemics may strike any community, and experience has shown that there are not always enough hospital rooms, nurses and doctors to go around.

People who are not dangerously ill are likely to feel more comfortable and secure in their own homes. Personal care, in a familiarly cheerful environment, may hasten recovery faster than hospitalization. Every large hospital must insist upon a certain amount of irksome routine. Yet the modern family often shies away from keeping its ill member at home because, lacking knowledge of nursing care, it fears the responsibility.

Training for Volunteers

Volunteers who train for home nursing will learn to protect the health of their communities. They will realize the importance of pure milk and water supply, sound sanitation and food regulations, the necessity for prevention and control of communicable diseases. Gen. George C. Marshall, speaking as president of the American National Red Cross, said. "I think it is important that young women be encouraged to take advantage of certain excellent training opportunities that the Red Cross offers, the better to prepare themselves as citizens. I am thinking of the extensive health programs in home nursing, first aid, food and nutrition. The position of women in the country is such that they are destined to take a large part in public affairs. Some preparation for the duty of citizenship, therefore, is an obligation for the young women of the nation."

Organizing home-nursing classes has proved to be an important volunteer activity. The Los Angeles Red Cross Nursing Department reports a growing demand from Girl Scouts and Camp Fire Girls as well as from local PTA's. Teachers say there is less absenteeism when teen-agers learn sound health practices which training in home nursing makes routine. Many women's clubs like the group in Ogden, Utah, have trained volunteers to meet any health emergency their communities might experience.

There is art as well as skill in nursing the sick. Sometimes the welfare of a patient is as much dependent upon the reassuring word, the cheerful smile, as upon the regularity of treatment prescribed. The family that has a home nurse, ready and unafraid to protect its members when sickness comes, has health insurance money can't buy. THE END

In Ogden, Utah

PETER, a husky towhead with a passion for football, was the first child in his block to get infantile paralysis last year. Riding to the hospital in an ambulance, he clung fiercely to his mother's hand. "It hurts something terrible, mom," he said, "so don't leave me, will you?" and his mother said she wouldn't. But the hospital had a rule: All polio patients must go into the isolation ward for two weeks. Peter said good-by to his mother in the hospital corridor, a desolate little figure trying to look brave on a big white stretcher.

"I just sat down in the hospital corridor and cried my eyes out," his mother said. "I have never been so frightened in my life. I thought there was nothing I could do but wait and worry. Thank God for a neighbor who got me back into that hospital where I could see Peter every day and help other children like him."

Peter has been home for a year now. He cannot walk without braces and crutches. He will never play football again. But his mother continues to work in the hospital with the Polio Emergency Volunteers whenever she's needed—"having seen what I've seen, I couldn't possibly stop."

Other Polio Emergency Volunteers (P. E. V.'s) in Ogden, Utah—Peter's home town—feel the same way. They have been working in Ogden since 1948, when a record sixty-six cases of polio were reported in the county, and St. Benedict's Hospital—equipped to handle thirty polio cases—was so swamped that the solarium was turned into a ward, and most of the heavy equipment had to be moved into the halls to make even more space available. Nurses were even more scarce—and of the few nurses available, many refused to go into the isolation ward at all for fear of carrying polio home to their own children.

Volunteers, many of whom had children of their own in the polio wards, begged doctors to let them help, were told, "You'd only get in our way." But as conditions became more and more (Continued on Page 140)

JOHN GERDTS

To little boys and girls away from home in a big strange hospital, a volunteer becomes a "second mommy." Utah has over 1200 Polio Emergency Volunteers.

STING POWDER $1

MIDNIGHT COLOGNE $1

MIDNIGHT BLUE ICE
STICK COLOGNE $1

MIDNIGHT LIPSTICK PERFUME COMBINATION $1

HT

r you a meeting by moonlight . . . that's Midnight! And with a touch of lilac . . . that's Midnight, too!

noon and Midnight

ALL PRICES PLUS TAX

Reference Library

Lovely hand-knits . . . so expensive to buy, but inexpensive to make.

2366 ●
LOW-NECKED SWEATER. 15c.
Tiny, full sleeves; ribbed pattern.
Worn over skirt.

● 2505
STRIPED PULL-OVER. 15c.
A two-color design,
short front opening.

2381 ●
AFTERNOON SWEATER. 15c.
Low neckline, push-up sleeves.
So smart with a velvet skirt.

● 2467
JACKET SWEATER. 15c.
Tiny collar, rounded pockets at hipline. Basket-weave stitch.

2480 ●
SLEEVELESS BLAZER. 15c.
Contrasting color accents edges.
Wear with or without blouse.

● 2492
PARTY SWEATER. 15c.
To knit in white and gold yarn;
add gold buttons and narrow gold belt.

2556 ●
CARDIGAN SWEATER. 15c.
Front edges and pockets bound in grosgrain.

● 2529
TRIANGLE SHAWL. 15c.
Afghan stitch to be done with afghan needle.

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name _____
(Please Print)

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____

State _____

Stockings so good they're signed with the label that won't wash off

Something new in Christmas stockings. Berkshire's fabulous 160s, frankly the most beautiful stockings you've ever seen. Sheer, sheer 15 denier, 60 gauge, with the look and feel of exquisite luxury . . . the stamina of greater snag-resistance, greater elasticity, longer wear.

You'll find all Berkshire stockings permanently identified with size, length and sheerness information to make additional purchases easier.

sheer... sheer Berkshire Stockings

Costume by Pauline Trigere
Stocking color illustrated is Powder Blend—a French Nude

MADE TO FIT YOU BY THE WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF FULL-FASHIONED STOCKINGS

Making Marriage Work

Marriage is the only 50-50 proposition in which the share of each partner is more than half. It is the overlapping of responsibilities that makes a marriage strong.

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

The Husband's Role

SHORTLY before the date set for his marriage, Bob came to see me. He explained that his parents were divorced when he was ten, and that his father, after a second marriage and divorce, had recently married a third time. In his own marriage, Bob was determined to achieve the happy home he had missed as a child.

"Can you tell me how not to have my marriage smash up like my father's?" he asked. "I want my wife to be happy, and I want to be happy. What can I do to be a good husband?"

Unlike some men, Bob recognized that no wife, however willing, can give her husband happiness in marriage unless he works for it too. In seeking to determine his particular responsibilities as a husband, Bob had already demonstrated a greater fitness for the role than some men ever achieve.

Together, Bob and I set up a list of minimum essentials, the responsibilities every wife has a right to expect her husband to assume, and which are the least he should attempt to fulfill.

- He must earn the living. Like any self-respecting young man, Bob took this obligation completely for granted. Yet in a realistic appraisal of a husband's total role, his job must be recognized as coming first, not only because of its importance but also because it occupies most of his waking hours, leaving only a narrow margin for other duties and pleasures. At best, only evenings and week ends are free; and a considerable share of these will be absorbed by work if, like Bob, he is anxious to get ahead.

- He must be household handy man. In most households, minor repairs are naturally assumed by the husband. He is called on to replace a washer in the leaking faucet, to tape a frayed lamp cord, to silence a squeaking door. He summons and supervises carpenter or plumber for repairs too specialized for him. Such tasks may be trifles in themselves, yet their neglect is quickly noted, and in total, they consume a sizable share of a man's time.

- He must be yardman and mechanic. Grass to cut in summer, snow to shovel in winter. The car to wash, screens to put up, clothesline to replace, trash to empty. Lawn mower to sharpen, bicycle to repair, motor to grease, spark plugs to clean. Man's work, and work these jobs are, even if he enjoys pottering.

These categories concern tangible tasks essential to the household's smooth operation. They take the major share of a man's spare time, yet they are only the preliminaries to the most demanding but most rewarding aspect of his role.

He must be an understanding and affectionate companion to his wife; he must counsel and befriend his children; he must plan for the family's future and have its welfare always in mind. In short, he, like his wife, must give of himself if his family life is to attain the warmth and vitality which differentiate a home from a mere household.

Bob admits that the role he described will demand his best efforts, but he is convinced (and I agree) that it is no more than his duty. The husband who evades any of these responsibilities is doing less than his share.

Nevertheless, many wives fail to recognize the services their husbands perform, and the demands made on them. Before complaining of what your husband doesn't, make sure you appreciate all he does.

Developing Trust

IN every truly happy marriage, one positive and unchanging quality of the relationship is trust. Although not always present in early courtship, it must develop if husband and wife are to achieve real unity.

On their wedding day husband and wife implicitly promise to trust each other, and in turn to be worthy of trust. Each partner must be both trusting and trustworthy. On the fulfillment of that pledge depends the deep understanding vital to marriage. What are the characteristics of the individual worthy of trust?

- Integrity is a prime essential, and this means observance of honor and principle for their own sake. A trustworthy wife does not sneak money from her husband's wallet, just as a trustworthy husband does not conceal the news of extra earnings. Similarly, in relationships with the opposite sex, behavior which would be embarrassing if discovered is forgone. But it is innate honor, not fear of discovery, which restrains the trustworthy individual from concealment or shoddy transactions.

- Veracity is a positive quality, implying willingness to tell the whole truth, as well as refusal to tell a lie. News of a parking ticket may be unwelcome, but better to tell it and face temporary unpleasantness than to conceal it and foster suspicion.

- Justice is indispensable in a relationship of trust. Every wife relishes praise; in all fairness, she should give it when due. Similarly, as she considers her husband responsible for his mistakes, she should accept blame when it is her due.

- Reliability involves acceptance of responsibility. It means fulfilling obligations assumed, from being punctual for appointments to remembering your promise to have the car serviced, from seeing that winter woolens are properly protected in moth balls to keeping the medicine cabinet adequately supplied. Equally, the trustworthy mate can be relied on to be understanding and patient, loyal and generous, and, when necessary, forgiving.

If you and your husband have these traits, you have every reason to trust each other. Are you sure you trust your husband as completely as he deserves? Do you show your trust, by behavior and attitude, in every phase of your life together?

No woman should marry a man she does not trust. You trusted him enough to marry him; and basically he is the same man he was then. If he was honest with you at first, and is secretive now, perhaps you are to blame. Do you pry into his affairs? Check up on his statements? Assume he is wrong if appearances are against him? Surveillance has no place in the relationship of a trusting husband and wife. You should be no more willing to doubt your husband than to doubt yourself. (Indeed, a wife's suspicions of her husband very often reflect her own lack of self-confidence.)

It is a rare husband or wife who trusts the other too much. Far more frequent is the spouse who trusts too little. When either doubts the other, every problem brings misunderstanding, and so threatens the very structure of the marriage. But the husband and wife who have faith in each other can face any difficulty, secure in the knowledge that their relationship will not falter despite any pressure.

Are You Close to Your Children?

Much of the happiness in your home, and later in the homes your children will establish, depends on the relationship you achieve with them now. These questions are particularly applicable to children aged 10 to 16. Answer them yourself, then get your husband to answer them independently.

Do You:

1. Take time for friendly talks with them?
2. Show your love and affection daily to each one?
3. Have fun at meals with them?
4. Praise them more than you criticize?
5. Make their friends feel welcome in your home?

Do Your Children:

6. Discuss their personal intimate problems with you?
7. Enjoy going places and doing things with you?
8. Spend some of their leisure time at home?
9. Ask your advice in making their larger decisions?
10. Show an interest in your personal appearance?

Do You and They:

11. Often question the fairness of the other?
12. Ever lose tempers and make bitter statements?
13. Often complain about being embarrassed by the other?
14. Sometimes try to force "dad" to take sides?

The last four questions should be answered "No," all others "Yes." No parent achieves perfection; with 12 or 13 correct answers yours is a good score, and 10 or 11 about par. If children are under 15, fathers will score one or two points less than mothers. With low or widely differing scores, you and your husband must co-operate in becoming more understanding parents.

Do You Agree?

My seventeen-year-old daughter is "in love," as she calls it, for the first time. What should my attitude be?

To ridicule it or seem to interfere will rouse her resentment – and may even precipitate the hasty action you fear. Your tolerance and understanding will help you retain her confidence.

Pastels without a peer...the more to flatter you

Fieldcrest gives you a choice of eight exquisite pastel sheets from lavender to the most subtle tones of peach and pink. Wonderful sheets for sleeping... soft and light as a butterfly's wings. Wonderful for wear, too, for they are woven the careful Fieldcrest way to stay luxurious after many washings.

If you love fine things you will find Fieldcrest pastel sheets in your favorite department store.

Fieldcrest® PASTEL Sheets

Bedspreads • Blankets • Towels

Lace Tablecloths • Electric Blankets

Curtains • La France Hosiery • Rayons

FIELDCREST MILLS, Division of Marshall Field & Company, Inc., 88 Worth Street, New York 13, New York from me to me with love

THE SUB-DEB
EDITED BY MAUREEN DALY

WANT to give yourself a superspecial present this year? Something that will last? Then gather up all the little things that bother you—Maryjo's new green dress, the club that asked Jan to join and left you out, those A's Ann gets in history, the way boys whistle when Margie walks down the street—wrap them up in a big package marked "Don't open for Christmas—or ever!" and put them out of your life for good. (Good for you, that is!) Those little jealousies will make a big package, but you're big enough to handle it; and let's face it, high-school jealousy is a major problem in your life, isn't it?

Who—Me? How do I know? Because it bothered me, too, and it bothered most of my girl friends; even those who had long eyelashes, three dates a week end and a closetful of cashmeres. In fact, jealousy—in large or small doses—bothers so many teen-agers that even the psychologists have heard about it. "Jealousy," they say, "is common among adolescents. It is symptomatic of a lack of self-confidence and emotional security." And to break that down to "how about me?" terms, it means simply that you yourself want so much to be attractive, popular and successful that you're just not ready to admit that other fellows and girls want—and will probably get—that "big three" list too! It's an unhappy habit that can take the fun out of everything from dating to daydreaming and, worst of all, it keeps you from developing into the sharp gal you might be.

Anyone You Know? How can you tell if you're really a victim of the green-eyed blues? Let's take a close look. Jealousy—in the large economy size that can last right through your senior year if you're not careful—is made up of two major mistakes: a feeling of inferiority and a fear of looking at yourself honestly. Jealousy makes you want to "tear down" other people because you haven't enough confidence to "build up" yourself. Here's a check list to look over to see if this means you:

If you find yourself thinking everyone else gets the breaks, if you make excuses by saying, "Sure, if I had as many clothes as she has . . ." or "Anybody can get good grades if they apple-shine," you're probably jealous.

If you catch yourself thinking too often about any one person, turning over and over in your mind the reasons why you don't like her, if you try to turn conversations to cat chatter with "Isn't it too bad a cute girl like Jane always runs after boys," there's probably nothing wrong with Jane, but you're jealous!

If you hear yourself making with the good-girl talk, thinking the reason you aren't popular is that you're "too nice," saying righteously, "I wouldn't want to be with that fast crowd," or "No wonder she dates so much, with her reputation," don't look now—but your jealousy streak is showing.

If you realize that you are "afraid" to hear compliments about others, if you add a "yes, but" comment to every nice thing said about someone else, if you like best those girls in the harpy huddle who have the same dislikes you do—here it comes again, you're jealous!

What's Wrong With That? What's wrong with jealousy? It's a waste of time, for one thing. In all those hours you spend wishing good things would stop happening to other people, you aren't letting them happen to you either. Wishing won't keep some blond sophomore rival from having a soda after school with the boys—but if you tried to practice her charm, maybe you could go along too. Jealousy is a revealing thing, especially in conversation, and too much two-timing talk lays open your whole personality to let people see that you're really pretty unhappy inside. And instead of hurting others with your sharp talk, you usually hurt yourself and your chances for popularity by letting listeners know that "Susie Sub-Deb's got a really bad inferiority complex—it shows." And here's something to remember: Fellows don't like it. Boys are embarrassed by female jealousy and gossip. And they're quickly disillusioned too. Even the prettiest girl looks not so nice when she shows that touch of green.

This Way Out—Where do we go from here? What can you do to get over those feelings of envy? First, face the fact that you're not different—almost everyone goes through jealousy blues as a part of growing up. Next, make a scrapbook list—so you won't forget it—of these three tricks to help you grow up and out of this habit a little faster.

1. Every time you think a jealous thought or add your bit to the current cat chatter, say to yourself, "What's really bothering me?" If it's good looks that make you jealous, treat yourself to a fifteen-minute-a-night beauty ritual. If it's not dating that gets you down, try to cultivate some of the pleasant traits of the popular girls (the ones you pretended you thought were "too fast"!). If you're glum because someone else gets all the A's, see if you still want those top grades after you do as much studying as she did to rate them. In short, if you're jealous of someone else, start trying to make yourself like her! That's what you really want, you know.

The No. 2 trick takes time. It means first convincing yourself that "everybody can't be everything" and then finding out the thing about yourself that is most interesting and can be developed into "something." Maybe you're good at tennis, maybe you can make your own clothes. Do you rate honors as secretary of the camera club, write top features for the school paper, paint the best backdrops for the class plays—or just what do you do that makes you interesting? If you can't say "I'm at least pretty good" about anything, then start finding something to do. You're old enough to have to start making your own life. It's all yours. Instead of thinking, "I wish I were like someone else," start figuring out "What can I do about me?"

And trick No. 3 is one you can start practicing now and use from sixteen to sixty. Just start talking. Those jealousy blues begin to fade away to the palest indigo if you can get yourself to talk, instead of bottling feelings up inside of you. And the best thing to say is "Good for you—that's wonderful!" Say it often, say it about any nice thing that happens to a friend—or someone you want for a friend—and before long, you begin to mean it. The more you mean it, the more interesting and warm you are as a person. And before you know it, the blues are gone and some of that "that's wonderful!" fun has begun to come your way! Worth a try, don't you think?

Don't look now . . .

. . . but do watch this page next month to meet the new Sub-Deb editor, Jan Weyl. Jan's first Sub-Deb page, inside stuff for teen-agers, will make its bow right here in the January JOURNAL. Want to know something about Jan—what she's like and what she likes? Well, here it is: she's a tall redhead herself, but prefers boys dark-haired with crew cuts—add a white camellia corsage, a movie with Bill Holden or jitterbugging to Ralph Flanagan disks, and that's Jan's idea of a perfect evening. Wagner also rates tops with her, and books by Raymond Chandler, James Thurber and A. A. Milne. She likes vacations in Maine, skiing or golf, bananas and cream for dessert, and her most recent part-time pastime was a sketch class (charcoal). Jan's an expert on everything from good joes to good jobs (her first job: salesgirl in a gift shop in Amsterdam, New York). She's just the kind of editor you'll like to read on your favorite page. And what about me? I'm off for a trip to Europe with a half-finished novel in my suitcase and some ideas about meeting teen-agers over there. So this is my big chance to say "Goodby, Sub-Debs," and "Here's Jan Weyl!"

MAUREEN DALY

Your Rayve-clean hair feels so silky—yet so lively . . . so eager to curl!

The only shampoo that praises your hair 5 ways... and makes your hair want to curl!

✓ Washes more shine into your hair!
New-formula Rayve Creme Shampoo washes each hair diamond-bright—flashing with light and life!

✓ "Cream-conditions" your hair!
Scientists say frequent gentle shampoos mean lovelier, healthier hair! Rayve's special enriching hair oils "cream-condition" your hair to new beauty every time you shampoo!

✓ Quick, rich lather!
Instantly—even in hardest water—Rayve bursts into energetic lather—works down to scalp fast —for deep-down cleansing!

✓ Free-rinsing . . . no soap-drag!
No other shampoo rinses out faster! Free-rinsing Rayve bathes your hair with highlights!

✓ Solves short hair's #1 problem, too!
Short curls must be dancing-clean or they go limp . . . Rayve's gentle cleansing lets you shampoo often— keeps short hair at glamour-peak!

AND... makes your hair want to curl!
Rayve actually washes more life into your wave! It leaves every hair so springy, yet so obedient, that your waves fairly ripple back from your brush! Rayve makes your hair want to curl!

In jars or tubes

Rayve CREME SHAMPOO

. . . everyone's dream of "sleeping in the sun" come true!

UNUSUAL...THIS GIFT OF SLEEPING COMFORT!

The new General Electric Automatic Blanket

THE gentle warmth of sunshine . . . the bliss of restful sleep! That's what you give, and get, through the magic of the new G-E Automatic Blanket!

Imagine the comfort of slipping into a pre-warmed bed! Think of sleeping snug and warm under just one downy blanket, whatever the weather!

No more restlessness from the weight of heavy covers! No more nocturnal hunts for extra blankets on freezing nights! No more damp-feeling sheets! Instead, you get luxurious sleeping comfort, automatically, every night. A special gift for that special person! When you're Christmas shopping, choose the gift you'll be thanked for every day.

Only the new G-E Automatic Blanket offers the dependability of the superb new G-E circuit, a great engineering achievement. The finest automatic blanket ever made . . . product of G.E.'s experience in making more than 1,000,000 automatic blankets! General Electric Co., Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Here is the "heart" of the new G-E Automatic Blanket, the super-sensitive, G-E accurate Bedside Control. Once set, at degree of warmth sleeper finds most pleasant, the blanket adjusts to normal changes in room temperature, while the sleeper stays at same sunny warmth.

So economical! One G-E Blanket is all any bed needs. Saves buying extra blankets, saves storage space, saves bedmaking time, saves laundry. (Washes beautifully.) Yet, it costs only a few pennies a night to enjoy all this luxury of comfort.

Some other makes are cheaper . . . but only the fin the new G-E Automatic Blanket, assures General Elec dependability and experience. Your choice of exqui shades of rose, blue, green or cedar. Twin- or double- sizes, one- or two-control models.

MUNKACSI

Doctor —PART II

re there positive tests to prove that I'm pregnant, Doctor?

I'm so happy—but I want to be sure."

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

WELCOME!" said the doctor, beaming. "I have been expecting you for the past two weeks."

"It seems to me that you are taking ot for granted, Doctor," the young an replied just as beamingly.

I wouldn't say that. Just playing the of averages."

You received my announcement card, e."

Received it and immediately changed 'Miss Jane Doe' on my record sheet 'Mrs. John.' I suppose I shall have write in a change of address, how-. Did you marry a distant cousin, any chance?"

No. No relationship, as far as we have n able to figure. The coincidence in our nes is purely accidental."

I see. Well, let's get down to business. w many periods have you missed?"

You seem to know all about it. I've sed two."

What was the date of the first day of r last period?"

June fifteenth."

That would bring your date for conment to the twenty-second of March."

That sounds like lightning calculation. w do you do it?"

It's simple enough. The average carryperiod is about two hundred and seventy s after pregnancy takes place. It is seln that a woman knows the exact date en that happened; nor do we ever know t when that particular ovulation took ce. What every woman does know is the t day of her last menstruation—and if estimate the carrying period as two hund and eighty days, ten lunar months or e calendar months from that, we'll usu- come out within a week of the date, side or the other. So we count ahead e months, or what is easier and amounts the same thing, count back three months d add a week for good measure. In your e June fifteenth—May fifteenth—April eenth—March fifteenth, plus seven days uals March twenty-second."

'I don't think that's so simple. Is there y other way, Doctor?"

'Ye-es—not very accurate, though. For tance, life is usually felt sometime after e eighteenth week. Forty weeks minus hteen leaves twenty-two weeks to go—actically five calendar months. So if you ould first feel life about October twenth, we would still calculate March twenth as your date for confinement. Also, first babies settle down, within the mothers' abdomen, two to three weeks before confinement. Those are all the methods I know, and I'll stick by the first of them—it usually works out pretty well."

"I'm glad I know when my baby is coming—I'll be ready for it."

"Don't you think you're being a little hasty? We don't even know definitely that you're pregnant."

"Why, I thought—I didn't suppose there could be anything else that would stop me menstruating."

"There certainly could. Don't worry, though, it's not likely. Doctors through the ages have come to realize that when a normally healthy woman, with a previous normal menstrual life, suddenly stops menstruating, in about nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of a thousand there's one cause to account for it, and one only—pregnancy."

"I'm glad to hear you say that. I'd really be terribly disappointed."

"Don't worry, we'll soon find out."

"Will you tell me how you're going to know, Doctor? I'm really interested."

"I know you are. I remember how you came to me before you were married, to see if everything was all right. For that reason I'm going to take the time to explain to you the symptoms of pregnancy, as we go along. In discussing the missed period, we've covered the first sign. Now let me ask you another question—have you noticed any loss of appetite?"

"Yes, I have. In fact, I don't take any breakfast any more. The sight, or even the smell, of food cooking nauseates me in the morning, and several times I've vomited what little breakfast I had forced myself to take."

"That's a common enough symptom with many women—about fifty per cent of them, as a matter of fact."

"Why does it happen, Doctor?"

"It has been suggested that it is an allergic reaction to an increased secretion of the hormones of pregnancy. There may be psychological and other reasons too. Anyhow, I don't think you need worry about it—it will probably pass away within the next few weeks. Only rarely does it become serious. You might try outguessing it by not taking any nourishment before noon, for the present. Tell me something else—have you noticed any trouble with your bladder recently?"

"Why, yes, it's quite irritable and I have to—to go frequently."

"That's to be expected. It's probably on account of the enlarging uterus pulling on opyright, 1950, by Henry B. Safford, M.D. This is eleventh of a series of articles taken from the book oe published early in 1951 by Rinehart House, Publishers, Inc., New York, N. Y.

(Continued on Page 194)

FIFI
Daniel Green's delightfully feminine mule in shimmering satin. Black, pink, heaven blue and white. $7.50

SLIDE
Daniel Green's saucy new scuff for any Eve from 14 to 40. In soft, supple leather with a smart contrasting thong trim! Pink, heaven blue, red, green, royal. $5.00

JUNO
Daniel Green's cuban-heeled beauty! A specially lovely slipper in shimmering satin. Red, wine, royal, black, white, heaven blue and pink. $5.50

Daniel Green
Comfy Slippers
Made by Master Craftsmen since 1882

SOME DO! SOME DON'T!

WITH—OR WITHOUT RINSING—

Tide does a better washing job than any soap on earth!

Whichever way you wash . . . Tide gives you

WHITE, BRIGHT, DAZZLING CLEAN CLOTHES!

Lady, it just doesn't matter which method you choose—or what soaps you may have tried—Tide will do a better job for your family wash than any soap! Tide, unlike soap, forms no soap film EVER. That one fact alone revolutionized washing results. What's more, Tide actually dissolves dirt out of clothes . . . holds dirt suspended in the sudsy water. Wring out the clothes—dirt goes, too! And your wash comes so wonderfully fresh and clean it's a joy to hang it out! Get Procter & Gamble's Tide today—there's nothing like it!

"My Tide wash simply sparkles—it's so dazzling white, so sweet, so clean!"

SAYS MRS. BERTHA BRADLEY, MILTON, MASS

"I just can't rave enough about the way Tide gets dirty clothes clean! Tide really seems different—it leaves my wash so dazzling white, so sweet and clean! And clothes dry so beautifully soft . . . and have such a wonderful fresh, 'outdoorsy' smell. Believe me, there's nothing like Tide!"

Never before TIDE could you wash your heaviest, dirtiest clothes SO CLEAN!

- Leaves no soap film ever!
- Miracle clean clothes—with or without rinsing!
- Dazzling white clothes—with no bleach or bluing!
- Soap-dulled colors actually come bright and fresh!
- Clothes dry soft—iron beautifully!
- And Tide does all this safely—rinse or no rinse!

Journal about Town

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

THE hit tunes of December, 1900, were Bird in a Gilded Cage and I Want a Military Man. Edward Cudahy was kidnaped in Omaha and returned to his parents for $25,000. Paris prohibited absinthe, and several dozen children drowned while skating at What Cheer, Iowa.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like, and what goes on in New York

A CURRENT mark of distinction for anybody here in the Editorial Workshop is not so much that he or she has been to see Call Me Madam, but that one has been able to buy tickets for any performance of this musical before next spring. By "Her Excellency" and admirers. Left to right, Raoul René de Bois, scenic designer for "Call Me Madam"; Leland Hayward, producer; Jerome Robbins, choreographer; George Abbott (seated), director; Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, authors; Miss Merman and Paul Lukas (behind), stars; and Irving Berlin, who wrote the music for Broadway's musical hit.

she told Jan. "Men are permitted to advise, but women make all the decisions. And when a man marries," she went on, "he goes to live with his wife's family." But bride and groom rarely meet before the wedding, which is one reason why the princess is crazy about this country. "There's no dating in India," she said, "but here a girl can make all the dates she wants. It's wonderful!"

On a national average, 69.7 persons in every 100,000 become mentally ill each year. In Utah the rate is 47.9. Highest rate is in the District of Columbia. . . . Houston, Texas, with a population of 700,000, has 132 millionaires.

We met one of our favorite photographers, Ruth Orkin, walking up Madison Avenue not long ago, her Contax in her hand, and as we fell in with her she told us she was on an assignment from Artur Rubinstein's manager to follow the celebrated pianist on a stroll through New York streets, taking pictures of him as he walked along, looked in shop windows, catching him in a series of candid shots for a little brochure of personal photographs. We looked ahead, and there was Mr. R. ambling along. "Down about Fiftieth," Ruth told us, "he bumped into Ludwig Bemelmans." Seems she caught some wonderful shots of this chance encounter of the maestro with his old friend, the author-artist. "And look who's coming now—I wonder if Rubinstein knows Basil Rathbone." He certainly did. The greeting was hearty. And before the famous actor knew he was being photographed, Ruth had their meeting on film as you see it here. And the funny part, which is typically New York, the

RUTH ORKIN

Coffee being a pretty lively topic these days—not only the price, but the staggering proportions of its world-wide consumption—Betty Gray and Adrina Casparian took a little trip to one of the biggest roasting plants in the world, over in Brooklyn, running into a rather remarkable man named John Zawacki. He was sitting there at a round revolving marble-top table, sipping coffee from a dozen or so cups. As chief coffee taster for the A & P, he said he's been tasting coffee professionally ever since the age of eight in Poland, where his father ran a wholesale coffee business—a sort of infant prodigy. Been tasting it as an expert ever since, for fifty years. The girls tried him out, and what he said was true. With a few sniffs and a sip or two, he could name the brand and tell the spot where it was grown. Adrina asked him if drinking all this coffee didn't keep him awake nights. "Lees'n," he said, "eef coffee kap me awake, I'd be dead by now. I sleep like a log." On the way out Betty asked an executive the 98-cent question—why is coffee costing so much? The answer was quite complicated, but it boiled down (which you shouldn't do with coffee) to good old supply and demand. Bad crops last year; more being used than ever before: soldiers and sailors—and people getting panicky and buying more at a time than they need. "But don't worry," he said

J. DI PIETRO

Coffee for Mr. Z.—expert taster.

FOR YOUR

Christmas Gift ORDERS

LADIES' HOME

JOURNAL

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Inclosed is $_____, for which please enter a Christmas gift subscription for LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, to go to each of the following addresses:

Name_____

Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____

Name_____

Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____

Name_____

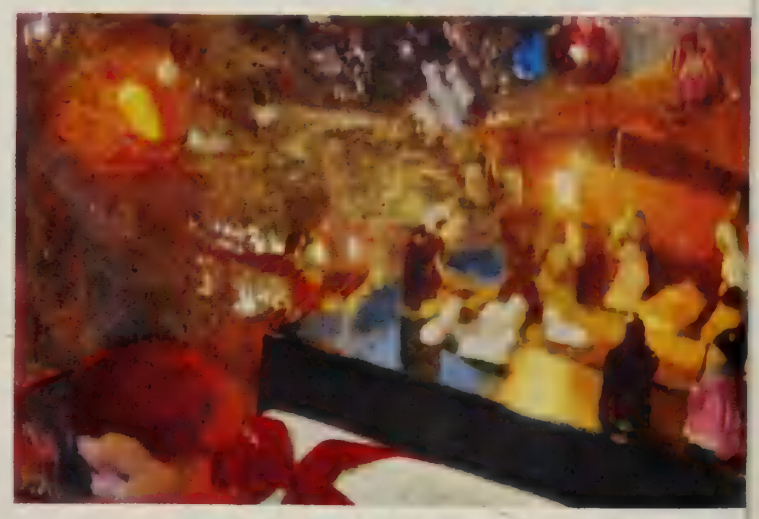
Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____

Sent by_____

Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____



U. S. GIFT PRICES

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL: 1 1-yr. $3; 2 1-yr. $5; Each additional $2.50
THE SATURDAY EVENING POST: 1 1-yr. $6; 2 1-yr. $10; Each additional $5
HOLIDAY: 1 1-yr. $5; 2 1-yr. $8; Each additional $4
COUNTRY GENTLEMAN: 5 yrs. $3; 3 yrs. $2; 1 yr. $1 (Sold in U.S., R.D. only)
JACK AND JILL: 1 1-yr. $2.50; 2 1-yr. $4.00; Each additional $2

PRINTED IN U. S. A.

"I watch the face, absorbed in wonder, lit by the candle light, dreaming. I do not ask what thoughts are shaping in that child mind. I know, for I myself have dreamed." . . . There is something of every Christmas past, in every home, in the memories of a famous American writer who, as a 12-year-old child in China, learned that the doors which Christmas opens never, never close.

Under the tree is the tiny crèche.

Room in the Inn

By PEARL S. BUCK

ENGEL

Pearl Buck and Jackie.

OVER the horizon I see the glow of Christmas coming, the Christmas of this year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifty. All the Christmastimes of my life are reflected in that glow, for each Christmas is part of all that have gone before, and to tradition and memory in every family, the new Christmas adds its part. Take, in our family, The Big Party. . . .

The day before Christmas Eve now in our house is always the day of The Big Party, the first event for us of Christmas Week. It has become our tradition. Yet actually The Big Party began decades ago and halfway around the world, when I was a little girl. We lived in the Chinese countryside in a plain little gray-brick house. Whatever luxury we had was not in the house, but in the landscape of lush valleys and distant purple mountains. Christmas was joyful but simple in that house, for there was never much money.

But every year there was one golden, gorgeous, glorious event when I saw plenty of everything, toys and delicious foods in lavishly beautiful rooms. Once a year during Christmas Week a kindly English lady, the wife of an official in the British customs, gave all the Western children a Christmas party. Her house was the usual enormous and stately pile of brick with which the British Empire in those days maintained its dignity in Asia. The house stood on the Bund, in the British Concession, facing the Yangtze River.

The Bund itself was something special. It had iron gates that were barred at night, and inside the gates the noise and dirt of the crowded Chinese city gave way to order and cleanliness and space. Green trees lined the wide streets and behind low walls stood the great English houses, encircled by verandas. Mrs. Tamplin's was the largest, and inside her private gate was a beautiful garden and the garden was part of the Christmas enchantment. But inside the house, what other enchantment!

Mrs. Tamplin, small, hearty, cheerful, her two brown eyes, one not quite matching the other but both twinkling and bright, stood at the door to shake all hands with her warm English grasp and her invariable greeting: "Get your things off, my deahs! Santa's on the way—lots of goodies and things ——"

We took off coats and hats and wandered slowly about the big, luxuriously furnished rooms. Fruits and flowers were everywhere and coal fires glowed in the English grates under the tall mantelpieces. Slowly we walked, feasting our eyes until (Continued on Page 195)

Copyright, 1950, by Pearl S. Buck

Mother of the Groom

You know about the Father of the Bride. There's just as much uncertainty, heartache and tenderness in the story of another member of the wedding.

By HARRIET FITTS RYAN

THE letter ended. "I'd like to bring Betsy Evans home with me for the spring vacation. So please, mom, write her a very special invitation."

Martha Bartlett stared again at the words. She'd been hearing a lot all winter about this Betsy Evans, but that was nothing new. She'd been hearing a lot about some Polly or Mimi or Nancy or Joanie ever since Jimmy caught girlitis from Wump Everard his last year in prep school. But this could mean only one thing.

Martha leaned against the front door, where she'd stood to open the letter, and told herself not to be ridiculous. It was just another girl who enjoyed Jimmy's company—and motoring upstate through the spring countryside. Just another of Jimmy's girls.

Funny he'd had such a procession of them, because until Wump came into his life—Wump was a smoothie from the smooth North Shore of Chicago—Jimmy had abhorred girls.

Would Martha ever forget the summer, Jimmy's fifteenth, when Peggy Fant and her daughter had stopped over to visit them on their way to the falls?

"Now, Jimmy," Martha had said, "I want you to be particularly nice to little Peggy. Her mother and I have been friends since we were girls."

Jimmy had not answered, but his eyes had become stubborn and opaque.

The two Peggys drove up in midafternoon.

"Where's that big son of yours?" Peg had demanded when the hugging and kissing were over. "We've heard how tall and good-looking he is, way the other end of New York State."

"Oh, we didn't think you'd get here quite so early," Martha said, with an airiness she was far from feeling.

He had walked in just as they were sitting down for dinner. He was dirty and he smelled—well, he smelled of his boat, naturally, since he had chosen today to clean it. Essence of worms, fish and boy.

Martha had raised a window and tried to smile brightly. "Hi, Jimmy. Here's your Aunt Peg and little Peggy."

Little Peggy, in white organdy and what was obviously her first lipstick, had held out her hand and Jimmy had taken it as if there were spikes sticking from it. He stared at the opposite wall and mumbled "Hello." It was the extent of his conversation with Peggy during the two days she was a guest in the home.

The young-savage phase had gone on quite a long time, with Jimmy hating clean clothes, a clean body, proper

(Continued on Page 106)

Your daughter's your daughter all her life.
Your son is your son till he gets him a wife.

The jingle taunted Martha she had only Jimmy, who was ting him a wife.

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE IN ONE ISSUE NOVEL

A Breath o

By RUMER GODDEN

"They'll never find us," McGinty said when Val Doubleday's plane came down in the blue bay of the remote island. "we're lost!" Val shook his head. "Safe," he corrected because the island's peace felt like the first morning of a new world. Van Loomis, owner of the island, refugee from a world "sick with its own cleverness," had troubles too. Filipino, the native boy who learned to read The Rights of Man, now saw a tyrant in van Loomis. Mario, the Spaniard, wanted van Loomis's daughter, Charis—"who else is there for her to marry?" Most of all there was Charis herself, a woman now, not a child. Her father could give her pearls on her twenty-first birthday, but he could not give her what she really wanted—knowledge of life and a world she had never seen. When he saw Val, he remembered a proverb: "When the pupil is ready, the teacher will come."

II

"YOU understand," Mr. van Loomis had said to Niu, Pheasant and Luck in his study. "Understand, Tsuli Charis must not know." "Yes, sah!" said Pheasant jovially, rolling her eyes. Pheasant insisted on being jovial. Mr. van Loomis gave her a displeased look. The time had not yet come to be jovial. "Yes, sah!" said Pheasant and smacked her lips.

"Yes, Tsula," said Niu.

"Yes, Tsula," said Luck, but less certainly.

"And the two young Tsulas must not know."

"No, sah!" Pheasant's chuckle filled the room, and Mr. van Loomis frowned and held up his hand.

"They are asleep," said Niu.

Valentine was asleep in a room that sounded to him, in his sleep, like a cave, one of those underground caves that Mr. van Loomis had spoken of. He tossed restlessly, too tired and stiff to rest; he had pushed open the window slats before he lay down, and there was too much light in the room and the heat came in. McGinty slept dreamlessly, tired out. Filipino, too, lay asleep on his bed on the shore; above him the palm leaves moved, endlessly whispering. Filipino smiled in his sleep; he was dreaming of Oxford.

Charis was on the veranda, but Niu, Luck and Pheasant faced Mr. van Loomis across his desk in the study. They all looked unwilling and a little sullen. This was the time for sleeping, and they felt they should have been asleep; instead they had been roused up when they had hardly eaten their midday meal: they had to re-dress themselves, a light task with Luck and Niu, but for Pheasant it meant getting into her top petticoat and dress and retying her head handkerchief and putting on a clean apron, but Pheasant still looked jovial. They had all understood perfectly and at once what was in Mr. van Loomis's mind for Charis, but it was only to Pheasant that it seemed a cause for rollicking excitement. Luck and Niu had had (Continued on Page 67)

Copyright, 1950, by Rumer Godden

Air

"You shouldn't interrupt when I'm at work," he said, annoyed. She didn't look sorry.

STRATED BY AL PARKER

Maggie's Christmas Tree

The Journal Presents
ROBERT CRAIG
FIRST APPEARANCE IN ANY MAGAZINE

RICH man, poor man, beggarman, thief—everyone is privately convinced of his own goodness; impressed by his own moral principles, whatever they are: fascinated by the sight of his own face, and pleased with the sound of his own voice. Self-assurance is the main ingredient of well-being, and the huge man striding along the sand road through the windy Florida night was no exception.

Mathiew Dekker had just planted two miles of fence around his newest pasture, and he had managed to use less wire than he had planned at first. That gave him an inordinate sense of happy accomplishment. He paced along, his wide, thick shoulders loaded with the great spool of wire he had saved, a canvas sack holding his wire stretcher and tools, and he was filled with an elation that came from the money he'd saved on wire.

When he passed Joe Ryan's he added a special sense of pride to his exhilaration. It always did him good to think about Joe. Joe Ryan was a hard-working farmer, and a big man by other people's standards, but he didn't measure up to Mathiew.

Looking across the yard and through the Ryans' living-room window, he saw the Christmas tree, and snorted to himself.

"Git her all decked out with lights!" He grinned. "Spend more money'n you got! Put good cattle money into clay dolls! Sweat your life out fer a celluloid horn! Go on, Joe!" He laughed quietly. "Go crazy!"

Mathiew had seen his first Christmas tree when he'd grown to be a gangling kid of maybe twelve. He had left his foster parents and their mean shack in the deep hammock country, and hired out on his first job. That Christmas tree, the candles, the presents and the party had not been for him, and envy for these things had infected him like fever.

The next Christmas, when he had learned how little his extra dimes and nickels would buy, he turned his envy into a fierce pride. Someday he would have more than they if he saved! Christmas was a squandering!

To his surprise and satisfaction, his young and desperate argument sounded more and more reasonable with every succeeding autumn. Wherever he worked, others planned Christmas parties and foolishly counted out their money, but he found a strange comfort and a sense of extra strength in his powerful defiance of the expensive fairy story.

Spending money was a habit, he thought. Take that gas engine that ran Joe's light plant, for instance. He could hear it throbbing in the darkness and he saw the electric lights in Joe's ranch house. Did a man have to spend money for things like that? Joe Ryan did, because he couldn't stand up to his family. A wife and kids were always asking things of a man, and the more a man like Joe gave them, the more they wanted. Joe was the kind who let his family run him—run him into debt! He'd tried to borrow money (Continued on Page 180)

by Robert Craig

In the wise new hearts of children

the old miracle is forever reborn – "It is magical,"

Maggie cried inside herself.

Why can't ou mothers breast-feed?

Fifty per cent of American mothers today "don't want to." Half of those who do try, fail.

By GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ

ANNE SYLVESTER is a young mother of the finest type. Intelligent, a college graduate, she is also a healthy, Junoesque girl from a farm background, without a neurotic cell in her body. Her baby was planned, and Anne informed herself fully about her new and eagerly awaited tasks as a mother.

"Of course I wanted to nurse my baby," Anne told me. "I decided that as soon as I knew I was pregnant. All the books say it is best for the baby. Besides, one of my dearest friends was nursing her child, and raved to me about what a wonderful experience it was. I thought she was an ideal mother—I wanted to do things as she had done them."

Anne's infant, a bouncing 8½-pound girl, was born in a hospital connected with a highly rated medical school. There were no complications whatsoever.

"My doctor didn't discuss breast feeding with me at all," says Anne. "The first time my baby was brought in, at six A.M., the nurse poured out a rapid fire of instructions and left the room before I could ask her any questions. But baby and I did the best we could on our own, and I never dreamed but that it would all work out. When the doctor came in on the fifth day and said, 'You can't nurse your baby, it's no use to try,' I was so surprised and so crushed that I didn't think to ask him why. I just bawled for two days. Ruthie has developed nicely on the formula the doctor gave me. But what is the matter with me, that I couldn't feed her myself?"

Anne's case and many like hers pose a question that is receiving serious attention from a considerable portion of the medical profession. As Anne says, every book on infant care today stresses the advantages of breast feeding over formulas, a phase of the return to the more natural methods which were thrown overboard with such éclat a generation back.

But the New York University Department of Pediatrics states that breast feeding is declining in this country. An informal poll of doctors, hospitals and nurses reveals that about 50 per cent of our mothers say they don't want to nurse their babies. And that of those who want to, probably half seem unable to do so.

This is largely an American phenomenon. European doctors report no particular trouble about breast feeding. In England, closest to us culturally, 80 per cent of the babies born in hospitals and 95 per cent of those born at home are entirely breast-fed. Yet in the United States, a comfortably situated mother who breast-feeds her baby entirely is an oddity today, practically a museum specimen.

Why is it that American women are failing in a function that should be as natural to the feminine sex as breathing?

To many readers, to be sure, this may seem an academic question. Aren't formulas just as good? Is there any reason any more why a mother should be tied down to her infant's feeding schedule?

The answer involves one of those complete overturns of scientific thought to which the older generation of mothers has now become accustomed, if not inured. It is true that when Dr. Williams Marriott, of St. Louis, introduced the scientifically calculated formula a generation back, it was a great advance over the hit-and-miss bottle feedings which had been given before that when a mother was unable to breast-feed.

With the new formulas, deaths of artificially fed babies from diarrhea and other intestinal diseases declined. The average infant throve on bottle feedings. When my own babies were born, around a quarter of a century ago, my excellent doctor said to me, "You haven't enough milk, but there is no need to worry about it. Formulas are just as good."

In the intervening years, however, a body of evidence has been accumulating to show that formulas are not so good, when a mother can supply milk herself, and this points up one of the most intriguing medical mysteries of our day.

Just what the magic element is in the thin, bluish liquid that comes from human breasts, the most delicate tests have been unable to discover. Animal milks contain more calcium and protein per ounce. Yet babies suckled by their own mothers grow at a greater rate in the early months; their bony structure is stronger and straighter; they need less additional vitamins C and D; and they are much less liable to gastrointestinal upsets, respiratory infections, diarrhea, rash and eczema.

It has recently been reported that human milk contains an antipolio substance, found only rarely in cow's milk. This seems to explain why paralyzing polio is almost never seen in babies and small children in the countries where breast feeding is still the rule, even when polio itself is widespread.

Dr. Clifford G. Grulee and Dr. Hayward N. Sanford, professors of pediatrics at the University of Illinois, studied the records from birth to nine months of 20,061 babies who were under the care of the Chicago Infant Welfare Society; 48½ per cent of these babies were totally breast-fed, 43 per cent were partially breast-fed, and 8½ per cent were artificially fed. The total of illnesses in the breast-fed group was 37.4 per cent; in the partially breast-fed group, 53.8 per cent; in the artificially fed, 63.6 per cent. (Continued on Page 191)

The Great Room is dominated by the Horns of Plenty ceiling and the plaster overmantel plaque depicting an Aesop fable suggested by George Washington himself.

PRATT

KENMORE

It seems that one day in the fall of 1781, Betty Lewis found Kenmore filled with high officers of the Continental Army, and in her own bedroom on her bed where he had flung himself too exhausted to take off his uniform or even his boots, she discovered her brother, George Washington, sound asleep after the British surrender at Yorktown. Betty and her husband, Col. Fielding Lewis, had finished the house about twenty-five years before, and a little later had employed some amazingly able French itinerant artisans to execute the plaster relief ceilings and overmantels that are still today unrivaled in America. Few houses from Colonial times are filled with so many enduring associations or with such a wealth of original features and furnishings which beautifully belong as you see them here.

Famous for its early occupants, for its finest of plasterwork, and for olet taffeta, with uneven hemline, by Mark Mooring.

Embroidered organdy over taffeta, gold taffeta coat, by Ceil Chapman.

Changeable taffeta by Wilson Folmar.

Draped nylon tulle by Ceil Chapman.

Quilted cotton by Ann Fogarty.

Our GRANDPARENTS' Maxims

True or False

By JUDITH CHASE CHURCHILL

HERE are some of the old-time beliefs and maxims of our grandparents. Chances are you've heard most of them, either passed down in your own family or circulated among friends. For many are still making the rounds today much as they did a hundred years ago.

To draw the line between fact and fancy, we've put these up to the authorities in their various fields. What we found out will surprise you. Some you'd least suspect of being true stand up when put to the test. Others, often taken as gospel, are out-and-out old wives' tales.

But before you deride grandma's gullibility for the ridiculous, her homespun remedies and quaint fables, keep in mind that our own grandchildren will upset plenty of the beliefs we swear by in the Early Atomic Age.

"Women and Elephants Never Forget!"

TRUE. Perhaps there's some truth to this maxim, even though the memories of both have always been greatly overrated. Psychologists claim women have better memories than men in things which interest them most—for instance, clothes, people and social events. Elephants, on the other hand, have better memories than most animals in just about everything. Both women and elephants tend to nurse grudges. In woman's case they're mostly social slights. As for elephants, no one's quite figured out their pet peeves.

Hairiness is a Sign of Virility

FALSE. It is according to the popular picture which has most virile men with "hair on their chests" and thick curly locks. But present-day physiognomists have exploded the delusion in discovering that exceptional hormone activity and its accompanying virility is more typical of baldheaded men. Only hairiness in the eyebrows indicates virility—one mark of good adrenal and pituitary function. If you want a virile man, say the experts, find someone who's bald and has shaggy eyebrows.

"The Way to a Man's Heart is Through His Stomach"

TRUE. Psychologists generally agree this is the case. They claim it all dates back to mom. Deep down in a man's heart is a close tie-up between good meals and his mother—the first person to serve them to him. Quite naturally, say they, he'll credit any other woman who feeds him well with his mother's same protectiveness and kindliness. All of which is Route 1 to his heart and may well explain both man's inevitable affinity for waitresses as well as the fact that he's more likely to propose in the evening—after a good meal.

"A Change is as Good as a Vacation"

TRUE. Efficiency and fatigue experts confirm it. They find manual production is often stepped up as much as 400 per cent by frequent short rest periods as opposed to alternately working and resting at longer stretches. In creative work, too, psychologists claim the same holds. It keeps you from going stale. Some of the world's greatest thinkers have found a hobby, completely different from business, to be a much better antidote for that tired feeling than a complete rest in which they do nothing at all.

"When Poverty Knocks at the Door, Love Flies Out the Window"

FALSE. Actually it's just the opposite—poverty tends to bind couples together and affluence to separate them. For the divorce rate invariably rises during periods of prosperity and drops during hard times.

"Marry in Haste, Repent at Leisure"

TRUE. Sociologists' studies second this on two counts. The divorce rate of girls under twenty and boys under twenty-five is about two and a half times higher than for those older and more physically and emotionally mature. Surveys also show marriages preceded by longer acquaintance and longer engagements turn out a whole lot better than those entered in haste.

"You Have to Eat a Peck of Dirt Before You Die"

TRUE. Not, of course, at one sitting, or you might. But health experts speculate the intake of dirt of the average person during his average lifetime of some sixty-eight years amounts to a good deal–more, in fact, than the conservative peck claimed by this maxim.

Fright Makes Hair Stand on End

TRUE. This is scientific fact. When you're "scared stiff" or have a "hair-raising" experience, the muscles around the roots of your hair contract and draw it into a more upright position. It's much like when cats and dogs "bristle." Fortunately this ferocious-looking reaction isn't obvious in people; though it might be noticeable in a terrified man with a close crew cut.

The Human Body Completely Renews Itself Every Seven Years

FALSE. That your body and mind undergo a complete change every seven years was an old and widespread superstition often so

(Continued on Page 143)

there's a man in the house

By HARLAN MILLER

I'm tempted to scribble on our Christmas cards to bachelor friends: "Get married, chum. Even if it should mean squabbles, discomfort, even eventual divorce. It beats single 'blessedness.'" But they'd resent it, alas, or suspect I'm getting stuffy. Maybe I am!

Our youngest assures me he doesn't object to shoveling the driveway. But he hints I'd be nice to buy myself for Christmas one of those gadgets you push like a lawn mower which melts the snow with a blast of flame. (What! Rob myself of exercise?)

Most families in our town are content merely to buy a new car. But I know at least three husbands who win greater glory by giving 'em to their wives for Christmas, complete with the key in the stocking.

"The least a woman can do," says Peter Comfort, hanging a wreath on the door so it won't be in the mailman's way, "is to compliment her dearest girl friends on how well they look in their most unbecoming clothes."

The man next door tells me he plans to wallpaper a room with the bright wrappings of their Christmas packages. "Maybe it would help us," he speculates, "to carry more of the Christmas spirit over into bleak March and sultry August."

One of our town's rich men spends $150 a month in phone calls to squeeze the last chortle of triumph from his tidy yacht off the Florida palms. He phones his friends daily on his ship-to-shore phone, hoping to catch 'em up to their necks in their driveway snowdrifts.

Confidentially, I was afraid that maybe I'd crammed last summer's motor trip to the Northwest Pacific Coast and Canada down my two sons' throats, for my own selfish pleasure. So you can understand how exhilarating it was when they inquired when we'd drive to the Southwest Pacific Coast and Mexico. (I'd hate to bore 'em.)

I've suggested again to my Wonder Girl that we leave a few of our Christmas presents unopened from year to year, to heighten our expectancy. (She retorts that I'm just pretending to be an old kill-joy of a cynic.)

I'm trying to convince my Wonder Girl that we ought to cover the carpet in the center of the living room, where traffic is heaviest, with a round rug, before it wears through. But she always talks me out of the idea without ever uttering a real reason against it.

Our block's most conciliatory husband confesses that this Christmas his diplomacy and tact are under a heavy strain. All his children want for Christmas is a television set, but all his wife wants for Christmas is not to have a TV set in the house. He's wondering if he can't convert the garage into a TV ward.

Junior overtook and passed me in size so suddenly that he left me with several suits and pairs of shoes I'd kinda hoped he'd wear out for me. . . . At first I suspected unwillingness to co-operate. But he's still growing so fast that he can't even wear out his own clothes.

My resourceful neighbor around the corner claims he's outmaneuvered his wife with a new rebuttal that works in any argument. . . . When he finds himself trapped and outlogicked, he merely exclaims, "I will not be a henpecked husband!" So far she's still baffled.

When I'm packing for a hunting trip I always know where to find my favorite flannel shirts: in my daughter's clothes closet. (She thinks men's gaudier shirts were invented for girls to wear to picnics and hen parties.)

My splendid in-laws always awe me into a sense of unworthiness at Christmas dinner. . . . We now total thirty at table, and need a second turkey and carver — my brother-in-law — at the other end of the long table. I've never yet seen a man who could carve a turkey as well as his brother-in-law does.

I'm amazed to discover there are now seven psychiatrists in our quiet town, and at lunch at the club I've been quietly drawing 'em out. I've reached one tentative conclusion: that no husband or wife who shares a big double bed has ever had to be psychoanalyzed.

After seven years I'm convinced that the Christmas-tree decorations my Dream Girl made with the help of our ten-year-old are the prettiest of all. . . . They simply gilded some toothpicks and stuck 'em into gilded cork bobbers from my fishing-tackle box, and I never catch any fish anyhow.

"Some of my chums," reveals Betty Comfort, opening the kitchen fan to minimize the cauliflower smell, "think gossip that's true is the most fascinating. Others prefer gossip without a word of truth in it. But I think gossip on a foundation of truth with judicious exaggerations is best."

The tightest husband in our neighborhood has quit checking the grocery bill for the time being. . . . His wife has convinced him, with a burst of inspired feminine arithmetic, that she serves 480 meals a month at their house at a cost of 29 cents a meal. (She probably omitted the cost of milk, butter and eggs.)

Gradually the children seem to be getting fonder of one another. At least they don't go to such lengths to conceal their affection. The two boys can now box or wrestle without cries of pain or rage, and recently our red-haired daughter took the ten-year-old out for a banana split. "He's not a bad kid," is Junior's flattering appraisal of his little brother.

After you've found buttons missing from every shirt, and are convinced that nobody loves you, in these days of stress . . . and your youngest spills red paint all over the cellar steps . . . or your daughter selects the strangest mélange of college courses . . . and Junior behaves as if he were your world-weary uncle . . . or your Wonder Woman decides you were wrong in an argument with a man you detest . . . and you retire to the basement, wishing your family appreciated you as other men's families do —— When without warning your Wonder Woman declares that nine kisses and nine hugs a day are vital for a happy marriage, rather than your estimate of three each . . . and your youngest concedes that an occasional spanking needn't strain family harmony . . . or your daughter devotes one of her precious sorority-house "late hours" to spend an evening with you at the State University . . . and Junior finally agrees that your horseback judgments of his chums aren't always screwy . . . then you decide not to enlist in the Marine Corps after all, but to take your Dream Girl on a stroll around the block and maybe kiss her under the overhanging elms.

Separates . . . in a holiday mood

It might be a party at home, or visiting week end . . . wherever you are, an assortment of skirts and blouses will go a long way. The designs that we have selected are not complicated to make . . . you might make any one of them in an afternoon. A bright Paisley skirt with black jersey top . . . wear the following night with a gray sweater. A crisp white linen ruffled blouse to wear with tapered velveteen slacks or with a bright cotton satin skirt. We think of a black wool sheath as being a separate because it combines like one. We especially like it with a striped apron or with a fake-fur cape stole. An ankle-length plaid is a perfect fireside skirt . . . with a wrap-around jersey blouse or with a weskit. • By NORA O'LEARY

Wonderful plaid wool in an ankle-length four-piece skirt. Vogue Design No. 6231, 24 to 32 waist. Wrap-around blouse in purple jersey "Easy-to-Make" Design No. 7225. 12 to 18. Wide-wale corduroy weskit. No. 7168. 12 to 20. Wear with scarf.

Crisp white linen blouse with self ruffles in the yoke and at the wrist. Vogue Design No. 7223, 12 to 20. Tapered black velveteen slacks. No. 6822, 24 to 32 waist. Wear with red roses and jeweled slippers. Blouse would also be pretty with skirt of brilliant cotton satin. No. 6430, 24 to 32 waist.

LESLIE GIEL

Imported wool in a Paisley pattern on a red ground makes a lovely skirt. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6910, 24 to 32 waist. The black wool jersey top buttons down each side with jet buttons, "Easy-to-Make" Design No. 7082, 12 to 20. Wear this skirt with a gray cashmere sweater . . . add a Paisley tie.

© VOGUE

MARGARET SOMMERFELD

Black wool sheath dress that lends itself to many changes. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7101. 12 to 20. Wear with fake-fur cape stole lined in blue. Design No. 6914. Small. Medium. Large. Or with a striped satin apron with sequin accents on the pockets, Design No. 7102. Small, Medium and Large.

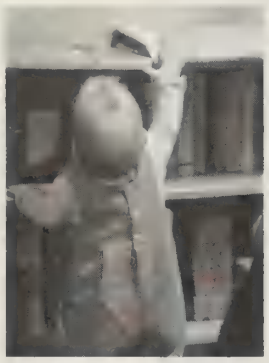
Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ontario. (Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Back and other views, sizes and prices on Page 105

Pat-a-cake lesson: like most ten-monthers, Dana is "biddable," can imitate and remember simple nursery games. When big sister gives her a ball, she'll hold or wave it, but isn't quite grown up enough to manage throw and catch.

Soon books and words will help her out, but now Dana's hands are her tools for learn Through them she discovers what is soft or hard, hollow or solid, shallow or deep. M agile fingers can pinch and pull and pluck; a piece of string is an absorbing playth

Baby's 10th Month: AND TH



Photographed by Dana's father
WAYNE MILLER

BY ten months, your baby will make a profound discovery: namely, that a doughnut has a hole. At the moment, of course, he'll do his experimenting on a wooden play ring, but the principle is the same. And in sticking his finger through the hole, he's getting acquainted with the third dimension. The ten-month-old learns that his orange-juice glass is hollow—his finger goes "in." That a block has depth as well as length and width—he feels it "all over." His hands and fingers are now better trained than ever as he pokes, pinches and grabs. His muscles are so controlled that he can either hold his bottle or use his thumb and first finger to pick up a food crumb, pincers-style. In fact, being free to explore whatever looks exciting is the greatest thing in a ten-monther's life.

Take his unbreakable food bowl, for instance. After it's been spooned clear of vegetables or cereal he may lift it, drop it, bang it around. He's now sitting in his high chair for three man-size meals every day. He's learned to hold down excitement while waiting for food to arrive, but once it does—if he likes the menu—he polishes everything off with dispatch. Spurred on by watching the rest of the family at table, he'll drink an ounce or so of milk from the cup.

An A.M. snack is still in order, but Dana handles her own bottle now, otherwise shares the family's basic three-meal schedule. Weekly gain is about 3 ounces.

Dana can tell up from down, but not right from wrong.

The big family tub is Dana's private ocean: turn on the faucet and she crows with glee. Often she stays in as long as an hour, as yet has no fear of water.

Ten-month-olds learn new tricks in the bath, like to practice creeping or rocking back and forth. Now as later, face-washing is likely to mean trouble.

For the wardrobe something new has been added—the first pair of shoes. Because babies' foot bone are still soft, fit should be checked often with doctor ay's a "must" after breakfast and in the evening—old friends are still the best. learned to turn on the charm, will flirt or play coy with anyone in the family. voices or places are fearsome things, however, may bring on tears or a tantrum.

VORLD'S AT HIS FINGERTIPS

At play, the ten-month-old doesn't like to be left with any single oy for too long a time. He would rather play with two clothespins han one, may demand a switch to something quite different after ifteen minutes or so of concentration. On an afternoon carriage ride, ie may try standing up to see what goes on. For real stepping out, he till needs his parents' hands, but the day is not far off when he'll take charge of his own journeys. Already he has taken charge of one thing—is temper. He uses it occasionally to back up a demand or make a how of resistance to some parental idea. Yet his humor is generally miable and, in the tub, he has a high old time kicking and splashing.

He's still not enthusiastic at all when a stranger is around, particularly one with a loud or unpleasing voice. In his own attempts to talk, he's making more sounds every day and is urning into a name caller. This, however, is generally the sweetest kind of name calling this side of the crib. Just ask the mother who comes up from the laundry and hears for the first time the magic word "Mamma"!

Nothing's safe from his curiosity, and a baby may begin to resent pen at this age.

New mealtime talent: blowing bubbles in the milk, and finger-feeding.

at's up? Probably mischief. The free-creeping ten-th-old is an explorer, forgets where he may ay not roam. Punishment won't teach him yet.

Variety's the spice of a ten-monther's life and one toy won't amuse him long. Less single-minded by now, he likes two at a time and a quick change when bored.

Peace and quiet's no attraction. Being a girl, Dana talks early and often, says "mamma," "dada." very frequently "no," and has even tried to whistle.

NEXT MONTH

Some Changes Made

Pat-a-cake lesson: like most ten-monthers, Dana is "biddable," can imitate and remember simple nursery games. When big sister gives her a ball, she'll hold on, wave it, but isn't quite grown up enough to manage throw and catch.

Soon books and words will help her out, but now Dana's hands are her tools for l
Through them she discovers what is soft or hard, hollow or solid, shallow or dee agile fingers can pinch and pull and pluck; a piece of string is an absorbing pl

Baby's 10th Month: AND T

Photographed by Dana's father
WAYNE MILLER

BY ten months, your baby w make a profound discover namely, that a doughnut has a ho
At the moment, of course, he'll his experimenting on a wooden pl ring, but the principle is the sam
And in sticking his finger through the hole, he's getting acquaint with the third dimension. The ten-month-old learns that his orang juice glass is hollow—his finger goes "in." That a block has depth well as length and width—he feels it "all over." His hands and f gers are now better trained than ever as he pokes, pinches and gra
His muscles are so controlled that he can either hold his bottle use his thumb and first finger to pick up a food crumb, pince style. In fact, being free to explore whatever looks exciting is t greatest thing in a ten-monther's life.

Take his unbreakable food bowl, for instance. After it's be spooned clear of vegetables or cereal he may lift it, drop it, bang around. He's now sitting in his high chair for three man-size me every day. He's learned to hold down excitement while waiting food to arrive, but once it does—if he likes the menu—he polish everything off with dispatch. Spurred on by watching the rest of t family at table, he'll drink an ounce or so of milk from the cu

An A.M. snack is still in order, but Dana handles her own bottle now, otherwise shares the family's basic three-meal schedule. Weekly gain is about 3 ounces.

Dana can tell up from down, but not right from wrong.

The big family tub is Dana's private ocean: turn on the faucet and she crows with glee. Often she stays in as long as an hour, as yet has no fear of water.

Ten-month-olds learn new tricks in the bath, like to practice creeping or rocking back and forth. Now as later, face washing is likely to mean trouble.

For the wardrobe something new has been ad the first pair of shoes. Because babies' foot are still soft, fit should be checked often with d y's a "must" after breakfast and in the evening—old friends are still the best. learned to turn on the charm, will flirt or play coy with anyone in the family. voices or places are fearsome things, however, may bring on tears or a tantrum.

ORLD'S AT HIS FINGERTIPS

At play, the ten-month-old doesn't like to be left with any single y for too long a time. He would rather play with two clothespins an one, may demand a switch to something quite different after teen minutes or so of concentration. On an afternoon carriage ride, e may try standing up to see what goes on. For real stepping out, he ill needs his parents' hands, but the day is not far off when he'll take harge of his own journeys. Already he has taken charge of one thing—is temper. He uses it occasionally to back up a demand or make a ow of resistance to some parental idea. Yet his humor is generally niable and, in the tub, he has a high d time kicking and splashing.

He's still not enthusiastic at all hen a stranger is around, particu-rly one with a loud or unpleasing oice. In his own attempts to talk, he's aking more sounds every day and is rning into a name caller. This, how-ver, is generally the sweetest kind of ame calling this side of the crib. st ask the mother who comes up om the laundry and hears for the rst time the magic word "Mamma"!

Nothing's safe from his curiosity, and a baby may begin to resent pen at this age.

New mealtime talent: blowing bubbles in the milk, and finger-feeding.

t's up? Probably mischief. The free-creeping ten-h-old is an explorer, forgets where he may ay not roam. Punishment won't teach him yet.

Variety's the spice of a ten-monther's life and one toy won't amuse him long. Less single-minded by now, he likes two at a time and a quick change when bored.

Peace and quiet's no attraction. Being a girl, Dana talks early and often, says "mamma," "dada." very frequently "no," and has even tried to whistle.

NEXT MONTH

Some Changes Made

"It's your duty to find me a husband," she said.

SIGHT

The first kiss was supposed to be the last one, but somehow it wasn't.

By LAURENCE KIRK

DOROTHEA is the youngest (forty-one, that is) and the only unmarried one of my three cousins for whom I have the misfortune to be lawyer and trustee. She is plain, dumpy and difficult. At the same time she still has traces of humor and humanity in her, both noticeably lacking in her elder sisters.

I could always tell when Dorothea was going to be troublesome by the way she took off her gloves. That morning when she came to my office she not only took them off in an aggressive manner, but then laid them crisscross on her knee. I knew that that was a very bad sign.

"It's about father's will," she began. "I want you to explain it all to me very carefully."

"Surely, Dorothea," I protested, "we needn't go into that again. I did all that when he died four years ago. And once or twice since!"

"I know, Charlie, it's very trying for you. But my memory is getting very bad; I may have forgotten something. Besides, I like my lawyer to earn his fees."

With her gloves crossed like that on her knee, I knew that the only way to get rid of Dorothea was to do as she wanted.

"Very well," I said. "Of course there's nothing wrong with your memory, Dorothea. In fact, it's a darned sight too good. However, this is the position. Your father—my Uncle Hamish—left approximately one hundred thousand pounds. He left it in trust for the benefit of yourself and your elder sisters Rose and Janet. That means that you get the income but cannot touch the capital."

"I know all that," Dorothea said curtly. "What I want to check is the bit about the division of the income."

"Very well, I'll go over that again too. Of the hundred thousand pounds that your father left, some forty thousand was invested in gilt-edged securities and the rest in the Anglo-Bombay Oil Company. He directed that all the revenue from the gilt-edged should go to you, while the dividends from the Anglo-Bombays were to be divided equally between Rose and Janet."

"Why?" asked Dorothea.

"Because he wanted you in particular to be secure. You were unmarried and you had looked after him for the last three years of his life after your mother died and your sisters got married. He had every reason to make some special provision for you."

"I know." Dorothea rearranged her gloves. "But he needn't have done it in such a silly way."

"I don't agree that it was a silly way, Dorothea. You have your security. The position certainly has changed since he died, but he had to consider the position as it appeared (Continued on Page 156)

ILLUSTRATED BY DOROTHY MONET

our own young marrieds

In this fourth article by young marrieds on the JOURNAL's staff—a collection of Christmas-gift ideas that are out of the usual groove, and planned with an eye to the budget.

The Russes specialize in family stockings.

"Probably everyone's first childhood memory of Christmas," says Nancy Russe, "is hanging the largest stocking you could find. (We had permanent stocking nails in our fireplace, which I began fingering dreamily around the middle of July.)" For fireplace hanging, you might try a knitted sock in broad red, green and white stripes; a large felt sock, the edges pinked all around, lavishly trimmed with felt trees, bells, and candy canes; or a fabric stocking, trimmed with wide contrasting rickrack, bell on the toe, with a matching beanbag to tuck in—all three, with names at the top, to be used every year. For sending: a tiny felt sock, trimmed with gold beads, that will hold a small greeting card; whole thing fits into an envelope.

This Christmas, like Helen O'Donnell, who is assistant to our beauty editor, you might try making small-touch accessories for sisters and cousins and aunts—for instance, these two shaped belts made from 3"-wide strips of colored felt, trimmed as shown here with fringe loops and scrolls of braid; snap-fastened. Or you might line a scrap of mink with red jersey to wear as a necklet, the long ends to tie in a bow. Next, two headbands made from bicycle clips (plastic, from 5 & 10). Both are infinitely becoming and couldn't be easier to make. One is covered with velvet tubing (available ready-made by the yard in dime stores) and veiled; the other covered with a large flat velvet ribbon bow, the loops and ends extending down to cover both sides.

Helen O'Donnell tests her handiwork.

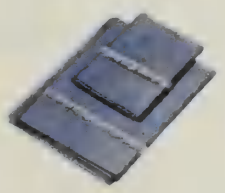
Rod Wilson approves a mitt-sized holder.

Marion Wilson, assistant to the JOURNAL's pattern editor, is handy with a needle: if you are also—some ideas for you. Make a man's apron (to be his own exclusive) in faded blue denim bound with red. A large red-and-white cops-and-robbers neckerchief becomes a pocket in front, another a quilted glovelike pot holder. Or, next in line, two aprons (too pretty, we think, to take off when dinner is ready), one in flowered chintz stitched onto a grosgrain ribbon sash, pot holder to match; the other in gingham gathered on a satin ribbon. (Shop in upholstery as well as dress-goods departments for unusual fabrics.) Lastly, if you're really expert, you might buy a simple pattern, make a man's smoking jacket in a handsome, bright tartan plaid.

The Smiths' tree displays Nora's own creation

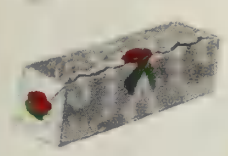
Nora O'Leary Smith makes an unusual table or mantel decoration by coring the centers of three red apples, inserting thick white candles, placing bright green sprigs of spruce around the base. Another unusual idea—inside a small glass bell (Victorian vintage or restaurant type for "sous cloche" specialties), a tiny tree made from a spruce bough, trimmed with pearls, cutouts of shiny paper, beading. For a party, for a front hall, a small tree trimmed with lots of small inexpensive gifts; red ribbon for women, green for men, one for each guest as he comes in. Nora makes, to hang on her big tree, small felt cones trimmed with sequins, cotton ice cream; a little felt boot trimmed with beading; a felt candleholder and candle, sequin-trimmed.

. . make it a Merry Christmas



Betty trims many of the presents she buys.

An idea is to buy untrimmed presents, make them unusual with a special touch of handwork, supplied by you. Buy a plain blouse, like the one pictured, that Betty Gray is working on, make it into something special by whipping on a pretty edging around collar, cuffs, down the front. Buy (or knit) a sweater, trim it with cancan rows of shirred black Val-type lace around the collar and sleeves. (This is a new variation on the sweater-decorating theme, and very effective, we think.) Or you might buy a pastel sheet and pillowcase, trim them with a row of white lacy edging. Lastly, a velvet pincushion (they come in pear and apple and other fruit shapes), trim it with tiny flowers, narrow velvet ribbon, add a pretty stickpin or two.



Dawn Norman, our beauty editor, likes unusual wrappings. Here's a basket filled with gifts for a man—might be pencils, pads of paper, desk supplies—that he can use later as a waste-basket, or for some mysterious purpose of his own. Trim the top with pine branches, ribbons. Next to it, a small gift (bottle of lavender water?) done up in an old-fashioned lace-paper doily, flower label at each end. You might tie up some presents with a hobo stick, in a square of red material, fringed, that can be used as a tablecloth afterward. The exteriors of the next two packages she's done up in bright papers, trimmed with red and white carnations, tiny sparkle pins, bright velvet ribbon, a rhinestone buckle, all very wearable when Christmas is over.

The Normans tie up packages together.

Miriam Skardon shops for inspirations.

Here are some special and inexpensive gifts-with-an-idea that you can buy. First a Christmas-tree plate for cookies or candy that could even be a mantel decoration at Christmastime. Give one each year till a set of six or eight is completed. A husband with foresight might include two tickets to a show in a plastic box that contains a red velvet rose and a tiny jeweled pin, for his wife to wear to the theater the night of the show. You might keep the next wedding announcement from a special friend, water-color a rose across it, buy a pretty gold frame and send it back, come Christmas, for them to hang on their wall as a permanent memento. Beautiful and useful on a dressing table, a cologne bottle and ash-tray set flowered and spattered with gold.

Dele Morris has many pet ideas for things to make for Christmas—like this child's plastic tooth mug and brush (from 5 & 10) hand-painted (by you) with daisies and his/her name. Or hanging a star-patterned kitchen colander, trimmed with ribbon and greens, from your hall light; the light shines through in patterns—very pretty. Decorating plain tiles from the dime store in bright colors (pick a simple design—all art-supply stores have a special, inexpensive paint for tile surfaces that is durable and easy to work with). Make a quadruple candlestick from a polished block of wood (you can get a piece from your lumber company, finish it yourself); bore four 1″ holes in the top to hold candles; tie on pretty bows at base for a festive touch.

ROBERTA JOEL

Dele Morris' craft skills come in handy.

Part-time

He could justify this procedure readily enough because, in return for helping with her tomatoes, he'd have his typist in far better condition the next morning.

He hired help—charming help. That was Mistake No. 1. Then he took her home—

By MARJORIE CARTER

DAVID BROWN looked out his office window at the flat calm which was Middlevillage's Main Street upon that beautiful May morning, and waited. If he waited long enough, someone would come to paint his name upon the office door, someone else would come to answer his advertisement for a typist—he had had one telephone call about that already—and ultimately he would be in business. Mr. Brown was a tall, slenderly built young man with sandy hair, which he wore crew-cut, and reflective brown eyes. He was reflecting upon Vera's suggestions, if you could call them that, in connection with the staff he would be hiring, as the eastern representative of Fabulex.

His fiancée had pointed out that for various sound reasons, such as impressing Middlevillage with the seriousness and stability of this newcomer in their midst, and acquiring a suitable nucleus about which to build, he should select for his first employee a woman of mature years.

"Can you tell me who around here is looking for a typist, please?" inquired a voice behind him.

David looked around, and sprang up, kicking over his chair. "Why, I am. I—er—I advertised. That is, I . . . advertised." This, he told himself firmly, would not do. He was behaving like an idiot. He must pull himself together. "Come in, won't you," he said, pulling himself together, "and sit down, if you will, over there."

She sat, looking at him gently. She was not a woman of mature years. On the contrary, she was perhaps the youngest thing he had ever seen in his life, with sleek, shiny hair which she probably brushed a hundred times every night before going to bed, and the way those black lashes of hers sort of whisked up at the outside corners of her eyes was a thing that he had never seen on any other girl. It was a question whether or not they were natural.

"Have you had any experience?" he asked.

"Oh, yes." Nice voice too. "I've had three jobs, and I have the most utterly respectable reasons for leaving each of them, and I can positively inundate you with overwhelming references practically at the drop of a hat ——"

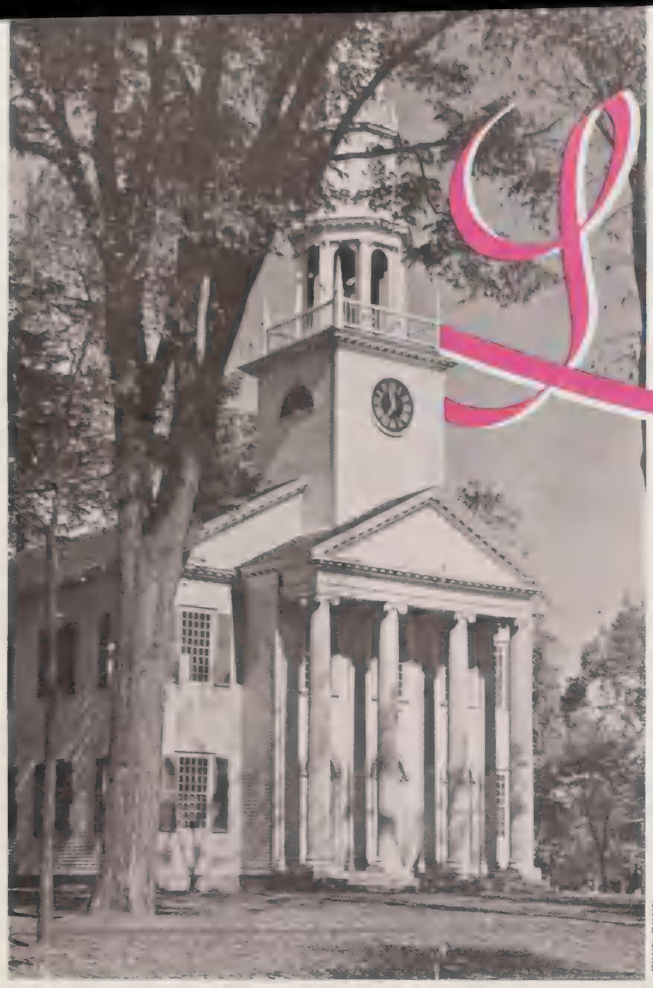
"Oh, hey! Whoa! Wait!" protested David. "We'll come to the references all in good time. Miss—uh—I didn't catch your name when you telephoned ——"

(Continued on Page 170)

job

Merry Christmas to all

BACK in September I met a friend of mine who said, "I've been shopping all day, and am I tired!" So I said, being all curiosity, "What'd ya get?" She said, "Oh, just some Christmas cards and wrappings!" For most folks, that sort of happy confusion sets in almost as soon as summer vacations are over. But as for me, it begins December twenty-fourth. That date is when I shop. Also wrap. And as for cards! Don't let's talk about that. With things the way they are, we better get on with the main business of the big day—the Christmas dinner.



Once on a time. There was a time when tradition demanded—and got—an oyster stew to start off a Thanksgiving and Christmas dinner. Then there was a vogue for oysters on the half shell. Folks fought to open the wretched locked and bolted shells, then spilled all the juice and spattered the oysters with bits of shell; and gingerly the guests, with furtive glances around to see what others were doing, got away with the oysters and resolved "Never again." But nowadays the oysterman deftly opens the oysters. No juice is lost, the oysters arrive on beds of cracked ice, and all your troubles are over before they start. Times change, to coin a phrase that I hope will become part of our language.

Most modern of all. Most modern because it's most unusual, and leaves you with a free hand to plan from oysters on, is caviar. And if caviar isn't on your (Continued on Page 166)

STUART-POWLER

by Ann Batchelder
Menu
Caviar Appetizer — Melba Toast
Roast Turkey — Wild-Rice Stuffing
Gravy
Mashed Sweet Potatoes with Chestnuts
Green Beans and Onions
Relishes
Ice-Cream Snowballs
Tutti-Frutti Sauce
Cookies
Coffee
(Planned for 6)

Line a day

FRED BOND

Old New England Church, Litchfield, Connecticut

CHURCH ON THE HILL

Here is nobility in every line;
Drenched in silence, it stands aloof, alone.
Here they come seeking who would find divine
Comfort. Asking for bread, denying the stone.

1 Have you read it? If not, you probably will. It's quite a book—pro and con—THE MAN FROM INDEPENDENCE. Know who that might be? Jonathan Daniels wrote it. More than qualified. A wonderful job.

2 For the trundle-bed set, the safest Christmas-tree decorations are just those little 5¢ red-and-white-striped-paper rolls of peppermint candy rings fastened to the tree with paper clips—low branches, easy to reach.

3 Get some grapefruit—pink ones are pretty nice. Pink *in*side, not out. Allow half a fruit for each person. Scoop out the center and leave the sections as usual. Fill with shrimp or lobster meat cut fine and mixed with mayonnaise. This is a meal opener you'll favor.

4 Making those old-time Banbury tarts this season? Save out some of the mixture after the tart baking; core half a dozen Northern Spy apples, fill with the Banbury mixture and bake until done. Most fun is to cover with a meringue and brown in the oven.

5 Add a handful of raisins to hot sweetened apple-sauce—spread over hot croutons—sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and chopped nuts—and serve for dessert.

6 Ever hear of Connecticut hamburgers? They get a dash of nutmeg as well as salt and pepper. The Nutmeg State—remember?

7 Out for dinner the other night. Lemon pie for dessert—absolutely perfect. Flavor, just a delicate brown top as even as a yard of silk. And you ate the filling with a spoon—a fork was just for mopping-up operations. And that was the way it should be. That pie spoke of genius. With a spoon! Another masterpiece of this cook is pumpkin-chiffon pie with a gingersnap crust. Worth trying.

8 And I'll tell you something else. It has to do with hot apple pie. Take ¼ cup butter or margarine, work in about 1 cup powdered sugar. When nice and creamy, add a little nutmeg and 1½ tablespoons molasses. Spread on a buttered platter to chill. Cut into squares and put a square—maybe two—on each piece of pie. Pie hot—squares cold.

9 Waldorf salad and coleslaw team up in fine shape. To 3 cups shredded cabbage add 2 red apples, diced, ⅓ cup salted peanuts and ½ cup raisins. Toss all together with mayonnaise and add a dash of lemon juice.

10 The English call them "savouries," and that's exactly what they are. Here are three American versions of the word. First course or appetizers for us, the last bite after a serious meal for those hardy souls overseas.

11 Roll large shrimps in beaten egg, dust with flour. Have a frying pan ready with hot fat in it, seasoned with pepper, paprika and a favorite herb. Sauté the shrimps in this and serve hot with the usual toothpick convenience.

12 Now for another—and you'll use these bite-size numbers many times in the days ahead. Take as much finely chopped cooked chicken liver as you think you'll need. Bind it with crushed hard-boiled-egg yolk. Season well, not forgetting a little lemon juice.

13 Part Two: Now spread the mixture on strips of bacon, roll them up and fasten—toothpicks again. Grill the rolls until crisp. These go like feathers in a high wind. So have a lot.

14 I said I'd give you three savories and I will. Butter thin slices of bread and trim off all the crusts. Cut into triangles. Put a slice of Cheddar cheese and two anchovies on half of the triangles. Now spread the other half with mayonnaise, put the triangles together, press down firmly and grill them until both sides are brown and crisp.

15 A wonderful party dish—little squab chickens in individual casseroles. (Can be done in one large casserole.) They are first steamed and boned, then stuffed with cooked rice—and then cooked in cream in the casserole. Serve with large sautéed mushrooms, asparagus tips and artichoke hearts.

16 Another word about stuffing for squab chickens. (So called because they're small.) Wild rice makes a delicious stuffing, but best of all make a rice pilaf. Fry some chopped onions to the transparent stage. Use butter for this. Now add rice—the quick-cooking rice is swell—keep it moving until well soaked with the butter. Now add chicken broth and cook to make a nice stuffing.

17 Answer to query: "Set your mind at rest, Isabella. To make split-pea soup, you do not have to split the peas, one by one by hand, as you tried to do. They come all split, so better luck next time."

18 Simple but good. Coconut blancmange made in individual molds served with raspberry sauce. Or puréed apricots. What about it?

19 Next time you bake a small ham or a ham butt, try basting it with one of those fruit nectars. Apricot would be my choice.

20 Have I mentioned salads? I have not. So I feel free to tell you of this one. Get—if you haven't got it now—a can of asparagus tips. Drain them. In about ¼ cup of the liquor, soften 1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin. Now heat ¾ cup asparagus liquor and add the softened gelatin. When the gelatin is dissolved, add 1 cup boiling chicken broth. Very clear. Have 2 cups of liquor.

21 Part II: Season this aspic pretty high. Chill the aspic part way, and when partly set add the asparagus tips beautifully arranged. Also disposed artistically are 2 cups seedless white grapes. Unmold, when ready, on a chilled platter in a bed of greens. Serve with mayonnaise tinted a delicate green. Bridge-party stuff, this.

22 Something straight from Paris: potato cakes, believe it or not! Grate raw potatoes on the coarse side of the grater. Season with salt, pepper and grated onion to taste. Make into thin cakes or one big cake and bake on a griddle generously greased with bacon fat, slowly first, then increase heat until golden brown on both sides. These are truly delicious.

23 They don't eat apple pie all the time up in New England. Custard is an old favorite, and as for fancy pies—well, here is a strawberry-custard pie that's a honey. Line a deep pie plate with very rich flaky pastry. Extend and crimp the edges. Now with a really prodigal hand spread this with strawberry (or raspberry) jam. Over this pour a custard made with 6 eggs, 1 quart milk, sugar and vanilla—so you can really taste it. Strain your custard. Bake as usual.

24 Finishing touch: Cool the pie carefully. Cover the custard with more jam. Finish your pie with a deep cover of whipped cream, flavored with vanilla. Chill and serve cold. There will be none left over.

25 Don't forget to give the old-fashioned but always delicious—if done right by—Indian pudding long, slow cooking. Low heat. Stir it once in a while and add a few tablespoons of cream when you stir. Serve it hot with plain or whipped cream or vanilla ice cream. Better use a big dish and make plenty.

26 In the chafing dish for a buffet supper, what could be finer than creamed oysters, with mountains of crisp toast to serve them on?

27 A justly popular starter for dinner, before the soup, is a cocktail of avocado balls dressed with mayonnaise mixed with French mustard. Taste to get right. Lobster or shrimp with the avocado is an inspiration of pure genius. Chill it well.

28 There's something about molasses and cream that's particularly good with sliced bananas. One tablespoon to a cup of cream is enough.

29 Okra suits me best when French fried. Parboil young pods until almost tender in a little salted water. Drain dry. Dip in batter and fry until crisp and brown.

30 A new wrinkle in a relish for the holiday table. Put 5 small sweet pickles through the food chopper with ½ pound raw cranberries and 1 orange (quartered, without seeds). Add ⅓ cup sugar, mix and let stand in refrigerator overnight.

31 Now all I need is a raft of postage stamps and I'm pretty well set for Christmas, and hope you are the same. So good night and have a wonderful time. I'll be seeing you, come the New Year. Merry Christmas!

by Ann Batchelder

Let Soup give you more Christmas-Time

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

BY Anne Marshall

So much to do: so little time to do it—with Christmas 'round the corner! There's all that shopping to do—and the house to clean and a fruit cake to bake and the youngsters' clothes to freshen and Christmas cards to address and the silver to clean and—meals to get!

Yes, meals to get, and that's where maybe I can help—with some practical ideas. Soup can be your salvation, truly. It's so nourishing and so appealing to winter-sharp appetites. It's quick on the table, too, and very easy on the budget.

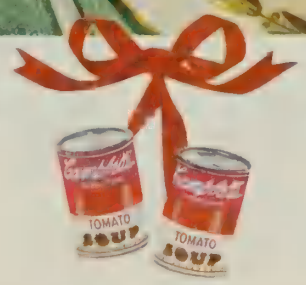
Biggest Soup-eating Month

Many of you already know how good hot soup helps "save the day" during December. That's why you've made December the biggest soup-eating month of the year. Here on this page are three fine soups to build meals around these Christmas-rushed days. You'll find suggestions, too, for what to serve with each one, to round out a lunch or a supper. So—Merry Christmas!

EN PEA is a grand choice. The tempting taste of green —in a soup enriched with butter.

Lunches or Suppers built around Green Pea Soup

una Fish Sandwich	Hot Apple Pie, Cheese
Omelet, Ginger Cakes	Codfish Cakes and Spinach
ken Salad, Bran Muffins	Scrambled Eggs, Hot Biscuits



ETABLE is a favorite with both Dad and the children—of bright garden vegetables in a homey beef stock.

Lunches or Suppers built around Vegetable Soup

and Beans, Green Salad	Cold Roast, Lettuce Wedges
mon Salad Sandwich	Hot Coffee Cake, Grapefruit
orf Salad, Cheese Toast	Baked Corned Beef Hash

TOMATO is "the soup most folks like best"—luscious tomatoes blended with fine butter to velvet smoothness.

Lunches or Suppers built around Tomato Soup

Ham-Biscuits, Pear Salad	Cheese Soufflé, Relish Tray
Hot Potato Salad, Apricots	Sausage Cakes, Apple Rings
Sardine Sandwich, Cole Slaw	Nut Waffles and Jam

Your tender care means so much to baby's daily comf

His Thinner Skin needs your Devoted Care

You change his little sleeping gowns frequently during the day. Anything that touches his skin must be fresh and free of even a suspicion of moisture. You are his only safeguard against discomfort, you know, and your baby's skin really is thinner than yours. Skin studies show it would chafe more quickly, be "injured" more easily.

Your choice of baby's bathroom tissue should be guided by 3 "tender skin" qualities. "Old linen" softness that doesn't chafe . . . high absorbency for clean, clean cleansing . . . and just the right strength to resist tearing or shredding even when wet.

More mothers every day are finding this ide combination of "tender skin" qualities in ScotTissu You can trust ScotTissue's "old linen" softness give your baby's skin gentlest care. Up to 6 month try lining baby's diaper with 20 or more sheets fluffed-up ScotTissue. Just flush away the soil tissue. Easier for both of you.

"ScotTissue," "Soft as old linen," Reg. U. S. Pat. C

SCOTTISSUE IS SOFT AS OLD LINEN

A BREATH OF AIR

(Continued from Page 38)

sion to marry their daughters in due sea- there was nothing uncommon in that, to Pheasant it was life made suddenly d. She thought Valentine pale and un- resting; for her, any male should be full- ded, noisy and rumbustious, especially male who was to marry Charis, whom loved. But we doan' ketch no husbands h. said Pheasant philosophically. Valen- was a good deal better than no one.

You understand, Pheasant. It's more ortant for you than anyone; you talk to sy most."

Yes, sah."

And don't you go talking to her now."

Sah! Jest as if Ah'd think ——"

That will do, Pheasant." Mr. van mis hoped that it would do. Pheasant bridling her neck with indignation. ow, listen to me," said Mr. van Loomis.

Is it the wind machine?" asked Niu.

Mr. van Loomis nodded. "The machine n't go by itself on the wind," he said. "It n't go without the oil that it eats."

We have plenty of good nut oil," said u.

Not that oil," said Mr. van Loomis and lained the ways of airplanes. "I want to it in a safe place until a ship comes."

Why should a ship come?" asked Luck, Niu looked at Mr. van Loomis and per- ly understood him.

No ship will come," said Niu.

Oh," said Luck, understanding.

Now, listen," said Mr. van Loomis in, and he outlined his scheme to them. hen the lighthouse ketch comes," said . van Loomis, "we can tell the young las it is the day for a bow-and-arrow con- t at the back of the hill. We can say there a wildcat hunt, or let them wash gold in streams. One year, two years might ss."

But first we must hide the wind ma- ne," said Niu.

To keep it safe," said Mr. van Loomis.

To keep it safe," said Niu without ex- ession.

u had always been compliant. Now, ldenly, Mr. van Loomis wondered what uld happen if he were not. Then Niu be- n, in a soft undertone, to argue with Luck. r. van Loomis waited.

Might do," said Luck. "But first we st get Prem." Prem was the strongest immer on the island.

We shall get Prem and all the divers," d Mr. van Loomis. "Come."

Now? At this time?" asked Luck.

Now," said Mr. van Loomis, and Niu ded, "While the young Tsulas are sleep- g."

In the doorway Mr. van Loomis stopped. Niu," he said, "tell Filipino he is not to lk."

Both Niu and Mr. van Loomis knew that Filipino was inflamed with the idea of the Water Star and the talk of Valentine and McGinty. Mr. van Loomis had seen him at luncheon stand transfixed with a bowl of soup in his hand, almost letting it run over on the floor. Twice, absent-mindedly, he had taken away Mr. van Loomis's plate before he had finished. Niu looked at Mr. van Loomis and nodded. They both knew that Mr. van Loomis would have to keep a tight hand on Filipino.

MR. VAN LOOMIS wondered whether Niu thought this new plan a rightful part of Mr. van Loomis's power, or if he were shocked at a breach of island hospitality and manners. He looked at him again and, as always, he did not know what Niu was thinking. He looked at the old man, standing politely before him, his cloth looped and pleated round him, his hands folded, waiting. Niu's eyes were indecipherable under their wrinkled lids. He looked immeasurably dignified and patient; and I have been giving him orders for twenty years, thought Mr. van Loomis. I have made this old chieftain my servant, and I have been in the hollow of his hand. Niu had given him nothing but courtesy and care, but Mr. van Loomis suddenly felt cold. The thought had come to him again of what would have happened to Charis if he had died here. He had not the least idea; she might have been well cared for, honored, thought Mr. van Loomis, but on the island a woman was owned by her man; she was a bearer of children, a mender of nets, a cook, a worker and a plaything. Mr. van Loomis felt weak and giddy. He thought now that Niu would be ruthless in getting his own way. What was that way? Mr. van Loomis did not know, and he thought that Niu embodied the island itself, with its balmy surface and unsounded depths, its balms and breezes, its gentle comprehensible customs and its hidden thoughts and rites.

There were dark things on the island. Every now and again someone died mysteriously and quickly, and a little dart, fine as a needle, was found in his neck or arm or back. Once Mr. van Loomis had come across a scene he was not meant to see: in the river, far up the mountain, above the temple, where he seldom went, he had found a bloodstained stone; this was where the sacrifices he had been unable to stop were made.

Now the back of his neck was wet and he had to use his handkerchief. He was thinking how sure, how exact Niu's hands were; they could do the most delicate things. Mr. van Loomis had seen them rig a walnut-shell boat with a cobweb-fine spun-silk rigging for Charis; he had seen Niu win from all the young men at the archery feasts with his great bow and arrow. Mr. van

(Continued on Page 70)

"I said, 'It's a cold day!'"

YOU Can Have A Lovelier Complexion in 14 Days with Palmolive Soap, Doctors Prove!

NOT JUST A PROMISE... but actual proof from 36 leading skin specialists that Palmolive Soap facials can bring new complexion beauty to 2 out of 3 women Never before these tests have there been such sensational beauty results! Yes, scientific tests on 1285 women—supervised by 36 leading skin specialists—proved conclusively that in 14 days regular facials with Palmolive Soap—using nothing but Palmolive—bring lovelier complexions to 2 out of 3 women.

Here's the easy method:

1. Wash your face three times daily with Palmolive Soap—each time massaging its beautifying lather onto your skin for sixty seconds.
2. Now rinse and dry—that's all.

Remarkable results were proved on women of all ages, with all types of skin. Proof that Palmolive facials really work to bring you a lovelier complexion! Start your Palmolive facials tonight.

Look For These Complexion Improvements in 14 Days!

- Fresher, Brighter Complexions!
- Less oiliness!
- Added softness, smoothness—even for dry skin!
- Complexions clearer, more radiant!
- Fewer tiny blemishes—incipient blackheads!

For Tub or Shower
Get Big Bath Size Palmolive!

DOCTORS PROVE PALMOLIVE'S BEAUTY RESULTS!

Great new 1951 G-E

General Electric Refrigerators give you much more storage space than most refrigerators now in use . . . yet they occupy no larger floor area!

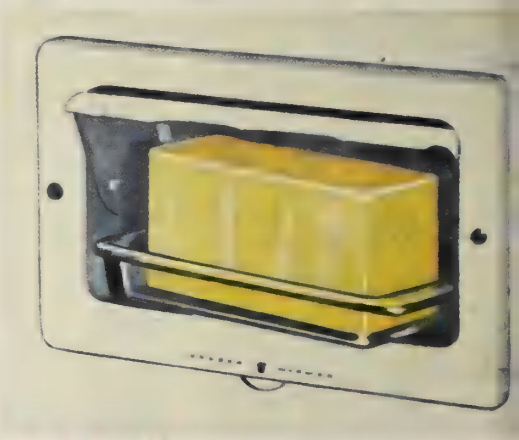
Space for everything...

. . . and everything's in its place. All the food you see here can easily and quickly be placed in one of the new 10-cu-ft G-E Refrigerator-Food Freezer Combinations!

There's so much space for meats, fruits and vegetables in the fresh-food compartment . . . and the food freezer stores so many, many packages of frozen food . . . that you need shop only when you feel in the mood!

The new General Electric Refrigerators give you 25% to 50% more storage space than most refrigerators now in use, occupying the same floor area. Furthermore, there's a special place for everything. No more groping to find exactly what you want!

These new, wonderful convenience features are standard equipment in all General Electric Refrigerator-Food Freezer Combinations!

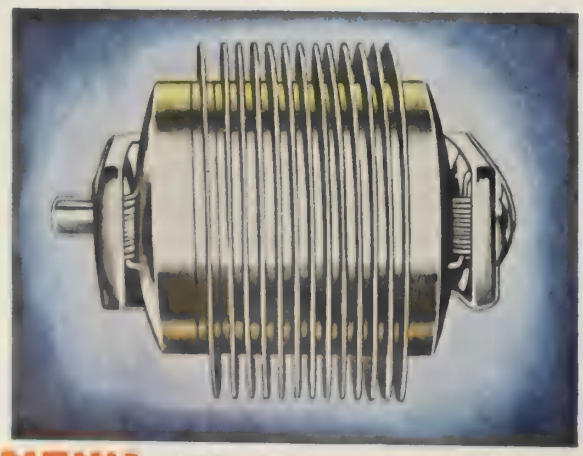


NEW! REDI-CUBE ICE TRAYS

Now, for the first time, you can pick out cubes singly, and return the rest—still in the dividers—to the refrigerator. Cubes will not drop out! It's another General Electric first!

NEW! VEGETABLE ROLLA-DRAWERS

New Rolla-Drawers, on rubber-tired wheels, roll quietly! Easy to keep clean. Dewy cold in drawers helps keep vegetables garden-fresh! Each drawer holds 12½ quarts.

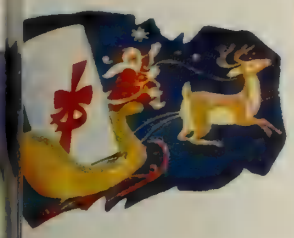


SPECIAL BUTTER CONDITIONER

No more hard butter! Special conditioner, mounted refrigerator door, has a special electric element that kee a full pound of butter at best spreading temperature!

NEW! STURDY ALUMINUM SHELVES

Long-lasting aluminum shelves, which will not rust, are highly polished and slide forward easily. Notice the new, narrow wire spacing which helps prevent even the smallest bottles from tipping! A real advantage!



NEW! IMPROVED MOTOR AND INSULATION

To assure more quiet operation than ever, there's a new G-E motor and a new spring mounting! New, higher-efficiency Fiberglas insulation in the cabinet makes a worthwhile reduction in operating cost!

Refrigerato

THIS CHRISTMAS, surprise that lovely wife one of the most wonderful refrigerators mone General Electric Refrigerator-Food Freezer that has space for everything . . . that assures you o economical operation year after year.

No other refrigerator gives you all the special con tures shown on these pages . . . no other refrigerator c

Here are two dif

each the finest of its type in the

NEW! In this model NHX-10H there's a separate refrigerator plus a separate freezer. Each has its own door. In addition to the conveniences on the opposite page, it has these features:

EW! Alnico Magnets grip e door shut, seal it com- etely all the way around. No ore latches. No more slam!

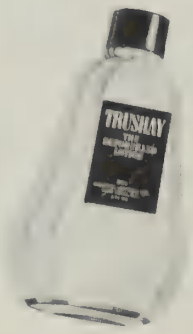
Frost does not build up in the fresh-food section. Uncovered foods do not dry out! Foods remain crisp and fresh longer!

NEW! Foot pedal opens lower door. Hands not needed to open the Alnico Magnetic Door to the fresh-food section!

NEW GENERAL ELECTRIC REFRIGERAT

GENERAL

leads a double life . . .



BEWITCHING YOU—the lovely holiday hostess—your hands so soft and feminine—beauty-insured with Trushay! And remember—Trushay's "beforehand" protection is only part of its magic. It's a luxurious, quick softener, too—a finishing touch you'll want to use any time! Begin today to use Trushay!

l" lotion . . . guards your hands y water!

st stroke on ngs for hours

Wonderful for chapped hands! What soothing relief! Oil-rich Trushay rescues hands from roughness and redness. Keeps them comfortable!

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

TO CLEAN AND SHINE POTS AND PANS, simply reach for a pad of S.O.S. Truly, it is a magic combination of sturdy, interwoven fibres and grease-dissolving soap. That's why S.O.S. cu grease, scours and polishes—all at one tim Use it every day—every time you cook.

Meet the most useful cleanser there is!

S.O.S saves time - saves work - all around the house

TO CLEAN STARCH OFF IRONS keep a box of S.O.S. handy in the laundry. S.O.S. easily removes starch that's burnt on and keeps your iron brightly polished

TO CLEAN STAINS FROM WHITE RUBBER, use S.O.S. Quick and safe S.O.S. removes scuff-marks, grime, discoloration from white rubber overshoes and white-wall tires, too.

TO CLEAN GRIME OFF ASH TRAYS, no cleanser is quite li S.O.S. Its handy oval shape cleans hard-to-cle corners. Ideal on glass, metal or pottery ash tra

TO CLEAN GREASE FROM BROILERS, [illegible] The soap in each pad cuts grease, the fibres scour it away. In fact, with S.O.S. grease hasn't a chance!

TO CLEAN SPATTERS FROM STOVE TOPS, the most useful cleanser is S.O.S. Watch it clean the other metal parts of your stove: grills, griddles and oven racks.

TO CLEAN STAIN FROM COFFEE-MAKERS, remember S.O. in the YELLOW and red box at your grocer's. Clea coffee-makers inside and out, like new, like mag hose who are strong swimmers," he added, nore thoughtfully.

© The S.O.S Company, Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A. • S.O.S Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

(Continued from Page 70)

There was silence. The boats rode with the lane on the calm water.

"If the wind machine were safely inside he cave," said Mr. van Loomis, "I should ive two bullocks for the picnic day tomorow, and some sheep. We could have a east."

"We have never been in the inner cave," aid one of the men.

"My father went," said another young an, indicating his father beside him. "He ays the bats are as big as eagles."

"Boys are afraid of bats, of course," said Ir. van Loomis.

The young man scowled, but the others aughed.

Then one of the boatmen stood up and, ith a shout, dived over the side of the canoe nd swam round the aeroplane. Luck began o fasten the ropes, and Prem threw them own to the divers, who caught them one by ne, treading water, swarming round the Vater Star. When the ropes were ready Mr. an Loomis came down into the canoe, where e stood on the prow and held up his hand to uck and Prem. Prem dived into the sea nd swam round the men, exhorting them, hile Luck stood up on the Water Star, eeping a watch on her direction and to see he wings and tail were clear. She swung lowly round on the water, the men easing er gently as Prem led them toward the enance to the cave.

The ropes swept down into the sea like ater snakes, the weeds ent and waved and rose gain round the swimmers' gs, and when one of them ent down and touched ottom, a funnel of gold nd spread upward in a loud, and shoals of small right fish fled in front of im. The men came up to reathe, shaking drops om their heads and flat rown faces, spitting water through their ps and squeezing out their noses between eir fingers and thumbs, and dived again.

Slowly the Water Star moved across the ea until she came opposite the entrance to ne cave, and there the men rested, steadyng the plane, while Luck and Prem talked ogether, measuring the distance and the race f the tide with their eyes. Mr. van Loomis id not interfere; if anyone could, these wo would get the plane into the cave.

He could see the difficulty: each wave, ith its surf, rushed with its force into the ave, and met the force of the fall and ebbed ack; could the men be quick enough to ride n with the plane on the wave and hold her gainst the stronger rush back? That was hat Prem and Luck were arguing. Then he aw them divide, and Prem, with half the en, left the Water Star and swam into the ave.

Mr. van Loomis beckoned the young oatman who was left with him and, stepping into one of the small boats, told him o follow Prem.

"Tsula, be careful," shouted Luck. "Take are we don't sweep you down."

Mr. van Loomis raised his hand; he eant to land on the rock ridges at the side f the cave. His man sent the boat forward ith a strong sweep, raised his paddle, eadying it, and he and Mr. van Loomis ode in the boat on a flying wave crest and ere hurled into the cave, washed round so hat the boat was almost on its side, and ere brought up with a strong steadying orce, held by Prem and two boatmen.

HERE was an abrupt change of light: the ave was shadowed; the light from outside ame in through the arch at its mouth and truck upward again from the water on its oor, so that its ceiling was an arched reflecion of wave light, shadowed by deep rock revices. The whole air was filled with spray nd the thundering noise of the fall. Now Mr. van Loomis saw with relief that the fall as not so heavy as he had feared; it was e enclosed space in which it fell that gave it its enormous roar. It was, all the same, a heavy fall of water, wide enough for a river. Mr. van Loomis measured its width with his eye to see if he had been right and the Water Star would go through it.

"Will she go through?" he shouted.

Prem dived off the ledge where he had stood and swam to the fall, struggled in the water, dived again and came up behind it. Mr. van Loomis could see the dark shape of his figure veiled and sometimes blotted out behind the water; then Prem dived again and came back gasping.

"She will go, if we can get her through," he said. "But it comes down like a boulder on your head."

NOW Mr. van Loomis saw the plan that Prem had made with Luck. He saw why they had divided the men. Those in the cave were standing along the narrow rock ledges at the sides; as the others rode with the Water Star in on the rush of the wave, these would leap to meet her and hold her. Long ropes were passed in from the plane outside, and men stood, their feet braced ready to hold firm. Others would dive in and help the men who came in with her. Mr. van Loomis stepped up on a ledge; his small boat was lifted and put up on another, and they waited. From far, almost too small to hear in the boiling noise of the fall and the upflung spray, came Luck's shout, echoed by a man at the entrance of the cave, and, before the sound of it had died, the Water Star was swept in, immeasurably huge and unwieldy and white, the men swarming round her.

"She will be smashed!" cried Mr. van Loomis.

It seemed impossible that she should not be, as she came down on top of them, enormous above the small, struggling brown bodies with their shouts and cries. They had first to steady her rush inward; the impetus flung the water high up to the cave roof, deluging and blinding them; and then, stronger still, came the rush back, dragging the men from the ledges like flies, but here Luck had foreseen, and some of the men had dropped off at the entrance as she came riding in and braced themselves against the rock walls and passed ropes behind her to make a barrier which four of them held. The rush came back, and with it the Water Star. They were borne nearly to the roof, but the ropes held, the ropes at the back, the ropes from the cave walls. The Water Star was left on the cave pool, safe, a little battered but safe. But the next wave was to come; gasping, dripping, bleeding, they had only a few moments to prepare for it while they steadied her to take her through the fall.

The ropes were still held at the mouth of the cave, others from the side; men swam round her, holding her, to act as buffers, and now two, holding the first long ropes, prepared to dive under the fall and come up on the other side, while Prem, with a shout to show them, went through it. He came back under it, shaking his head, half stunned for the moment. There were shouts of dissent from the men, a warning shout from Luck, and the next wave came in. It was a huge wave and carried the Water Star forward so that her nose hit the fall; she recoiled against the wave and the surf boiled up. Prem shouted and Luck shouted, there was another surge forward, and almost before they knew what had happened, men and plane were tumbled through the fall. Mr. van Loomis saw one wing tilt up and then right itself; he saw the water hit the plane, and saw a turmoil of arms and legs and heads; he saw Luck clinging to the tail, and then they were swept, whole, from his sight.

He waited for Luck to come and tell him a man was drowned, the propellers smashed, a wing torn off. You have done it now, said Mr. van Loomis to Mr. van Loomis. He shut his eyes, giddy and sick with shame, and the thundering noise seemed beating into his head.

(Continued on Page 75)

The man who regards his work as his play—and this is the way to succeed in life and to be happy—nearly always plays to win. —DEAN INGE: More Lay Thoughts of a Dean (Putnam & Company, Ltd.).

UNIVERSAL
Coffeematic
conveniently automatic with Flavor-Selector

NO GUESSING! NO WATCHING!
NO BOWLS TO REMOVE!

The most treasured gift of all—a Universal Coffeematic—for it will be enjoyed every day from Christmas morning on. Because there's no coffeemaker like it. Only Universal brews coffee to your taste automatically . . . signals when coffee is ready, and keeps it at perfect serving temperature without increasing strength.

And Coffeematic is complete in itself—no extra parts to add or lift off. For the same perfect coffee time after time, simply set the Flavor-Selector at Mild, Medium or Strong. Brewing starts in seconds and delicious, clear coffee is made without boiling.

*Price is Fair Traded in states where appropriate Fair Trade Acts exist.

NO GUESSING—NO WATCHING

Flavor-Selector automatically assures correct strength . . . Mild, Medium or Strong. Just set it and forget it . . . The Redi-Lite will come on when coffee is ready to pour.

NO REHEATING—NO DRIPPING

Heat-Sentinel reduces current automatically when brewing stops. Keeps coffee "just right" 'til poured. The Non-Drip spout is perfectly designed for pouring right at the table.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Smart Santas Choose
UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Why risk his health with temporary disinfectants?

"Lysol" (R) Brand Disinfectant germ-fighting action continues between cleanings!

TODAY—"FLU" in your neighborhood. Tomorrow, this dread virus may enter your home! Influenza virus may survive in dust and dirt for days or even weeks. So guard your family with the disinfectant that spreads an anti-bacterial blanket with continuing, not just temporary action.

HAVE "LYSOL" in your cleaning water every time you clean—in baby's room, in your kitchen, bathroom . . . every room!

UNLIKE BLEACHES, which call for thorough cleaning before disinfecting, and which even then act only temporarily, "Lysol" kills germs as you clean. Its potency is not weakened by dust and dirt. And regular use of "Lysol" leaves a continuing anti-germ blanket between cleanings!

GIVE YOUR HOME this fast-acting, continuing disinfection! Every cleaning time, use hospital-proved "Lysol" brand disinfectant! Economical, because so highly concentrated. Only 2½ tablespoons to each gallon of cleaning water! Ask today for this world's-largest-selling germ killer!

(Continued from Page 73)

"Tsula." It was Luck shouting into his ır.

Mr. van Loomis opened his eyes. Luck as standing, dripping and gasping, as Prem ad, in front of him; he had a large bleeding raze on his left cheek and the blood ran own his neck to his chest. Mr. van Loomis stinctively put out a finger and touched e blood, but Luck only shook his hair back nd smiled.

"Well?" said Mr. van Loomis.

"Tsula, come, see. Tsula can go through e fall." Then Mr. van Loomis saw that uck's eyes were merry and that he seemed ated in spite of the hurt. "Come, Tsula.
ll done," said Luck. Mr. van Loomis ropped off his hat and cummerbund and oes.

When Mr. van Loomis, beaten and giddy om his dive under the fall, came up in the ner cave and saw the dim form of the War Star floating in the murk, he could not elp it, he had a feeling of enormous triumph nd enjoyment. The men were fastening her, eighting the ropes with rocks and dropping em, but, shut away by the falling water, ere was little drag here at the end of the ool. The pool was long, shallow, black; ere was only a murky filtered light, and
Ir. van Loomis swam a few strokes, touched ottom, stood up and slowly walked the ngth of it.

The men had dragged the Water Star as gh as they could. She was beyond the reach the spray, and here she could remain, ought Mr. van Loomis, safe and dry, with e chance in a thousand of anyone's find-g her. He did not think that either Valenne or McGinty would dream of penetrating e fall; they would see it sweeping down the end of the cave; had not some of the anders themselves thought it was the back all?

"Are all the men safe?" asked Mr. van oomis.

"All safe, Tsula. Some a little hurt," said uck, "but all safe."

"Two bullocks, five sheep and twenty oung cockerels," said Mr. van Loomis.

He reached the end of the cave, which nar-owed and ran back into the rock in a knife
t. He could see a faint glimmer in the darkess, and, standing, balancing himself beween two sheer rock walls that ran up like a nnel, he saw that he could look up through slit to the sky. As from the bottom a well, in the far tiny round of blue-ack light where the sky seemed pressed own on the earth, he saw a few stars faintly ining. He looked and then he smiled and ent back to Luck and Prem.

"Come. I shall show you something won-erful." He took them and showed them.

"Stars!" breathed Prem and Luck. "Stars, ut is it night?"

"No, it is afternoon," said Luck, and they ade the deep island obeisance, their hands oined together before their faces.

"Tsula!" said Prem.

"The stars will know what we have done today," said Mr. van Loomis.

"Tsula!" said Luck and Prem.

He could see the whispers going round from lip to lip, though he could not hear them. One by one the men tiptoed up the cut and stood and looked up at the stars. Mr. van Loomis had not, of course, actually said that he had put the stars there, turned daylight into stars to commemorate the day, but, "Tsula!" the men breathed in reverence. "Will we always see stars there now, Tsula?" they asked.

"Always," said Mr. van Loomis graciously.

They swam back, diving under the fall, letting themselves float out easily on the wave, tired but elated and filled with wonder. Last of all, Mr. van Loomis looked round in the sounding murk-filled cave and, more than pleased with himself, dived and swam out to join them.

Valentine was woken by something very fragrant under his nose. It was the flower in Filipino's hair as he bent down to arrange a pair of new grass sandals for Valentine on the floor by the bed. Through his half-shut eyes Valentine saw Filipino's distinguished head close beside his pillow; the flower was the same creamy-petaled flower that Charis had worn. Now he saw that, as he slept, someone had covered him with a light cotton shawl.

"Who did this?" he asked Filipino, and Filipino smiled and shrugged and said, "Niu."

In the shaded room, lulled by the sea, Valentine had slept as he had not slept for months.

"What is it, on this island?" he asked.

"Is what?" asked Filipino back.

"Is . . . the island?"

"Mānoa only a little ordinary place," said Filipino.

Valentine lay, with ease in his bones, not tired but blissfully lazy, lazy and comfortable, watching Filipino as he moved about the room and went to the window to open the slats.

"Now bath," said Filipino, coming and standing by the bed. "Bath in bath or sea?"

The slats were open and Valentine saw that it was sunset in the garden. A richer light lay on the lawns, turning them deeply green; the tree trunks shone. He could see a clump of hibiscus flowers, and their trumpets glowed. He could see a strip of sky that was a soft refulgent blue; in it was an apricot cloud. Valentine could hear the sound of a lazy little flute and, behind the pigeons' throaty murmurous croons, he heard the surf.

"Bath or sea?" asked Filipino.

"Sea," said Valentine. He was wide awake.

The half hour in the surf with Filipino was such exhilaration as Valentine had not known. He had surfed in Australia and Vancouver, but this was more exhilarating still; the water was not warm but cool and clear, and the sand shone white in it. When Filipino

(Continued on Page 78)

"Harvey has the cutest idea! He wants you to ask him."

Three ways to fight TUBERCULOSIS

The mortality rate for tuberculosis has declined steadily over the years. According to the National Office of Vital Statistics, the death rate in 1900 was 194 per 100,000 population. Today, it is less than 28—the lowest on record.

Despite the decline in the death rate, tuberculosis has by no means been conquered. Nearly 40,000 people in the United States lost their lives last year from this disease, and over 130,000 new cases were reported.

Doctors urge continued efforts to advance the fight against tuberculosis. They suggest three ways to do this—detect the disease early, treat it promptly, and prevent new cases.

1 Detect the disease early

The surest way to find tuberculosis early is through an X-ray examination at the doctor's office or at a chest clinic. It is especially important to take this step if a persistent cough, fever, a "tired feeling" or loss of weight occur—for these may indicate early tuberculosis.

The disease may, however, be a "silent sickness" and show no signs at the beginning. That is why it is wise to have X-ray pictures made during an annual health examination, or whenever a chest X-ray program is sponsored in the community.

2 Treat it promptly

If tuberculosis should be detected in an active stage, prompt and thorough treatment is essential—preferably in a tuberculosis hospital. This usually calls for complete bed rest which helps the body heal the infection.

Other measures may be used including surgery and drug therapy. New drugs, used as an adjunct to rest or surgery, have been especially beneficial in certain types of tuberculosis. There is hope that more effective ones may become available in the future.

Under proper hospital treatment, authorities say practically all persons with early tuberculosis have an excellent chance to get well.

3 Prevent new cases

To help prevent new cases of tuberculosis, specialists urge that those who have the disease remain in the hospital until their condition is under control.

In this way, families, friends, and associates are saved from the danger of infection, for tuberculosis is a "catching" disease spread through contact.

The likelihood of developing it may also be reduced if everyone guards against the disease by getting plenty of sleep, rest, proper exercise, and nourishing food.

Regular health examinations, including a chest X-ray, can usually detect tuberculosis before symptoms become apparent—and often before it becomes contagious.

Although tuberculosis is still a threat, modern medical advances have turned the tide against it. To learn more about how this has been accomplished and what can be done today to help restore victims of tuberculosis to a normal way of living, write for Metropolitan's free booklet, 120-J, "Tuberculosis."

COPYRIGHT 1950—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 120-J, "Tuberculosis."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Coty

Wherever fine perfumes are sold you'll find these and many other adorable gifts in your favorite Coty fragrance

L'ORIGAN • L'AIMANT EMERAUDE • "PARIS"
MUGUET DES BOIS

ALL PRICES PLUS TAX

Grande-Bell 5.00

Cherie-Bell 3.95

Petite-Bell 3.25

Symbol Set 5.00

Refresher Set 3.50

Bath Set 3.95

Purser Set 3.35

Muguet des Bois Refresher Set 3.50

ragrance makes it festive

Cygnet Trio 5.00

Cygnet Duo 3.25

Mam'selle 5.00

Gigi 3.95

Envelope Vanity 5.00

Memo Vanity 5.00

Fragrance Bar 5.00

Crystal Slipper 3.50

Golden Slippers 6.00

Makeup Duo 2.00

Muguet des Bois Boudoir Set 4.50

"Best in the World" 3.50

Bath Set 2.75

Cova Pur-Set 5.00

Charm Set 3.35

Muguet des Bois Deb Set 2.25

Cova Vani-Set 3.00

Makeup Trio 3.25

Social security...with no strings attached! Snug, stay-put A'Lure strapless with nylon elastic marquisette all around. Nylon lace cups. Flexible boning. White or black. A'Lure #1062.

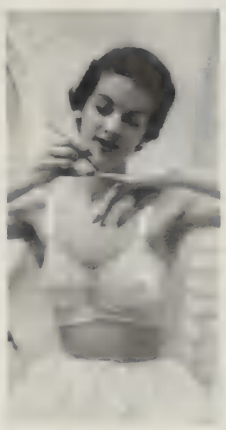
Darling, you don't need reins to be a dear!

Above all—be elastically comfy in Warner's A'Lures

Jiminy Christmas! Don't put up with bras that keep a tight rein on your loveliness!

Here's A'Lure! It's a love of a bra!

The secret . . . Warner's exclusive all-elastic bands . . . they breathe when you breathe . . . hug you comfily from cup-to-closure. Yours will fit perfectly thanks to Warner's 3-Way-Sizing. At finer stores.



1. Your Warner's is your cup size . . . A to D . . . your cup size will fit letter-perfect.

2. . . . and your band . . . no bands, narrow bands, deep bands or elastic A'Lure bands . . . with the snug-hug you love.

3. . . . and your uplift . . . whether you like a little lift or a lot, you can have your own way in Warner's bras.

Fancy free! All-around satin elastic! Undercup elastic! Between-cup elastic! Three times as free 'n easy on you! Fancy imported nylon lace over nylon marquisette. White magic! A'Lure #1016.

Snow wonder! Silky satin elastic all around. Nylon satin undercups, topped with embroidered nylon marquisette. White. A'Lure #1045.

Every upper story. In every size, every cup. A'Lure satin elastic undercups and all-around band. Topped with nylon marquisette. Pink, black or white. A'Lure #1050.

Tailor top! A'Lure without the trim. All-around elastic and elastic undercup uplift. Sheer nylon marquisette cup-tops. White. A'Lure #1090.

WARNER'S
3-Way-Sized
Foundations and Bras

WORLD FAMOUS FOR FINE GARMENTS · A'LURE® · STA-UP-TOP® · "FREE-LIFT" · WARNERETTE® ®Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. The Warner Brothers Co.
New York 10, Chicago 5, San Francisco 3

(Continued from Page 75)

saw how Valentine swam, he took him out of the netted enclosure and showed him how to dodge and hit if he met a shark. Filipino himself swam like an otter, shaking back his hair, which clung wet and gleaming on his head. They were both naked, and Valentine saw how white and soft his body looked beside Filipino's; if he touched the boy he touched something firm and springing, warm under his wetness. Filipino fetched a surfboard and they rode in on the big surf waves. They dived under the breakers whose roots were green-glassed water, and the cool salt stung their eyes. When they were tired they swam in and lay on their faces on the sand; it was still hot from the day in the sun.

As they lay, Filipino said shyly, "That one called McGinty ——"

"Yes," said Valentine idly.

"Mr. McGinty is not liking me," said Filipino. "He is not liking it here."

McGinty's face, obstinate and sulky as he had last seen it at luncheon, came into Valentine's mind. "Probably not," he said.

"It's better to like," said Filipino.

"Much better," said Valentine. "If you can." And he said, "McGinty likes his own people, you know."

Filipino nodded. "Perhaps he like them so much that he can't like any else, or perhaps he hasn't such . . . big liking."

"He has a girl," said Valentine.

Filipino was gratified; he felt Valentine was talking to him as man to man, but he was not placated. "A girl ought not ——" He found it difficult to express himself about McGinty and he changed the conversation. "Have you a Tsuli?" he asked.

"No," said Valentine. "And you, are you married?"

Filipino shook back his wet hair and laughed. "I never want get married. I don't want that I be tied. I love everyone. I don't want that I love anyone too much. Resurrection too. He don't want."

"Who is Resurrection?"

"My twin. My brother."

"Does Resurrection love everyone?" asked Valentine idly, scooping a handful of warm sand and letting it run through his fingers.

"Oh, yes! And everyone love him. Everybody. But they say I am too much trouble. Presently Resurrection will marry."

"Even if he doesn't want to?" asked Valentine.

Filipino shook his head, which meant yes. "My grandfather will say and Resurrection will do," said Filipino. "My grandfather wants sons to come after us on the island. What he wants, Resurrection will do, even if he not want it himself."

"But not you," said Valentine.

"Resurrection is a stupid boy," said Filipino, and laughed. He laid a finger gently on Valentine's thigh. "You like it here?"

"I like it very much," said Valentine. "I want to get away, but I'm not sorry we came."

"Mr. McGinty is sorry," said Filipino and bent his head, whittling a stick he had found, with the sharp edge of a shell. "I think Mr. McGinty will be sorry he doesn't like that he came," said Filipino. Again he felt that was not well expressed, but again he found himself tongue-tied when it came to talking of McGinty.

VALENTINE walked up from the beach with Filipino, but when they drew near the house Filipino melted away. Valentine went into his room and found shaving things ready with hot water and his clothes laid out on his bed, cleaned and pressed, his shirt freshly laundered and dry. His body was chilled, and the dry, warmed clothes were a luxury. In a few minutes Filipino appeared in a fresh cloth with a fresh flower and his hair oiled again.

"Everything seems done very quickly," said Valentine, showing his clothes.

"There are many wash girls," said Filipino carelessly.

"This island is well run," said Valentine.

"We are glad that you are pleased," said Filipino primly.

Again from the slim young man and tumbling sprite of the beach he had become the wraith of the young servant. The room was nearly dark; Valentine could dimly see the folds of the white cloth wrapping Filipino's thighs and legs and the white fresh flower picked in the garden as they had walked through it; white flowers had gleamed in the garden as this gleamed now behind Filipino's ear. The boy was silent, sensitive to Valentine's quiet mood.

HE will always be sensitive, quick to life, thought Valentine. How fresh he is! He felt a pang of envy. Filipino made him feel elderly and stale. For a moment he was angry; he was only thirty, even if he felt like fifty; he, Valentine, the most up to date, the before date, the antennae, an anachronism? Your antennae tell you, you are an anachronism, said Valentine to Valentine, and you swear they are always right. An anachronism means out of keeping with time. But how? How? he demanded angrily. How has it happened? And, as he asked it, he saw how it had happened. He saw it in his relationship to Filipino. Filipino seemed to him an amusing, scintillating boy. That was how Valentine himself had once appeared. Now he was no longer a boy. It's time you were your age, he said seriously to himself. It's time you started on another stage.

As he said that, he remembered what he should have liked to forget, the night when he had had to come on the stage to speak to the company after the last night of his last play, Tinker's Curse. Tinker's Curse had run for only six weeks, a thing that had not happened to Valentine Doubleday before. He remembered, sharply now, the anticipation giving way to doubt, doubt giving way to a horrible surmise and then to a horrible certainty. It was a failure.

> A modesty in delivering our sentiments leaves us the liberty of changing them without blushing.
>
> —BISHOP WILSON.

Now he saw the stage as empty and bare; it was waiting. He knew, of course, that that was nonsense; there was no empty stage for him in London, or anywhere else. Nothing waited: if he were to come back, he would have to roll up his sleeves and work; work hard, thought Valentine. He left the window and bent down, peering into Mr. van Loomis' shaving mirror.

As he brushed his hair, from outside, in the dark, came the sound of a deep-throated singing.

"That's a Negro," said Valentine, surprised. "Have you Negroes here?"

"It's Pheasant. Pheasant always singing," said Filipino carelessly.

Pheasant had dressed Charis and now she sat singing and threading fresh garlands, as she did every evening, for Niu, Filipino and Webster to wear at dinner; she threaded the jasmine flowers and ate hot roasted nuts that Serendipity roasted on a little brazier and put in hot shells on the dinner table. When her mouth was clear she sang the words lightly as she worked:

"In mah haaht. In mah haaht.
Ah've a li'l' wheel aturnin' in mah haaht."

It felt to Valentine like the beating of a happy, unconscious pulse, which is really what it was: Pheasant was not thinking in the least of what she was singing. To its light accompaniment he left his room and walked along the garden to the veranda.

It was hard to tell which were lights or fireflies on the earth and where the lights ended and the sky and stars began. A pinpoint of lantern moved away on some distant path; a star shot down toward the sea; Valentine walked to the edge of the lawn and watched the waves tumbling on the beach below, lit with phosphorus. Pheasant's song, and, from far off, the sound of a drum, beaten and stopped, beaten and stopped, in rhythm; a wisp of breeze brought the sound of laughter and voices.

(Continued on Page 81)

"You really do get a softer, shinier, more natural curl!"

says MARY MARTIN

star of "South Pacific"

"There is nothing like a Rayve!" says Mary Martin. "Mine just brushes into place!"

I've got 72 reasons for loving my Rayve wave," says Mary Martin. "That's how many curls I put up—72! Yet all these tiny curls brush into big, soft, natural-looking ones. And even with 8 on-stage shampoos a week, they never wash out!" See for yourself what a wonderful wave Rayve gives!

"Honestly, my Rayve curls behave as if I grew them myself . . . that natural!" exclaims Mary Martin.

"Remember after my shampoo on the stage, how I'm back in minutes . . . dressed for the party? All my wave gets is a few quick licks with a brush! Lucky for me it acts so naturally-curly!"

Mary Martin has probably had ten home permanents to your one. "Because I have to keep my hair so short for those on-stage shampoos," she explains. "But Rayve's lotions are so e-easy on the hair. They leave it so-oft, shiny—every time. There never was a wave so good to your hair!"

Mary Martin's the girl who's tried almost every home permanent there is. Take advantage of all her experience, and get the softest, most natural, the prettiest wave you've ever had with Rayve!

Here is Heller, Mary Martin's blonde, nine-year-old daughter. She's wearing her "bridesmaid's" dress (her term for the yellow organdy she wore as flower-girl at a cousin's wedding). And her soft, shiny, new curls are Rayve-made, like her mother's.

Rayve wave

HOME PERMANENT

Rayve Refill, $1
(use any plastic curlers)
Complete Rayve Wave kit, $2
(with 60 plastic curlers)

Money-Back Guarantee! Yes, your money back if you don't agree with Mary Martin that a Rayve Home Permanent gives the softest, most natural wave you've ever had at any price.

Is there a baby in the house ?

Look there,
there by the door,
there where a shoe and a crumpled sock, and a bright red block, and a short fat elephant clutter the floor, and the signs are clear...
A baby is near.

Look there,
there by the stair,
by the cellar stair to the washing machine, there's a stack of diapers that ought to be clean and a clutter of strange looking things to wear,
and the signs are clear...
A baby lives here.

Look there,
there by the table,
there where the milk drips down in a puddle, and fruit and cereal mix in a muddle, and a soiled bib swings from a silver cable, all signs that are clear...
A baby eats here.

Look there,
there in the bed,
there where a red-faced cherub lies, thumb in his mouth, and tight-shut eyes, and his bottom higher than his head.
Quiet, quiet, it's perfectly clear...
A baby sleeps here.

Look there,
look in the eyes,
and look in the hearts
of those who watch while a baby sleeps, who will come at a call if he wakes and weeps, who forget the diapers and broken toys, who remember the tears and fears and joys and the catch in the throat, and the heart's clutch when small hands fumble, and reach, and touch—
Yes, look in their hearts, and the signs are clear...
A baby lives here.

Dedicated to mothers and fathers of America by Johnson & Johnson makers of Johnson's Baby Powder, Baby Oil, Baby Lotion, Baby Cream, Baby Soap and Cotton Tips

Free: If you would like a colorful reproduction of this page, write Johnson & Johnson, Box 940, New Brunswick, N.J.
(Offer expires June 30, 1951)

(Continued from Page 78)

Valentine was still tired; he still had it feeling of lightheadedness but he was angely still and peaceful. He walked ınd to the veranda where, behind the tubs flowers, he found Charis waiting for him in ndlelight that came from thick white wax ndles in branched wooden candlesticks ng the wall. The veranda glowed with ir soft light. Valentine sat down, stretch-his legs, pleasantly tired, and from a all table she brought him a tall glass.

"I don't know if you will like it," said aris, "but my father has one after bathing d I thought you should have one too."

"What is it?" asked Valentine.

"We call it a stingo," said Charis. "We ake rum here from our sugar. It's a rum ngo."

"Charis," said Valentine, "you are a very cellent child."

HIS depressed Charis; she had thought, ong the flowers and drinks and spread ndlelight, that the veranda looked not une the parties she had read about and that e herself was the picture of sophistication.
e had on her very best clothes. There had en, surprisingly, no opposition from Pheast about that.

"What you gwine wear?" asked Pheasant,
d when Charis showed her she did not say,
No, you ain'. You had a silk out fer this awnin'." She said with admiring eyes, Mah lamb gwine look lak a real laidy." It as the first time Pheasant had ever called r a lady.

She had brushed her hair back as far as she uld and she had thought she looked digni-d and grown up; now Valentine called her excellent child. I suppose I am as unim-rtant as a child to him, thought Charis and ghed.

Valentine saw he had depressed her, ough he did not know why. How absurdly lnerable they are, he thought, thinking of r and Filipino together; he did not say it in criticism, but tenderly. He looked at Charis, standing with her back to him, by a tub of white tobacco flowers, and he liked the small shape of her hips under the swathings of soft silk. Charis thought her hips too small, as, by island standards, they were. He liked the glimpse he could see of the nape of her small proud neck and what he could see of a white, well-shaped but determined small ear. He saw he had hurt her and he wanted very much to go across to her and put his arm round her in contrition. But Valentine knew he could not do that, and he knew that she would presently swallow the hurt and turn back to him again with some gently hospitable remark. When she is a little older, thought Valentine, it will be impossible to know if she is hurt or not . . . unless you know her very well . . . unless you are very close to her; and the words that were in Valentine's mind as he sipped his stingo were "near and dear."

He could not say anything comforting to Charis because McGinty appeared. He had been sitting in his room until Filipino came in and said, "Dinner. They are waiting for you on the veranda," and added, "Better hurry up."

McGinty felt that Filipino was impertinent, though his voice was perfectly respectful. McGinty had woken from sleep more chagrined than ever. Niu had brought him hot water to shave with; McGinty had cut himself three times with the razor. He had chosen to bath, not bathe, and he had found his bath ready, a wooden bath like a tub, lined with glazed earthenware, and a clean cloth, to wrap round him when he came out, laid ready on a stool. He, too, had found his clothes cleaned and dried and new grass sandals for his feet, but he was not soothed; he ignored the sandals and put on his shoes. Now he refused the drink Charis offered him and sat on the edge of a chair, looking more than ever unwilling and bored.

Then Mr. van Loomis arrived. He was freshly burned from the sun and looked extremely well and genial and at ease. He took a stingo from Charis and drank it standing, looking down at them benignly; Charis looked back at him with suspicion: she knew that gleam in his eyes, and he had an air of being too well pleased.

"Where did you go so early this afternoon?" she asked, hoping to take him down a little, but Mr. van Loomis looked more pleased than before.

"Where did I go? I went out to the Hat," he said, swirling the last of his drink round and round in his glass, and he said to Valentine, "I thought I should check up on what you told me as soon as I could."

Valentine and McGinty leaned forward eagerly. Mr. van Loomis raised his glass and finished his stingo. He never told a lie. Now he made two statements that were both perfectly true.

"I went out to the bay of the Hat to find your plane," he said. "It isn't there."

"We should have seen if he had sunk her," said McGinty. "The water is clear. He couldn't have burned her; we should have seen the smoke and there would have been debris all over the water."

"There was some oil."

"No more than what she made when we came down," said McGinty gloomily. "Wonder if he rigged a sail on her and sent her out to sea."

"He isn't a magician," said Valentine.

"Wonder if he got these blacks of his to lift her for him and roll her up the hill and tip her into the crater and down the volcano. It's possible," said McGinty savagely.

"Don't be fantastic," said Valentine.

"The whole blooming island's fantastic," McGinty said.

Two days had passed since Mr. van Loomis had taken them out in the canoe to search for the Water Star.

"Where did he take you?" asked Charis suspiciously, but Valentine's answer gave her no clue.

"Oh, up and down and round and round," said Valentine. "I must say he was most patient. We went on looking long after it was obvious there was no use in looking."

"Did you land?" asked Charis.

"Yes, but the Water Star couldn't land. She hasn't legs!"

"Did father show you the caves?"

"Yes," said Valentine wearily.

"It's very strange," said Charis.

"Very," said Valentine. He tried to speak lightly, but he could not, and he walked away from her and went and stood by the veranda rails with his back to her.

CHARIS sat in her chair, softly rubbing her nails to make them glow and look pink. Her father often told her he had a reason for everything he did. When they went out to look for the Water Star he had not allowed her to come. She had felt hurt and left out, but now she was beginning to guess his reason and she was glad she had been left out. I wouldn't want to know anything about it if —— thought Charis. She stopped short on that "if." She stood up and went in. At that moment she felt she could not be near Valentine. Presently Valentine drifted to his room.

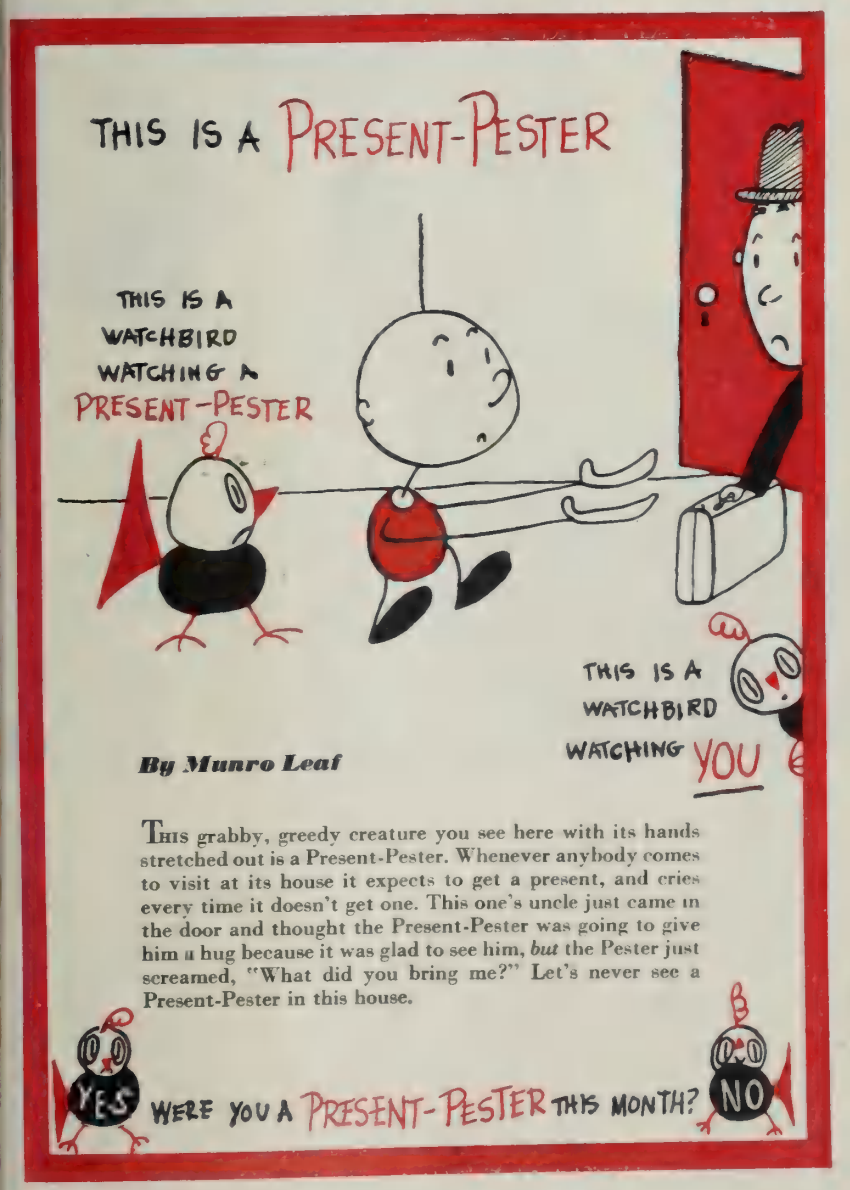
"He doesn't mean us to get off," said McGinty.

"Nonsense," said Valentine. McGinty had come to his room and was sitting on the bed. "We're not children or boys; we can't be made to stay," said Valentine.

"You gave him your word."

"That was only for a limited period."

"What period?"



Valentine did not answer. He said, "If we are patient, we shall get off."

"We can't without him. Don't forget. He's God on this island."

"Nobody's God," said Valentine irritably.

If Mr. van Loomis could have thought of a way in which he could have left McGinty out of his schemes he would have done it, thankfully, but he had no choice. From the first time he saw him he had disliked this laconic and cocksure young man; he did not like McGinty's manners, nor his accent, nor the way he cut his hair, nor his opinions.

(Continued on Page 83)

READER'S DIGEST* reports the same research which proves that brushing teeth right after eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Published Reports!

Reader's Digest recently reported on one of the most extensive experiments in dentifrice history! And here are additional facts: The one and only toothpaste used in this research was Colgate Dental Cream. Yes, and two years' research showed brushing teeth right after eating with Colgate Dental Cream stopped decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene! The Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever reported in all dentifrice history!

No Other Toothpaste or Powder Ammoniated or Not Offers Proof of Such Results!

Even more important, there were no new cavities whatever for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate Dental Cream correctly! Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results! No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay.

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! While not mentioned by name, Colgate's was the only toothpaste used in the research reported in July Reader's Digest.

When you see this on these —buy them!

. . . *because Durene yarn is stronger, more absorbent, more lustrous, and easier to wash than ordinary cottons. And for your protection, anything bearing a Durene label is backed up by Durene's Quality Control Plan which includes regular impartial laboratory tests. So when you see the name Durene, buy . . . you'll be getting more quality, more lasting satisfaction for your money!

* All Durene is mercerized cotton, but not all mercerized cotton is Durene...only certain selected yarns which meet Durene's specifications of quality are trade-marked Durene.

(Continued from Page 81)

McGinty could not put up with Mr. van omis's despotism. "He might be Hitler!" d McGinty after listening to Mr. van omis giving his orders. "I told you. He nks he's God." They were each unjust to e other. Mr. van Loomis's blood boiled at e sight of McGinty; if McGinty's blood d ever boiled, it would have boiled at the ht of Mr. van Loomis. "And he's a great r," said McGinty. "He's lying to us about e plane."

It was the feeling of being held in a net- rk of lies that made McGinty most des- rate of all; he had no philosophy with hich to meet it. If he had been at once more mple and more humble, like the islanders, could have shrugged his shoulders and ked, "What is truth?" If he had been more phisticated and alloyed with worldly owledge like Valentine, he would have id, "Ah, well! Most of us tell lies." cGinty was always slightly aggrieved; now e disappearance of the Water Star was a lpable untruth, and it justified him in feel- g angry.

The islanders had nothing but good will r the two strange Tsulas, but it amused em and pleased them to see them both suc- ssfully hoodwinked by Mr. van Loomis. made them sure their white man was the eatest. To see him confound Valentine and cGinty was sport to them.

Valentine, too, had a strong sense of trick- y, and yet he could not see how they were cked. "A calm sea, ship for miles, no trol, and no one who new how to fly her. ow? How?" asked alentine. He began think he was be- tched.

To begin with he had afed and worried as uch as and more ex- uisitely than Mc- nty. How could he lp it? He was wor- ed about his play. It was his new musi- l play, his operetta, osalind. Suddenly it emed to Valentine that it was not like him have written anything called Rosalind. Names are very important," he said often. They are very indicative . . . Rosalind." e tried it over on his tongue and he did ot like it. "Rosalind": paper roses and alconies and Edwardian dresses. His Rosa- nd had all those things. Why did I call it at? thought Valentine, staring at the sea.

In the last two years, his success had not ally been success at all. He had been rried along by the impact he had made efore, and no one could do that for long. he failure of Tinker's Curse had been the rst outward symptom. No one had told m or given him a warning; no one would ll him till the critics and the public made it ain, as had happened over Tinker's Curse.

"Did I write that?" Valentine was to say it afterward. There seemed no one he uld trust.

"Oh, Val! It's going to be wonderful," ey said. His antennae told him it was not onderful.

With the disappearance of the Water Star crack had come in Valentine's certainty. he Water Star had nothing to do with Rosa- nd, but the loss had come as a shock. The Vater Star had disappeared when she could ot disappear; she was gone, without a trace, nd he had no remedy. He was helpless.

He saw that his fuming and fretting hurt Charis. The evening before, he had put his and on hers as they sat alone on the ve- anda before dinner and said, "I think this s an enchanting place, Charis. At any other me I should have loved to have had the hance of being here."

"You are here," said Charis slowly, and he words she would have liked to say rang n the air: Why not love it?

"You see," said Valentine, "I should be in ondon."

"But you are not in London."

"No, and what can I do?" He shrugged, and there was a silence. Valentine felt there was something Charis wanted to say. He put his hand on hers again. "What can I do, Charis? Tell me." She raised her eyes and looked at him.

"You could . . . enjoy yourself," Charis suggested timidly. Valentine stared at her, and she blushed but she went on. "It seems to me ——"

"Yes?" His voice sounded faintly amused and that made it hard for Charis to go on. She blushed more deeply as she said, "It seems to me that you have been too busy."

Valentine took his hand away and stood up. "Think, my dear," said Valentine. "I have had to be busy. I have done a great deal."

"Yes. But if you, or anyone, get too busy you lose touch with life, and that is fatal."

"Why fatal?"

Charis opened her eyes. "Because without life you die, of course," said Charis.

"Then am I dead?" said Valentine, teasing, but it was angry teasing. He was remembering something a critic had written after the first night of Tinker's Curse. "Mr. Doubleday does not hear, he is too busy knocking the nails into his own coffin." Valentine winced. "Say what you mean," he said roughly to Charis.

For a moment Charis was intimidated. "You are dead tired," she said, avoiding the issue, but she was too honest to pretend, and she took a breath and returned to it. "All these plays," she said hesitantly. "Plays and music and writing and paintings, all work, are made of life."

"Yes. Yes," said Valentine impatiently.

"But . . . to give life you must have life," said Charis, looking up at Valentine's angry face. "And you haven't. How could you have? You don't give yourself time to breathe," she told him.

"The eve of a new production is hardly the time to breathe," said Valentine.

Charis considered that. "If I were on the eve of a new production I should take deep breaths, slowly. I shouldn't gasp."

"I don't gasp!" said Valentine and turned his back on her.

This was one thing, among others, that Charis was learning: that people, however exalted and wise and gifted, were the same, that even princes and saints could be wrong, and that if you subscribed to the wrong, even through pity, it did not help them. Her eyes, as she looked at Valentine, were very tender.

Charis was a comfort to Valentine in spite of her pricks. The very fact of her ignorance about the Water Star made her an ally. He often caught her looking at her father with a cynical look in her narrow gray-green eyes; the servants said Charis had snake eyes, and there was something of the wise, small serpent in her.

"If they come looking for us now they will be looking for the Water Star," Valentine burst out, going back to the thought of his play. "That would be bad enough. A plane not much bigger than this room in the whole of the Pacific. They will never find us without her; this island is an island among thousands, like pebbles," said Valentine, and he asked Mr. van Loomis, who came through the veranda on his way to the beach, "You have put out a signal?"

"You have asked me that twenty times. But who will see it? Who is there? I don't know." Mr. van Loomis spread his hands.

"You don't know anything," said Valentine rudely, and Mr. van Loomis raised his eyebrows and went out to the beach. Valentine was white; he dug his nails into his palms. "I'm sorry, Charis. I shouldn't have been rude to your father. I was thinking of my play."

Charis's eyes hardened as they looked at him and grew narrow in a way he was to

(Continued on Page 86)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Still Night

By William Stafford

If I should find a locomotive
I'd bring it home to stay,
And while it dreamed beside the fire
I'd whistle, far away.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"Christmas Belles"

GO FOR NANNETTE HOLIDAY FROCKS

Nannette rings in the Holiday Season in sweetest style! Your little party-going "Christmas belles" will love these eye-catching BURMIL taffeta beauties . . . one in delicate pastels, dainty smocked and embroidered . . . the other in high shades of navy or teal, with multicolor crystal-pleated collar, novelty pouch pocket. Just two of our festive array of exciting holiday frocks! Still amazingly low priced —about $4.00.

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE

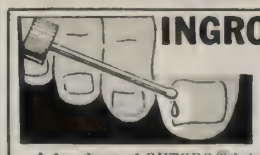
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Nannette ORIGINALS BABE and TODDLER FROCKS

NANNETTE MFG. CO. INC., PHILA., PA.

Other Babe and Toddler Fracks from 9 mos. to size 3, about $2.00 and $3.00. At better stores everywhere.

LAVORIS MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE



Exactly the Right Thing...
FOR A CLEAN MOUTH AND THROAT

Tangy Cinnamon-clove Flavor

DETACHES AND REMOVES GERM HARBORING FILM FROM MOUTH-THROAT

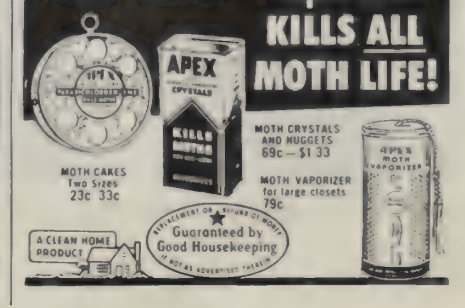
Before Business and Social Engagements

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

Don't Neglect Slipping
FALSE TEETH

Do false teeth drop, slip or wobble when you talk, eat, laugh or sneeze? Don't be annoyed and embarrassed by such handicaps. FASTEETH, an alkaline (non-acid) powder to sprinkle on your plates, keeps false teeth more firmly set. Gives confident feeling of security and added comfort. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. Get FASTEETH today at any drug store.



TRY A REST-WELL BED BOARD!

Slip a REST-WELL Bed Board under your mattress for backaches and all pains caused by over-soft beds. Ideal for sacroiliacs. Many doctors recommend firm beds for restful sleep for both adults and children. Over 500,000 in use. REST-WELL Bed Boards are sold by leading dept. stores everywhere. We ship direct where we have no dealers. Prices from $2.95. Write today for dealer's name and list of five ideal gift items. Just say "send particulars". Address Dept. 11.

REST-WELL PRODUCTS CO. 415 West 127th St. New York 27, N. Y.

APEX A penetrating vapor that KILLS ALL MOTH LIFE!

"TAPE CHRISTMAS CARDS on your tree with loops of cellophane tape," says Bing. "Pick out cards from your best pals—guys and gals likely to drop in to your diggin's during the holidays. You'll get a big kick out of the grins when they see their cards on your 'Friendship Tree'!"

BING CROSBY TRIMS A "FRIENDSHIP TREE"

Star of "MR. MUSIC," a Paramount picture, joins in a growing Christmas custom

"A 'FRIENDSHIP TREE' is a wonderful idea," says Nancy Olson, Bing's Paramount co-star. "It gives Christmas greetings extra meaning. All my friends are having a 'Friendship Tree' this year."

"BRIGHTEN UP YOUR HOME with cards taped around the fireplace and doorways and mirrors," says Nancy. Taped singly or in chains, these colorful Christmas greetings give the whole house a festive look.

EASY TO DO—Take a five-inch strip of "Scotch" Cellophane Tape and press one end of the tape firmly on the card. Then . . .

PASS TAPE OVER TWIG and stick the other end tightly to the back of the card. Cellophane tape sticks without moistening.

MAKE CHAINS OF CARDS this way. Tape end of chain to molding or woodwork, never to wallpaper or painted walls.

"ONE-TWO" WRAPPING METHOD makes a hit with NANCY OLSON

Co-star of "MR. MUSIC," a Paramount picture, finds tape quick, convenient!

1 "WRAP ANY PACKAGE this easy way," says Nancy. "A snip of cellophane tape holds wrappings tight on gifts of any shape or size."

2 A SIMPLE DESIGN made with "Scotch" Gift Wrap Tape or "Scotch" Gift Seals completes the job in a jiffy. And what a beauty it is!

OLD BITS OF GREENERY on ackages with transparent cello- nane tape. Adds a gay note.

MAKE PARTY FAVORS with plain paper sealed and decorated with colorful stick-at-a-touch tapes.

FASTEN TREE LIGHTS with a wrapping of tight-sticking cellophane tape. Makes trimming easier.

HOLD NAME CARDS on gifts with these gay, colorful "Scotch" Gift Seals. No licking or tying!

DECORATE GIFT ENVELOPES with bright edgings of many-patterned "Scotch" Gift Wrap Tape.

PARKLING NEW DESIGNS in "Scotch" Gift Wrap Tapes re 10¢ and 25¢ a roll at stores everywhere. Get "Scotch" ift Seals, too. 50 colorful seals in 6 different holiday de- igns in a handy dispenser, 25¢.

TRANSPARENT AS GLASS, thrifty "Scotch" Cellophane Tape is ideal for holding, mending and sealing. IMPORTANT: For quality, always insist on the "Scotch" brand, in the bright plaid dispenser. 10¢, 15¢, 25¢ and 39¢.

NEW CHRISTMAS GIFT IDEA is this handy "Scotch" Desk Dispenser that's weighted to stay put as you pull off tape with one hand. Your friends would welcome one! $1.69—and only 59¢ for a big ½x792 inch roll of tape.

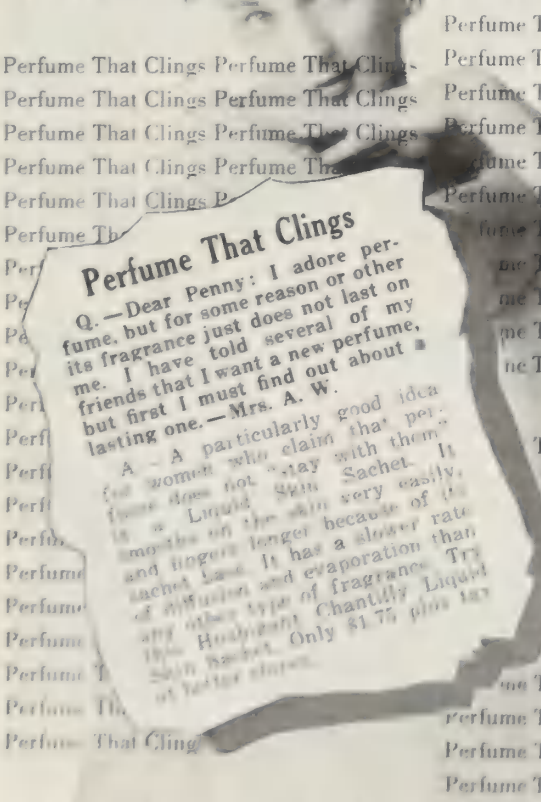
Made in U.S.A. by MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO., St. Paul 6, Minn., also makers of other "Scotch" Brand Pressure-sensitive Tapes, "Scotch" Sound Recording Tape, "Underseal" Rubberized Coating, "Scotchlite" Reflective heeting, "Safety-Walk" Non-Slip Surfacing, "3M" Abrasives, "3M" Adhesives. General Export: Durex Abrasives Corp., New Rochelle, N. Y. In Canada: Canadian Durex Abrasives Ltd., Brantford, Ontario. © 1950 3M CO.

Relieve Pain Instantly Combat Infection from minor Burns

WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions, Pimples*

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! Apply soothing CAMPHO-PHENIQUE. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use CAMPHO-PHENIQUE also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites, pimples.* Many doctors, dentists, nurses prefer this colorless liquid antiseptic. Doesn't stain the skin. Children like it, too. It's soothing, doesn't smart like ordinary antiseptics. Recommended over 50 years. Get it today!



*Due to external causes.

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

(PRONOUNCED CAM-FO-FIN-EEK)

THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings

Perfume That Clings

Q.—Dear Penny: I adore perfume, but for some reason or other its fragrance just does not last on me. I have told several of my friends that I want a new perfume, but first I must find out about a lasting one.—Mrs. A. W.

A.—A particularly good idea for women who claim that perfume does not "stay with them" is a Liquid Skin Sachet. It smooths on the skin very easily and lingers longer because of the Sachet Base. It has a slower rate of diffusion and evaporation than any other type of fragrance. Try this Houbigant Chantilly Liquid Skin Sachet. Only $1.75 plus tax learn to know and she asked, "Is it a good play, Valentine?"

(Continued from Page 83)

"Do you think I should write a bad play?"

"It needn't be bad," said Charis. "That doesn't make it good."

He was suddenly more angry with her than he had been with anyone in his life. "You are amazingly conceited," said Valentine and he almost hissed. "So conceited that you are ridiculous and laughable. You know nothing, nothing at all; nothing of plays, nothing of writing, nothing of people. You have never even seen a play, and you sit here on your throne and give your cold conceited little opinions and expect me to listen. How dare you?" shouted Valentine. "How dare you talk to me like that? You know nothing about my plays, and nothing about my writing, and nothing about me. Then . . . shut up!" said Valentine violently. "Shut up!"

Valentine felt exactly as if he were a shellfish and his shell had been broken and Charis had lifted it and with a long thin wire probe was unerringly exploring the soft crevices inside him; and there was a place, deep down in Valentine's firm sophisticated self, that was not sure or firm, and there he knew he was not pleased with his play. He knew he had been afraid and that it was the failure of Tinker's Curse after the comparative failure of the play before, Lords and Owners, that had made him afraid.

That is ridiculous, said Valentine. What do any of them know about it? Lords and Owners was a good play. It misfired, that was all. I knew that. I know it now. Then why lose my nerve? He had not lost his nerve—he had done worse: he had played safe. In Rosalind he had put all the Doubleday ingredients, he had gone back to Midwinter Spring seven years before. It can't miss, said Valentine, except —— Except that seven years ago is seven years ago, too far, not far enough; or perhaps a thing once done is done, for deep down in those crevices, Valentine had a suspicion that Rosalind was dull.

"Dull. Dull. Dull," breathed the sound of the surf and the wind, and Valentine was completely miserable.

Charis sat quite still in her chair; though her head was high Valentine saw that he had smitten her. She too, now, was white, and her eyes were brimming in tears.

"I'm sorry," he said. "You are too young to be talked to like that."

"I am not," said Charis clearly, but a tear rolled down her cheek. "I am quite old. I am nearly twenty-one." She was right. Twenty-one was old on the island.

Valentine was strangely moved. He went across to her and knelt down by her and kissed her.

Charis sat even more still than before, but, when his hand found hers in her lap, her fingers held his. With his other hand he took out his handkerchief and gently dried the tear.

"You are very fond of the theater," said Charis.

This small understatement touched Valentine. It showed him that Charis, even in a moment that was sharp to her, could think steadily and selflessly in a way he would hardly have believed a young girl could. He kissed her again, gently on the brow, and said a thing he would not have said to anyone else, yet it was completely right and true. "You see, it is my kingdom," said Valentine and, kneeling beside her, as she held his hand, he began to speak to her of it.

"Everything compensates itself," Valentine was able to say to McGinty afterward. McGinty did not see it. "As we are here and have to stay here," said Valentine, "why not enjoy it?"

"Enjoy it?"

"Didn't you ever read or dream about an island when you were a boy?"

"May have done," said McGinty.

When McGinty walked into the little house in Hounslow where his girl Eunice lived and took two lemons out of his pocket and gave them to her mother and said, "Here mum. I got these for you in Augusta, morning," he did not feel he was participating in anything wonderful; to McGinty to be in Sicily in the morning, Hounslow in the evening, was not second nature but first. Perhaps he had lost his sense of wonder; but then McGinty had not been in Sicily, he had been in Augusta; he did not go to Montreal but Dorval; to Yundum, not to West Africa to Gander, not to Newfoundland. When he went to Cairo he went to Almaza; to Dun Dum, not to Calcutta.

He was happiest when he was at home taking the cylinder head off his motor bike or on Sunday mornings on the Great West Road passing Tom, his friend, and knowing that Eunice's ankles were prettier than the ankles of Tom's Betty; he liked to know that. He had always gone one better than Tom. He was happy when he was flying, listening as carefully as any nurse to the sound of his engines, looking at the rev counter, watching the pressure gauges, knowing, in each change, what there would be to do when they came down.

Here, on the island, there was nothing for him to do. When he was not working, McGinty looked to be entertained. The island entertainments, what he had seen of them, shocked him to the marrow; he did not know which were worse, the moonlight picnics that seemed to him wanton—"Necking parties," said McGinty angrily—or the blood sports, the cockfights like the one to which Filipino, thinking to amuse him, had invited him and that did not seem to him sport but downright indecent cruelty. McGinty liked films or midget-car racing or, if there were nothing else on, turning on the radio and sitting by the fire. He did not care for books; at home he read newspapers morning and evening; there were no newspapers on the island. There were no cigarettes that he could smoke; he had tried an island green one and nearly choked himself.

When fools go to market, peddlers make money.
—DUTCH PROVERB.

"Enjoy it. What is there to enjoy?" he asked Valentine bitterly.

"Get to know the people," suggested Valentine. "Their customs and their food and their songs. I mean it," said Valentine. "I am going to do it myself." McGinty stared. He had not thought of the islanders as people. "I am going fishing with the boatman, Luck. Come too," said Valentine. "I want Filipino to take me up to their temple on the hill. I want to go round the villages with Niu. You should do that too. Get Filipino to take you, or any of the men. If they ask you to one of their picnics, for instance, go."

McGinty did not answer. To Valentine's surprise, he blushed.

The island girls would have liked to see more of McGinty. A young white man was something new for them. They knew that Valentine was for Charis; they acquiesced in that as right and fitting, but no one seemed to have claims on the other Tsula. "And he isn't white, he's pink!" said Flora Annie, laughing with delight.

There were plenty of girls. The island abounded with girls, all plump and sweet and laughing, with big eyes and tiny teeth, but McGinty was quite firmly and thoughtlessly faithful to Eunice, his own Eunice Robinson, who lived with her father and mother in Hounslow and worked as a typist in the razor-blade factory on the Great West Road. To him the girls were islanders, bints, and he did not look at them; but last night, after dinner, when he went for a short walk, he had met a procession winding in the fields.

It was a very innocent procession, if he had only known it, part of the customary island arrangement for courtship during the full moon of this spring courtship month; all these young men and women would, in a night or two, be united in marriage or the island concubinage.

This was the courtship time, and the young men and women walked down in groups to the beaches, waving sugar canes, which presently they would eat, and carry-

(Continued on Page 91)

Very personally yours

New gayety lightens your step, your spirits, on days when your calendar calls the tune—and you answer with the comfort of the new Kotex.

Comfort that comes from new, downy softness—luxurious and lasting. The kind that holds its shape, because Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it.

New, too, is the smiling confidence you feel. From the moment you let Kotex dismiss worrisome "hazards" from your mind. For those flat, pressed ends prevent revealing outlines . . . and with that special safety center you can count on extra protection. Unquestionably . . .

Freedom begins when you choose Kotex. No matter which absorbency you prefer, you find Regular, Junior or Super exactly meets the particular needs that are very personally yours.

Super Kotex in the Brown Box—extra absorbency for more-than-average needs.

Junior Kotex in the Green Box—for women who prefer a slightly narrower napkin.

Regular Kotex in the Blue Box—perfectly suited to the needs of most women.

New Kotex Sanitary Belt made with soft-stretch elastic—non-curling, non-twisting. Won't cut. Washable. Dries fast.

More women choose Kotex than all other sanitary napkins*

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

"What about NYLON... and moths?"

THIS IS ONLY ONE OF THE QUESTIONS ANSWERED IN THIS ISSUE OF THE

DU PONT NYLON INFORMATION SERVICE

"Do I need to iron my nylon lingerie?"

Lady, you're lucky! Many nylon lingerie fabrics don't need to be ironed at all. But if you do decide that pressing will give an extra spruceness, you'll find that nylon's easy to iron. Use a cool iron—275° or the "rayon" or "nylon" setting. And here's a hint for hurriers: Don't wring out your nylon pretties; hang them wet, and smooth out wrinkles with your hands. You'll find that nylon things dry fast—and, in most cases, are ready to wear without ironing.

"Does Du Pont make nylon stockings?"

No! Nylon stockings are made by hundreds of manufacturers. Some mark their stockings "Made of Du Pont Nylon" because they have used the raw material, nylon, made by Du Pont, but Du Pont does not make the stockings.

"What affects the wear of nylon stockings?"

The life of your lovely nylon stockings depends on many things — fabric construction, proper fit and length, care in handling, whether you fasten your garters in the heavier, welt part of the stockings, and, of course, denier.

"What is denier?"

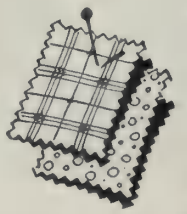
Denier is the weight and thickness of each thread in nylon stockings. You can buy stockings in 15, 20, 30, 40, 50, and 70 denier. The larger the denier number, the stronger the thread. A 15 denier thread is only half as heavy and half as strong as a 30 denier thread. Before 1948 most stockings were of the heavier 30 or 40 denier. Today, however, because of their sheer, leg-flattering beauty, many women prefer the 15 denier stockings. You can have your choice.

"What about nylon . . . and moths?"

One reason for the long life of your spun nylon sweaters and socks is that moths don't bother them. You see, moths find no food value in nylon. And you'll be glad to know that mildew doesn't weaken nylon either. Just make sure that your nylon things are thoroughly clean when you put them away, and storage worries are over.

"Do nylon pleats stay in?"

Pleats to marvel at, pleats that fall knife-sharp after washing, are yours when the pleats in your nylon gown have been properly heat-set by the manufacturer. When nylon pleats go through the right heat-setting process, you can wash them again and again without a single worry about the pleats coming out.



"Do I need to use stretchers when I wash my nylon curtains?"

The time-consuming job of curtain stretching can be eliminated when your nylon curtains are made of properly heat-set fabric. For heat setting—a process used by manufacturers to stabilize nylon fabrics—ends shrinkage worries. Ironing? It's quick and easy . . . just a light pressing with an iron set at the "rayon" or "nylon" control.

Nylon lingerie can be cool and comfortable. But spun nylon socks are snug and warm. Can you explain this?

Easily—nylon lingerie fabrics that are thin and porous permit air to circulate and remove body heat. Spun nylon socks contain millions of tiny "air pockets" that insulate, keep warmth in and cold out. Warmth or coolness in nylon fabrics is—as in fabrics made of other fibers — largely a matter of the construction of the yarn and the fabric.

"In part-nylon fabrics what does the nylon contribute?"

Strength and wear-life! Nylon fibers are so strong and durable that even a little adds a lot of wear to familiar fabrics in lingerie, suitings, socks, etc. And beyond that, nylon's strength and light weight make possible exciting new fabrics that feel like a feather yet wear like iron. Caution: unless the manufacturer provides special care instructions with the blended fabric you buy, handle part-nylon garments as if made entirely of the other fiber.

"Will spun nylon socks wash without shrinking?"

Here's one more way easy-living nylon saves you effort and expense. When spun nylon has been properly heat-set, even the heaviest nylon socks won't shrink or stretch out of size or shape. Forget about sock stretchers—just wash, dry and wear.

"Could I be allergic to nylon?"

As far as we know, body tissues are completely non-allergic to nylon fiber. That's why surgeons have used nylon sutures for years . . . why millions of toothbrushes are bristled with nylon. If dyes and finishes are non-irritating too, nylon fabrics are safe and gentle on even the tenderest skin.

"WHY DO YOU HAVE A NYLON INFORMATION SERVICE?"

As a service to you who buy and use nylon, we are running this series of advertisements aimed at answering some of the eager questions you've been asking about nylon.

Du Pont does not make nylon sweaters, socks, curtains, stockings, dresses—or any finished nylon product. Du Pont does, however, make the basic nylon fiber, from which all these things—and many more—are made. It takes hundreds of manufacturers to supply you at your retail stores with the extra-value nylon merchandise you have come to appreciate so much.

FREE! Learn more about nylon! Send for new leaflet "Care of Nylon." Write to E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Nylon Division, Dept. J-2, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING...THROUGH CHEMISTRY

For nylon . . . for rayon . . . for fibers to come . . . look to Du Pont

The Christmas way to say "My Darling!"

HERE'S ALL the silver she'll ever need to serve eight . . . with beauty to last for years and years! And you can afford to give it!

How she'll love setting her table with America's finest silverplate—1847 Rogers Bros.—so luxurious in looks and feel. Never will she need to make teaspoons triple as iced drink spoons, fruit spoons, demitasse spoons. She'll have all those and more . . . for a table service that's gracious and right.

It's a gift she'll love you for always!

1847 Rogers Bros., 103 pcs., complete service for 8. No Fed. tax. Easy terms. $128.75

Basic Services for 6, 8 or 12

Service for 12, 139 pieces, including chest. $177.75

Service for 8, 52 pieces, including chest. $69.75

Service for 8, 34 pieces, including chest. $49.75

Service for 6, 26 pieces, including chest. $39.75

1847 ROGERS BROS.

(Continued from Page 86)

ing flowers to garland one another and hollow two-foot bamboos that held arrack; they would drink it from one bowl that was passed round and round. With them was a drummer, and some of the men had flutes; in front of them, dancing backward, was a figure in a full red flowered skirt and anklets of bells; to the beat of the drum and the melancholy skipping rhythms of the pipe it held out its skirts and danced. It was the island dancer, a boy, McGinty saw with disgust, not knowing that here all dancers had to be boys. It was most improper in the island for women and girls to dance, but McGinty would not have believed the islanders could think anything improper.

He stood on the path, revolted, as the picnickers passed; whether they were sorry for his loneliness, or whether they wanted to tease him, standing upright and disapproving by the path, he never knew, but he found himself swept along with them. He was in a wave of laughing, of waving fronds, of soft hands touching him, the drum beating in his ears, the dancer whirling in front of him as they came down to the beach onto a bay of white sand by the sea.

The men sat down in a circle with the drum and McGinty sat with them. "I could see myself sitting there," he said afterward. "A nice fool I must have looked!"

The men began to sing. They sang each a verse of a song that McGinty felt was probably obscene and was addressed to one of the women. The women sat apart where the palm leaves made patterns of shadows in the moonlight on the shore, until one of them rose, delighted, holding her scarf across her face, and sang an answer back, demure or saucy, that moved the men to fresh laughter and fresh sallies.

The arrack from the bamboos was passed round in a coconut bowl; it tasted raw and burning to McGinty, and they kept giving him little stubs of green cigars that he refused to smoke. Then the women drew nearer, and suddenly, behind him on the sand, he felt someone warm and soft sit close against his back and a hand, small and warm, came round his chest and slid, with a soft movement, inside his shirt and laid its palm on his right breast. Eunice! thought McGinty, and pulled it out of his shirt and shook it away as if it had been a snake. He was outraged. From behind him came a little laugh; but it was not altogether a forgiving little laugh and, on the lobe of his ear, suddenly, he felt a sting of excruciating pain. He leaped to his feet, the men leaped with him, the women were scattered on the sand.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Image

By Dan G. Hoffman

Not even the mother
  Who combed her long hair
And held the girl's mirror
  Knew how she was fair.

Nor did she dream it,
  Vain as she was,
Who sat by the window
  And gazed at her glass,

That her image would linger
  All this time in his mind,
That there she'd stay young,
  Or the years prove so kind.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

McGINTY lost control of himself. "You —— you ——" he shouted in the moonlight. He could not think of anything to call them. "You ——" he shouted again. They all stared at him, the smeared painted face of the dancing boy looked up at him inquiringly; then the noise of his shout was lost in the waves along the shore; the stars looked down, the fireflies twinkled along the grass verges, and the drummer softly began to beat the drum again. "I go home," said McGinty with what dignity he could, and walked away. When he had gone he heard them laughing. That soft laughter followed him all the way up the beach. The little bitch, she bit me, said McGinty. Tears of mortification and homesickness were in his eyes. She had drawn blood. Now, the evening after, his ear still showed an angry small red mark.

He had been given a room at the back of the house that looked over the servants' courtyard. After Valentine had gone and he was idly lying on his bed, he saw Flora Annie (named for Flora Annie Steel's Cookery and Household Management) come out to pick flowers for the dressing tables; her curves, as she reached up to the sprays of flowering creeper, were far more luscious than any known to Eunice, her eyes were black and laughing, and her lips, which were mischievous, were red, but it was someone very like Flora Annie who had bitten McGinty at the picnic and he refused to look at her. All at once he felt he could not bear the place for another minute.

Valentine had promised not to try to get off the island, not to send a message to the outside world. He promised for me, I didn't promise, said McGinty.

WHEN McGinty excused himself from dinner, saying that it gave him indigestion and that he had a headache, Mr. van Loomis believed him. "He looked miserable enough," said Mr. van Loomis afterward. "Of course that sort of boy, when he looks miserable, looks ill-conditioned, but he looked ill. He might have had a headache." In a way McGinty had; he had a problem and he always said of a problem, "That's a headache."

When they were all on the veranda with their drinks, the servants busy and gossiping in the courtyard, McGinty came out of his room and made his way down to the beach.

Lamps were lit in the house behind him; savory smells and the sounds of that perpetual singing drifted from the servants' quarters. McGinty could see Valentine on the veranda, drinking and talking to Charis. Charis made him think of Eunice; with a lump in his throat and an empty stomach McGinty went proudly down to the beach. He despised Valentine.

He walked along the beach, picking his way among the boats. At last he found what he was looking for, the rubber dinghy.

He knew a fishing boat would be safer and lighter and easier to manage, but he preferred his rubber dinghy. He tested it and picked it up and carried it to the sea edge. When he saw that it floated well, he lowered himself into it; the paddles were in it, where he and Valentine had left them. He began to paddle out to sea.

His dinghy was small and lonely on the stretch of water between the mainland and the lighthouse where Mr. van Loomis's canoe had swept so proudly that morning. McGinty felt small and lonely too; the beam of the lamp shone out to sea, but it seemed to him he came no nearer to it. The moon was not yet up; outside the beam the dark was very dark, and he seemed to be paddling in it without moving. His arms ached and his empty stomach ached and his eyes felt hot and tearful; then, with the noise of a soft slur, the dinghy grounded on a shoal of sand below the rocks at the back of the light. He stepped out and picked his way across, slipping on the rocks and stumbling into pools.

Now that he was near to it, he could see how the beam of the lamp splayed out from the rocks in a wide luminous ray that was humming with insects. There was a whirring noise and a small blow on his chin that made him jump; a cockchafer had hit him in the face. McGinty shuddered and shook it off. Then he saw a dark shape on the rocks ahead of him: it was Mario, still fishing.

When the islanders fished by night they went in twos; one held a torch which he shone into the water, the other balanced on the prow of the boat to spear the fish. Mario was not skillful enough to spear; in any case, he had no companion, and he had always to fish from the shore with a line. He had made himself a new line that had taken him days

(Continued on Page 94)

Record-Playing Confusion—a Nuisance of the Past!

New Zenith Cobra-Matic

Plays any speed record now made or yet to come—10 R.P.M. to 85...and any size record—7, 10, 12 inch—available only on New Zenith Radio-Phonographs

HERE—AT LAST—is the radio-phonograph you so wisely waited for! With the first and only changer that automatically plays all records of any speed now made or yet to come... from 10 to 85 R.P.M.—7, 10 or 12 inch!

What's more, this new all-speed changer lets you adjust record speed for perfect pitch, or synchronize pitch to any musical instrument or voice! It's all done with two simple controls a child can operate. Just set one for record speed... the other for record size. THAT'S ALL THERE IS TO IT! One Super-Cobra Tone Arm plays all records. No needles, parts, spindles or weights to change or adjust!

Finest in Radio Reception, Too

In addition, you enjoy Zenith's Super-Sensitive FM, plus Zenith's famous Long-Distance® AM. Made better than ever in tone by a new speaker 2½ times more sensitive than any Zenith has used before!

Truly, here is an instrument combining the ultimate in musical pleasure from records and radio. See your Zenith dealer and see and hear for yourself!

Above, New Zenith® "Classic" Console Radio-Phonograph. Features the sensational new "Cobra-Matic" record changer plus Zenith Super-Sensitive FM and Long-Distance AM. Radiorgan® Tone Control. Chippendale cabinet in rich Mahogany veneers.

New Zenith "Carleton" Table Radio-Phonograph. "Cobra-Matic" record changer. Long-Distance AM radio. Super-size DialSpeaker permits larger speaker and larger dial. New type continuous tone control. Cabinet of smart, durable leather grained finish, in Mahogany or Blonde color.

© 1950

Zenith Radio Corporation, Chicago 39, Ill.
Over 30 Years of "Know-How" in Radionics® Exclusively
Also Makers of America's Finest Hearing Aids

ZENITH "LONG DISTANCE" RADIO and TELEVISION
THE ROYALTY OF RADIO AND TELEVISION

Candy Stripes by Wamsutta...

Gayest, brightest gift in a month of Christmases!

Enchanting new idea in sheets

Sweet for teen-agers

Practical for small fry

Supercale
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES BY WAMSUTTA

There's one gift that makes any woman go starry-eyed. It's Candy Stripes in Supercale . . . the freshest, youngest, most deliciously different sheets that ever graced a bed or gift box. Originals by Wamsutta—these woven-into-the-sheet Candy Stripes have the same "far ahead of the field" smartness that every Supercale sheet has always had in fineness, feel and texture. Look at (or drop hints about) Candy Stripes in pink, blue, maize or green for top sheets and pillowcases over snowy-white Supercale bottom sheets. They're all the same quality . . . made by the one Mill in all the world that can make a sheet of such exquisite quality, strength and long luxurious service.

five wonderful gift sets

In four wonderful colors—pink, blue, green or maize.

Set #1—One twin-bed top sheet, Candy Striped all over: one pillowcase, striped hem..... $12.95

Set #2—One double-bed top sheet, Candy Striped all over: two pillowcases, striped hems..... 18.95

Set #3—One twin-bed top sheet, white with Candy Striped hem: one pillowcase striped all over..... 12.95

Set #4—One double-bed top sheet, white with Candy Striped hem: two pillowcases striped all over..... 18.95

Set #5—Two pillowcases, all over Candy Stripes..... 6.60

Twin-bed sheets: 72" × 108", double-bed sheets 90" x 108". Pillowcases: 45" × 38½". All sheets and pillowcases hemstitched.

Glamorous for guestrooms

Even with your eyes closed, you can tell by the silken rustle that it could only be Supercale by Wamsutta!

Marvelous in the master bedroom give her

GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE

Fashion Five*

one wonderful stocking with five wonderful features.

at fine stores everywhere, $1.95.

GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE

BEAUTIFUL STOCKINGS

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC., 200 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 91)

to get ready; but, as before, he had baited it too heavily and he had caught nothing. He was feeling injured, doubly so because Jéo had gone again to the mainland, leaving him to watch the light. When he heard McGinty he thought it was Jéo come back, and he scowled.

McGinty saw the dark hunched shape and the big heavy head that turned round toward him, the eyes shining under the matted hair, and he knew that this was someone who was what McGinty called "not all there."

"Hello," said McGinty gently.

To his immense surprise it answered in English, a kind of English. "Whadda want?"

McGinty came up. "You the chap in charge of the light?" he asked.

No one had ever called Mario a chap before. He did not know what it was, but it did not sound unfriendly. He knew McGinty must be one of the strangers of whom Jéo had told him. He could see McGinty in the reflection of the light. Red as Loomis, muttered Mario to himself. Speaks like Loomis but not like Loomis speaks. He speak as if he don't . . . hate me, said Mario.

"Any objection to me having a look-see?" asked McGinty.

Mario gathered he was asking his permission. No one had ever asked Mario's permission for anything before and it made him feel shy. He turned and said gruffly, "Look."

The lighthouse itself was simply a round pillbox of cement in which the kerosene for the lamp was stored and in which Jéo and his father or Mario lived while they were at the light. In one corner was a string bed, Jéo's hat on a peg, a few gourd and earthenware utensils, and some stores. From the pillbox iron steps led up to the lamp that stood railed under a corrugated roof; the lenses, shining with warmth, were crawled over by myriad insects. There was nothing on the platform but a stool and the lamp and, lying on the floor beside it, its canvas cover. McGinty went back down the steps.

Down below, in the room, he shone his torch round again and saw in the corner an old iron safe. It was open. In it were some signal flags and cords, a few papers, and a rough log clipped with rusty clips to a board. McGinty could not read Jéo's log, but he guessed it was the counting of ships. There were not many marks in each moon. Then they do pass here, not often, sometimes, said McGinty. I thought they must, and he looked round again and once more went up to the platform. There he picked up the lamp cover and looked at it, and he began to think.

THE cover fitted over the lamp and its flaps laced up; if McGinty put it on with the opening turned toward the sea the beam was hidden except for a narrow slit; if he turned the edges of the cover slightly back, they left a larger aperture like a narrow panel, and a narrow but just as powerful ray shone out to sea. Hastily, looking back at the mainland, he slipped the cover off again; then he thought of how Mr. van Loomis lingered talking at the table after dinner, of how, in the servants' quarters and the villages, they would sit round, eating and smoking and talking; the moon was up, Jéo's picnic would have begun. McGinty began to think he need not hurry. He put the cover on again and arranged his panel; he worried a little about the cover scorching and catching fire with the heat of the lamp; if he soaked it in sea water the glass would crack. Have to risk it. If I keep it on only five minutes at a time it ought to do, then take it off and cool it. Now, what can I use as a shutter?

He remembered, down below, that Jéo had a playing board. He had seen the islanders playing a species of draughts on those boards, but flicking the wooden draughtsmen with their fingers. He ran down to the storeroom and fetched it. It was exactly right, about two feet square, made in one piece of light wood and inlaid with the island veneer of checkered dark and pale wood. McGinty began to arrange the flaps, and he was almost happy, he was doing something positive again. As he worked he whistled.

His whistle reached Mario where he sat lapsed back into his misery on the rocks. Soon Mario stood up and shambled over to the lighthouse. He was in the doorway before McGinty heard him. Mario saw the knacker board.

"That-a Jéo's," he said.

"Jéo only uses it to play with," said McGinty severely. "I want it for work."

He had planned for five minutes at a time; he thought the cover would not heat as quickly as that. He thought he would send out the most simple signal possible and, after a great deal of cogitation, he had decided to signal SOS followed by VAL.

They ought to get that, said McGinty. All the papers all over the world must be ringing with us, and it will be plain sending. After all, Val's a somebody. He set his teeth. I'm going to do it, said McGinty. I'm going to get it through.

He began, standing to the right of the light, working the board as a shutter: . . . — — — . . . . . — . — . — . . He could not have believed he could be as clumsy as he was; his arms and wrists ached, he was unbelievably slow, but he felt that it was plain. If I can do it every night this Jéo goes ashore, someone ought to see it, said McGinty.

"What-a you-a do?" asked Mario.

"Talking," said McGinty.

"Talking?"

"Yep. Talking."

Talking! Mario felt as heady as if he had drunk a two-foot bamboo of arrack. His poor senses were swimming. He came nearer to McGinty. "Who-a you are?"

"The man in the moon," said McGinty, going on with his signaling.

"Charis show-a me the man in the moon," said Mario. "He-a not real. You-a real. I not-a see anyone like-a you before; so-a pretty," said Mario adoringly.

"Pretty!" said McGinty. "What the ——" Then saw that when he was angry Mario shrank. "Don't talk nonsense," said McGinty more gently.

"I do anything for-a you, anything," said Mario. "I show-a you the island. I show-a you girls ——"

"No girls," said McGinty, standing upright and taking off the cover and folding it back on the floor, "you take this board and put it back, and you be quiet about it, see? No-a tell. No-a tell!"

"I cut-a my tongue out," said Mario.

"Needn't do that," said McGinty. "Just don't talk, see?" And he went down the steps with Mario after him and started to find his way back to the dinghy. He had forgotten he was hungry and forgotten he was tired. He was still whistling.

"You-a come back?" Mario asked.

"You bet I'll come back. Look. Will the keeper, Jéo or whatever his name is, go away tomorrow night?"

Mario shook his head violently. "Moon time, picnic time on island," he said. "Jéo gone tomorrow." Mario liked the island picnics as much as McGinty disapproved of them, and he was never invited, but now he did not mind. "I tell-a Jéo. Go. Mario watch-a light. He go. You-a come?"

"I come," said McGinty.

Mario knelt down in front of him and kissed his foot.

"Here! Here!" said McGinty, and he felt himself go scarlet to his ears.

"You-a come back," said Mario happily. "You-a better than Loomis. I glad and proud of you. I-a worship you."

MCGINTY practised signaling in his room. He was getting faster and smoother. It had become accepted now that he did not come in for late dinner, and every evening, while the others were on the veranda, he slipped out in his dinghy across to the light.

For the rest, he lived as far as possible to himself and he found it bitterly lonely. He lay on his bed or played patience with an old pack of cards, and defiantly he went out in the siesta time and bathed or sat on the sands under the palms, shying pebbles at a coconut he had set up as a target on a rock. That was the most secret time on the island—everyone was asleep—and often he paddled across to the lighthouse and fetched Mario. Sometimes at night, after the signaling—and McGinty signaled for only half an hour at a time—they would go ashore together again.

Mario showed McGinty the island. He showed McGinty many things he did not know he had shown. McGinty did not know a great deal himself, but even he could see the wealth Mr. van Loomis had built up on the island. Mario showed him the fishing industries round the coast, the pearls, the coral, the fresh and dried fish; he showed him the fields and the Indian corn, tobacco, groundnuts and cotton; the coffee and tea, the timber, the vineyards, and the orchards high up on the hill; he showed him the gold washing in the upper streams and the little silver mine.

"What does he do with all this? Doesn't he do anything?"

Mario nodded his head.

"What couldn't he do!" said McGinty. "All this, belonging to one man. It's fantastic. It's not right."

Mario shook his head violently.

Filipino would have said it was not fair for one man to own more than another; McGinty was not so naïve as that: he knew the

(Continued on Page 96)

"Now don't go making a fuss over theirs unless they do over ours."

Now—finest, most beautiful

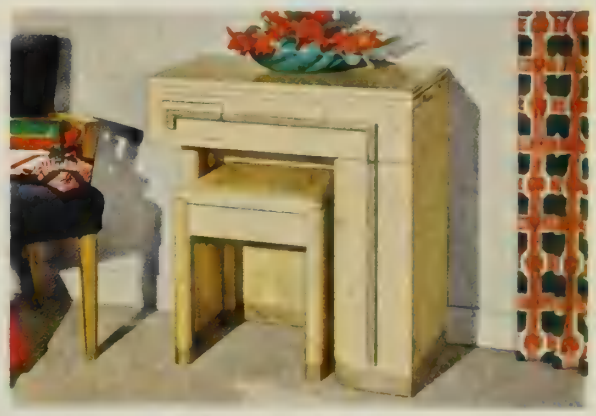
SINGER SEWING MACHINES

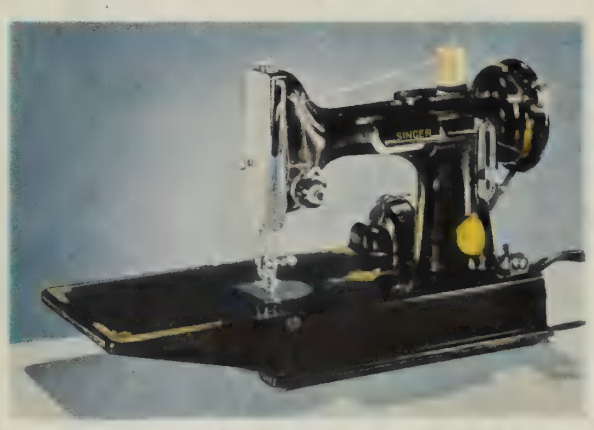
in 99 Christmases!

MARVELOUS as that first SINGER* Sewing Machine was, 99 Christmases ago, you ought to see the beauties that you can buy today!

Handsomely styled machines in decorator cabinets. Machines that go forward and backward... stitch over pins to save basting... are adaptable with attachments for every kind of detail from monograms to invisible hemming.

As always, they're the finest-stitching, most dependable machines in the world. One of the best-loved gifts under any Christmas tree.





For ■ lover of tradition—the graceful Queen Anne model! Satiny walnut or mahogany finish. Beautiful, dependable as only a SINGER can be.

For the modern home—a handsome desk-model cabinet with a smooth-stitching SINGER inside. Choice of blond, oak, or walnut finish. One of many styles!

Where space is a problem—the SINGER* Featherweight Portable! Weighs only 11 lbs., has all the features of a large-size model. Comes in handy carrying case.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION

Remember—SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade Mark and the "SINGER SEWING CENTER" emblem on the window, and never through department stores, dealers, or other outlets.

Above is the SINGER SEWING CENTER at 334 W. Western Avenue, Muskegon, Mich. Hundreds more from coast to coast. For address nearest you, see classified phone directory under SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

*A Trade Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Copyright, U.S.A., 1950, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.

DOZENS OF OTHER LADY-LOVE-'EM GIFTS!

Practical-but-pretty sewing boxes, scissors sets, needle cases and a host of other useful gifts. At your SINGER SEWING CENTER.

A SINGER for little sister! A child-size sewing machine that actually works. Sews perfect chain stitch. Safe, easy to use. Leatherette case.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

You sleep, too, when he goes Pullman

Ask him to GO PULLMAN

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE AND - ABOVE ALL - SAFE!

RAILROAD TRAVEL AT ITS BEST

(Continued from Page 94)

size of men was various, but he had not visualized a size as large as this.

"He ought not to keep it," said McGinty. "It ought to be used. It ought to trade, go into towns and shops and houses. It would make money, a lot of money. The island would be different then," said McGinty. "It would be more like a place! It's not right!"

"Not-a right!" said Mario, shaking his head violently, and he began to pour out to McGinty his garbled, distorted story. McGinty could not understand Mario's English or the long passionate interruptions in Spanish, but he gathered that it was something to do with Mario's mother and Mr. van Loomis. Mr. van Loomis's name came into it again and again.

"Did he take it?" asked McGinty. "He says he bought it."

"No-a! No-a!" said Mario passionately, beating his chest. "He-a take it. You-a help Mario? Please-a! Please! Please!"

McGinty was embarrassed, but he knew that one should not distress or cross the Marios of this world more than one need. "All right!" said McGinty. He said it to soothe Mario; he did not know that, like Filipino and print, Mario took each word of his as gospel.

"You-a kill Loomis," cried Mario fiercely.

"I'll knock him down," said McGinty.

To his horror he saw Mario begin to cry; the tears ran down Mario's cheeks. "I thank-a God for you! I-a follow you all-a my life. You-a beat Loomis. You-a chief!"

"Aw! Shut up!" said McGinty.

When Charis came onto the veranda for breakfast next morning and kissed her father and took her place, Valentine's chair was empty. "Isn't he up yet?" she asked.

"Long ago," said Mr. van Loomis. "I sent him logging."

Charis stopped with the coffeepot in her hand, the cup half filled. "You sent him—what?"

"Logging," said Mr. van Loomis. "May I have my coffee, please?"

"But, father ——"

"My coffee."

Charis's hand shook as she poured it out and passed it to him. "But—you don't mean ——"

"I do. Why not?" said Mr. van Loomis. "Why should I keep those lazy young scamps on the island doing nothing?" He was delighted to see Charis's dismay. "I work. Why shouldn't they?"

"But, father, Valentine is Valentine Doubleday!"

"I don't care who he is. He has two hands like the rest of us and a stomach that has to be filled. Why should I fill it for him? What would have happened to me if I had stopped to think who I was when I came here—or to you?"

"But . . . Valentine!" cried Charis.

MR. VAN LOOMIS was pleased. He had thought that Charis had cooled; as Valentine grew warmer, she withdrew. Mr. van Loomis thought this annoying, but it was natural. Charis, too, had seen Valentine change and had begun to know that presently she might have something serious to consider; she was considering, but Mr. van Loomis thought she had cooled and he had resolved to blow on the fire.

"But he is our guest, father."

"He is not! Guests are invited," said Mr. van Loomis. "I sent for them both yesterday and told them they would have to do something for their keep. If someone doesn't go up there the men take days to get the logs down, and why should I go when Doubleday is here doing nothing? Why shouldn't he work?"

"It isn't his work," said Charis in growing consternation. "You know it isn't. He isn't used to it."

"He soon will be," said Mr. van Loomis, unperturbed. "In the s— it will do him good. He looked stale as if he didn't get enough exercise. This will exercise him. I sent McGinty to start taking the census. I have always wanted to take a census of the island. He must at least know a man from a woman."

"He would hate that," said Charis. "He doesn't want to have anything to do with the island. But Valentine logging! Oh, I'm ashamed." Mr. van Loomis was glad to see that there were tears in her eyes and that she could not eat any breakfast.

She has it badly, thought Mr. van Loomis.

Meanwhile Valentine was up on the hill. The trees had been felled in the forest and cut into lengths. In Mr. van Loomis's early days the islanders used to carry the logs laboriously down the hill, but he had soon evolved a way of getting them down on the island's solitary river that had its source in a spring almost at the mountain's top. It was quite a large river. The fall fell into a pool below where, opening in rapids, the river swirled down into the valley and ran into the sea. At the brink of the waterfall, on the edge of the top pool, Mr. van Loomis had built his sluice gates.

All sluice gates that Valentine had seen—and he had seen them in the Great Lakes and the Maine forests—had been enormous and enormously heavy of heavy wood, raised on wheels by man or steam power. Mr. van Loomis's gates were necessarily nothing like that; they were meant to hold the water back for a short while, perhaps for half an hour, until the pool was full enough to bring the logs down with it in its first rush over the fall. In any case, the islanders could not have made heavy gates; they had not tools enough. Mr. van Loomis's gates were simply slats of several thicknesses of bamboo, woven together like the bamboo-hut walls and the house window slats; the thicknesses were laid together, lashed around the edges, and heavily soaked with oil; they gave just enough impediment to the water to dam it for the short while needed.

Standing on the bank, Valentine thought at first that the work went perfectly without him; men dragged or carried logs from the forest and tipped them into the pool where they floated, eddying as the water came down. Logs and water gathered in the pool, which rose higher and higher until there was a shout, the men on the trunks sprang back; the moment had come when the gates could hold no longer. Two teams of men pulled on the ropes that raised the gates in a rough frame (even bamboo, sodden, was heavy), the gates came up, and water and cut logs swirled together over the verge and down the fall, each hitting the pool below with a heavy splash and the thumping reverberating sound of wood hitting wood as they fell and whirled in the white water of the pool. Here were more men with poles, watching warily above to see no log leaped the pool. Afterward they poled the logs to the rapids before the rush of water was lost. The logs did not jam, they were cut too short, they slid down easily to the valley; there a great tree had been dragged by bullocks across the stream, making a bar against which the logs would lie, not rotting in the water, until Mr. van Loomis had need of them.

The only thing Valentine actively did was to blow his whistle, then leap from the tree trunk to the bank, and that only when he was warned by the shout, but he began to see, with Mr. van Loomis, that his presence was important. Left to themselves, the islanders would have left the logs standing as trees and contented themselves with the easily cut and worked bamboo. They did not object to work; they enjoyed the excitement of bringing down the logs and they shouted and laughed as they rolled them or wielded their long poles but, left to themselves, they would presently have squatted down on their heels for a smoke or to play marbles with pebbles. Valentine and his whistle kept their energy alert.

THE MEMORY LINGERS ON

A jolly good way to remember your friends and relatives this Christmas is to send LADIES' HOME JOURNAL gift subscriptions. They are easy to order. They last all year and the cost is small compared with the pleasure given. Each gift will be announced in your name with a beautiful card in full rich colors, mailed to arrive at just the right time before Christmas.

A handy order form is in nearly every copy of this issue.

IT was a long time since Valentine had been made to work; he had worked, and worked hard, but not under orders, as in the army and at school. Mr. van Loomis had given him no choice but to obey his orders, and that gave Valentine a sense of rest. It was a long time, too, since he had been up so early in the morning.

Up here, on the hill, the forest smelled of dried grass and dew and flowers. It had none of the damp leaf-mold earth smell of temperate forests. From where he stood, Valentine could see orchids—This is where they get them for the window sills—and, down the narrow glades between the trees, in shafts of sunlight, he saw butterflies, brilliant swallowtails, and bushes of wild-coffee flowers. On the way up he had seen monkeys, parakeets and a swarm of wild bees. Though it was cool, it was unmistakably a tropical forest but, this morning, he felt part of it, merged into it.

He had woken that morning feeling the quick of the island as he had felt it even before he landed on it. He could not speak to these islanders, or they to him, but he felt at one with them, understanding and friendly. They worked naked, except for a cloth tied tightly round their waist and passing between their legs; he was only in shorts, and his skin was beginning to tan; if I stay here, I shall soon be as brown as they are, he thought.

As Valentine stood on the tree trunk by the sluice gates he could feel the trunk trembling under his feet; presently, with the first pull on the gates, he would feel the water stir: only its length behind it on the bank made the trunk safe from being swept down. The logs pounded in the pool, their cut ends lifting, pale against their dark bark—or brightly red. He could feel the spray on his cheeks and on his shoulders and on his hair. This was the first time on the island that he had been without the sound of the surf in his ears; he felt as if he had reached a secret place that, before, had been locked to him.

I should like to stay here, thought Valentine, if I didn't have to go back. Immediately the question came, Why go back?

He thought of that going back: of landing; of the examining of passports and health certificates and money and baggage. He thought of Tuggie coming to meet him, and his man Joe, and Wallace, his secretary. They would all have news for him, and part of it would inevitably be news of difficulties, upsets, cuts, gaps, quarrels, decisions. In that quiet place in the forest it seemed to him unbearable. Why go back? thought Valentine.

To live.

"That isn't life," said Valentine aloud. He felt the spray on his skin again, the trunk tingling under his feet, and heard the happy shouting. "This is life."

It's not your work.

I can't flatter myself, thought Valentine bitterly, that my work is important, and, as he thought that, he knew it was important for him, and the more he denied it, the more important it would become. The theater is the heart of my mind, said Valentine. It's inseparable from me, and that is the truth.

(Continued on Page 98)

Heirloom's
*"Mansion House"

THREE GREAT PATTERNS FAMOUS FOR THEIR FRESHNESS, ORIGINALITY

Heirloom's
*"Lasting Spring"

Heirloom's
*"Damask Rose"

This Christmas build your family treasure of Heirloom Sterling*

6 PIECE PLACE SETTING $27.50 FEDERAL TAX INCLUDED

*Trade Mark. © 1950, Oneida Ltd., Oneida, N.Y.

Elizabeth Arden

presents

Inspired

Christmas

— Gifts

"Box Office" Appeals (to all)

A Case of love at first sight! Sleek black, red, brown or navy simulated leather case with built-in mirror, Ardena cleansing cream, skin lotion, Velva cream, Pat-a-Crème, Illusion face powder, cream rouge, Eye-Shado, and Lipstick! $5.

After-Bath Beauty Set

Gift for any lovely creature . . . Elizabeth Arden's exquisitely fine dusting powder, scented with her classic Blue Grass fragrance . . . plus Blue Grass Flower Mist with its own atomizer, $3.85

Elizabeth Arden

691 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, PLAZA 9-2040

(Continued from Page 96)

and he immediately thought, Nonsense! It's a habit, that's all: an excuse like all the excuses that keep people in prison. I want to be free. I need to be free, cried Valentine, and the sound of the river, the cool spray, the lifting logs, the trees, the shafts of light, the glades where the sun fell, the orchids and the butterflies, all seemed to answer, reasonably, "Why not?"

Then, pell-mell, into this man's world, came Charis.

Valentine had been thinking a great deal about Charis. He wondered why he had accepted her at once. Real live people, thought Valentine, ask themselves about other people, ask if they are in love. Why haven't I? Is it because I have been dreaming? But he knew quite well he was not dreaming. Charis, this cool slim stranger, had walked easily into a place that no one had been in before, a place that Valentine had instinctively defended and kept empty. How had it happened? It's her peculiar faculty for getting under chinks, thought Valentine with irritation; the irritation was not worrying but stimulating; it pricked him into life; and she isn't sweet, thought Valentine as if that were a great virtue, and then he remembered how sweet Charis could be; but not cloying, thought Valentine, sweet and sour, well arranged. That was a strange thing to commend in a woman, but what an important part of a woman it was. Yes, I am in danger of falling in love, thought Valentine, or I am near its safety. He did not know yet which to say. If any string is pulled it will decide it, felt Valentine. I only need a jerking . . . and Charis came riding Dominion full tilt out of the forest.

She came so fast partly because of her own indignation and partly because, with Valentine's advent, she had neglected her riding and Dominion had not been out for days; the white pony, coming out of the green of the forest into a shaft of sun, was dazzling. Charis's cheeks were flaming, her eyes wider, more darkly green than Valentine had seen them. The island had no way of making breeches or riding skirts, and Charis rode in the grass skirt that the women used for road work or harvesting or fishing. The strands of the skirt divided on the saddle and hung flickeringly across her legs, showing them bare from the thigh downward; they looked slim and white to Valentine. Her bodice was the usual island scarf, tied across her breasts, leaving her waist bare, and she wore a straw hat, its brim large and turned back, its crown tied under her chin with cords. Because she was indignant with her father she had lost her paleness and reserve; Charis was Scottish born but island bred: when she was really angry and moved, she showed she was angry and moved; now she was alight with anger and pity.

"Valentine!" she cried, flinging herself off Dominion before he had stopped. "Oh, Valentine!" sobbed Charis.

"What is the matter, Charis?"

"Father. What is he dreaming of? How dare he do this to you?"

"Do what?"

"Make you work . . . f-for us. As if we—we . . . I'm so ashamed!"

"But I like it," said Valentine. "I'm happy. I'm enjoying it."

Her anger turned on him. "Then you oughtn't to enjoy it. You should know it isn't fit!" said Charis like a wildcat.

Valentine had kept his hands on her elbows. The noise of the fall and the river made it necessary for him to bend down to hear what she said. Her elbows were warm and slim in his hands, he liked the hardness of their small knit bones, the soft flesh over them; his face was close to hers, the shadows of the trees and the light behind them made small dancing sunspots on her skin, and the green of the trees made her wet eyes greener still; her lips were open and trembling. Valentine kissed her on the mouth.

The forest seemed to swing away from Charis; the river sounded loudly in her ears; she was giddy. He kissed her again.

There was a warning shout behind them. Valentine was too late to blow his whistle; he pushed Charis back, and the bank shuddered under them as the ropes strained; the gates came up and another twenty or thirty logs rode and spun over the fall. When they had gone and all the shouting was below, he turned back to Charis.

"You shouldn't interrupt when I'm at work," he said, annoyed.

"I'm sorry," said Charis meekly, but she did not look sorry.

After a moment he stood beside her, but he did not touch her; he seemed to be thinking. Charis saw how different his face looked from that first day: it looked untormented and at rest. Then he spoke.

"Charis," he said gravely, "I suppose you know that I know and have known, have been friends with, many women and girls."

"I didn't suppose anything else," said Charis coldly, but her heart began to beat so fast that it hurt her. What is he going to tell me? she thought. That he is sorry he kissed me because —— She felt hot with shame; she thought it was singularly tasteless of Valentine to boast at this moment.

"I'm not boasting," said Valentine as if he answered her. "There were very many. Some I liked very much, some I loved, some loved me. Some I thought beautiful; some I loved for no particular reason, just loved them," said Valentine abstractedly, his eyes on Charis's face.

There was silence. Charis raised her chin.

"But with one thing and another," said Valentine, apparently with not the least idea that he was affronting her, "I was lucky enough not to be tied in any way, to any of them."

"Why lucky?" asked Charis, trying to speak lightly and hating Valentine. "Why lucky, if you loved them?"

"Because now I have found you."

Charis's heart gave a jolt that made her catch her breath. Her lids came down on her eyes under the look in his.

He asked her, "Charis, you love me, don't you?"

It was some moments before she answered. "I have never seen another woman," said Charis, "except Pheasant and the islanders, of course. I have never seen a white man, except my father, till you came, but I can't imagine anyone else who would be like you." She broke off. "I shouldn't talk to you like this. Father would be angry."

"He shouldn't be angry," said Valentine. "I have been very patient with him. Did he think I should put up with him for one moment but for you? I didn't think I should turn into a river hog for you, though."

Charis did not laugh. She looked at him steadily and the green seemed to burn in her eyes. "I love you," she said. "And do you love me? You haven't told me."

"Yes," said Valentine. He bent and kissed her again.

Mr. van Loomis, who had just come up the track and was standing mopping his forehead under a tree, saw them and was glad. Splendid, said Mr. van Loomis, and, before he put his hat on again, he said, God bless them!

"But why are you crying?" Valentine asked Charis.

"Because . . . I want to give you so much," said Charis. "I want to do so much for you, and who am I? Nobody beside you. How can I ever learn enough? How can I hope to keep up with you? How can I expect what I want from you?" Then she checked herself. "But that's nonsense," said Charis firmly. "I refuse to talk like that; but please, Valentine, I want to say it plainly and then I shall never say it again: I will be anything, do anything, go anywhere, if I can be near you."

"Hush," said Valentine. "It's I who should say that to you."

"Then you love me," said Charis. She did not ask it as a question but said it, satisfied.

"Yes, I love you," said Valentine, and to him also it seemed a satisfying and peaceful fact. "I love you," he repeated.

"As a husband?" asked Charis shrewdly.

Valentine was taken aback. Here, on the island, it had not been necessary to envisage himself as a husband with Charis as a wife. Husband, wife, thought Valentine. He saw Charis in London, New York, Paris, and, he thought suddenly, there would be a smooth path where there had never been smoothness before; he thought of finding her in the flat when he came in tired and ruffled; but we shouldn't have a flat, thought Valentine, we should find a house of our own. No matter where he saw her, he saw her with him, with him but still Charis, still herself, and he said firmly, "I love you as a husband."

"A husband is a status," Charis reminded him. "A husband has to be something as well as do it."

"A wife too," said Valentine. He drew her closer and put his hand under her chin. "I have kissed you, Charis. You have not kissed me. Kiss me." and Charis kissed him.

Splendid! said Mr. van Loomis.

As he came down from the mountain, Mr. van Loomis walked more and more slowly. An inextricable sadness was beginning to be mixed with his triumph. I must be getting old, said Mr. van Loomis. That depressed him more. He sent for Filipino to rub his feet with a towel and bring dry sandals, but when his feet were dry and warm he still felt chilled.

"Everything is going splendidly, splendidly," said Mr. van Loomis aloud to buoy himself up. "Everything is turning out well." Then why should he be filled with this strange depression?

He went into his study and sat down in his revolving chair and drummed his fingers on the desk. Time passes and children grow

(Continued on Page 100)

* * * * * * * * *

Winter: Maternal Version

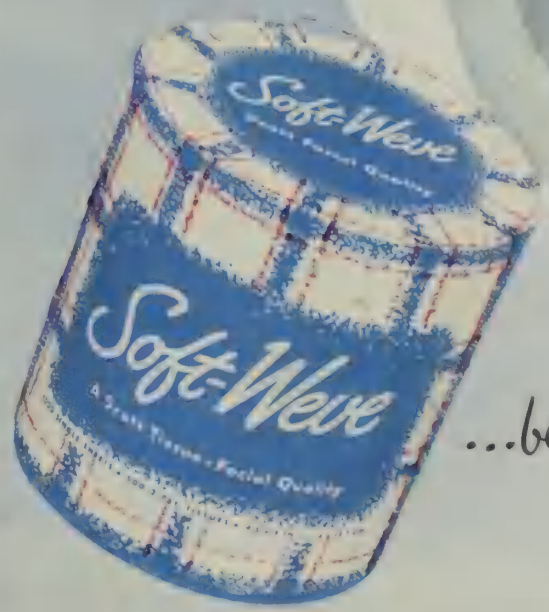
By Marjorie Lederer Lee

Oh, winter's a wonderful season:
Consider the breath-taking sight
When the sky is as blue as a bluebird,
And the road is a ribbon of white. . . .

(Stand still while I pull on your sweaters!
Head up while I fasten your cap!
Don't kick while I snap your galoshes!
Stop squirming all over my lap!)

Oh, winter's a fabulous season:
Consider the poets who sing
Of the weather as clear as an ice cube,
And the wind with the whip of a wing. . . .

(Quit eating the thumb off your mitten!
Who invented this outfit, I beg?
We shall now get undressed and start over;
You've got both of your feet in one leg!)



Oh, winter's a beautiful season:
Consider the glittering mass
Of the icicles hung from the willow,
And the lawn like a blanket of glass. . . .

And consider its charm for a mother
Who from morning till night fights the bout
Of stuffing her kids into snow suits
(To say nothing of digging them out!)

* * * * * * * * *

It's Soft as a Cloud ...yet firm and practical!

To make a toilet tissue as soft as cleansing tissue is one thing. To make it strong and practical as well, is more difficult. But cleansing tissue softness with strength is what you'll find in Soft-Weve. We call it "water-woven." This two-ply tissue is utterly soft yet firm—almost like cloth. Once you have used Soft-Weve you will want it always.

Cleansing tissue soft... yet toilet tissue firm ...because it's double!

Good Gifts come in small packages!

Here's a practical gift with a novelty "lift"! Packed with a miniature hat in a miniature hat box, the Mallory Gift Certificate lets him choose a real Mallory in his own favorite style, size and color. See your Mallory dealer. Certificates $7.50 to $20.

MALLORY hats

DANBURY, CONN.—ALSO MADE IN CANADA—FINE HATS FOR MEN AND WOMEN

A Sweetheart of a Figure

YOURS FOR SURE WITH LIFE BRA

More women wear Formfit than any other make! And Life Bras are made only by Formfit. Designed from live models to fit your exact figure proportions. Life Bras LIFT—MOLD—CONTACT—HOLD. They give you a high, young, natural lift with real separation. Be fitted and see!

Long Line Life Bra Illustrated, $5.00

Other Life Bras from $1.25

Life by Formfit

(Continued from Page 98)

up, thought Mr. van Loomis. One should not be attached. No matter how reasonably he said it, Mr. van Loomis felt unreasonably attached; all he could think of was, Charis is gone—gone!

"She isn't gone. Nonsense!" said Mr. van Loomis, and he said it aloud to make it more firm. "She isn't gone. She is still here, and Valentine, I believe, is settling. Given a little while longer he might even ——" He broke off. Did he mean to keep Valentine here? That was a question Mr. van Loomis had been evading in his mind. Now that uneasy Scottish conscience stirred and raised its head. "You didn't put out a signal, and when they asked you if you had you didn't tell a lie, that is true, but you gave the impression of a lie." Mr. van Loomis combed his beard through with cross fingers and then drummed on the desk again. He returned to Charis. Already she took Valentine's part against her father.

That is all the thanks I get, thought Mr. van Loomis; to be a parent is a thankless task! Already she quotes his opinions, Charis whom I brought up to think for herself! He thought of how he had brought her up, taught her, guided her, and then he saw again the ball for his coming of age; he saw the lights shining down on the velvet coats, the well-brushed heads, the tartans, the white shoulders; a ball should have been given for Charis, it should have culminated in that; she could have worn her pearls . . . and known they were pearls.

Instead of a ball, tomorrow night he would take her up to the temple for the full-moon rainbow dances. What have I done? thought Mr. van Loomis. She has grown up without society or state or church. Have I robbed her? Then he looked out and saw his island garden where Charis had grown, his quiet lawns and fragrant trees and the sea shimmering beyond it.

> Years and sins are always more than owned.
> —ITALIAN PROVERB.

All round him the morning was filled with the activities he had made; they had been his world, but now they seemed to him superficial and unimportant, as if the meaning had gone out of them. They seemed irrelevant, and he wondered suddenly if that was how they appeared to the islanders. Am I irrelevant? he asked himself suddenly, and he felt as humble as he had that moment in the study on the day he had hidden the Water Star.

From where he sat he could hear the sounds of water and air and fire and earth that made the island pulse, a pulse as strong and inexorable as creation, that would go on beating through time. "You come or you go," it said to Mr. van Loomis. "A few little scratches that may remain or may be wiped out," and it seemed to reprove him and say, "You have been strangely puffed up."

Mr. van Loomis was indignant. I have worked as hard and honestly as any man.

"When you worked as a man it was permissible," it said. "But that conjuring, that monkeying about with the plane and that about the stars —— If you usurp ——" Mr. van Loomis felt suddenly afraid; "usurp" was an unpleasant word. Thinking of usurping, he thought suddenly and, it seemed to him inconsequently, of McGinty. All his pent-up feeling flooded out in anger against him. If anyone upsets my plans it will be McGinty! he said.

He had set the islanders to watch McGinty. They watched McGinty. They saw him go out to the lighthouse, but that was to play knacker with Mario Fernandes. Sometimes, they all knew, instead of playing knacker, McGinty Tsula made a shadow play in front of the light, but that seemed to them harmless, if mad. They might have reported it, but Jéo was afraid that, if they did, Mr. van Loomis would take Mario off the light, and Jéo was courting a tall girl with springing lines and a high-held head and eyes of a warm promise who had several of the island men after her; she made Jéo wild with jealousy and longing, and he could think of nothing else. The courtship moon was nearing its full, and everyone had i portant matters to attend to. To the isla ers Mario and McGinty were not importa what they did on the light harmed no one

Mr. van Loomis did not care to th about McGinty; but McGinty was pers ent. Persistent, puny and impudent, said M van Loomis; now, suddenly, without wa ing, that was what he seemed to be hims Am I a McGinty? asked Mr. van Loomis seemed to him that in truth he was. "Ev man is every man," he had once said Charis sententiously (he saw now he h often been sententious); but it was merely sententious, it was true. We are brothers, said Mr. van Loomis in disgust, did not want to be McGinty's brother brother to the thick, slow, simple, bes Mario with his lusts, but he had to ad he was. Yes, I am lustful, thought Mr. Loomis gloomily. He was brother to quick visionary in Filipino, even kin to whom he could not fathom. Once again had the thought that Niu was the island, now he saw that for these twenty years had not been his servant, but he Niu's.

A sound at his elbow made him turn was Filipino with his tray of midmorn rum and milk. Mr. van Loomis took it drank it. He felt he needed it.

"Tsula," said Filipino.

"Go away," said Mr. van Loomis, Filipino lingered.

"Tsula, when you go away with T Valentine, what happen to us then?"

Mr. van Loomis spun round to look Filipino. "Go away? Why should I go awa

"Won't you go aw Tsula?"

"Don't talk nonsen said Mr. van Loo "Why should I go awa His eye fell on the n bags where they had b thrown down on the McGinty brought them in. "You stop t ing and bring me those," said Mr. Loomis severely.

When Mr. van Loomis had read the letter of the pile of papers and letters he sorted on his desk after Filipino had emp them out of the bags, he sat very quiet his chair. He drummed his fingers on desk, on his knees, on the desk. He felt they were drumming in his ears.

Presently he took up his pen and abs mindedly began to trace words on the pa front of him. He wrote the same word and over again: "Spey." Spey! said Mr. Loomis. He had written it like a signatu was a long time since he had signed hi that. He stared down at it and a ripp ominous cold seemed to go over him. M go back to being that? thought Mr. Loomis. Could I go back?

Over and above the steady pulse seemed to hear the sound of clicking. It a clicking of typewriters and tape mach and countless heels on busy pavement click of machinery and engines and cl Mumbo-jumbo! said Mr. van Loomis. cadabra! He knew nothing of Valent world of forms and coupons, but his gove world of wonders was much the same, a him, even more than to Valentine, it see dreadful; he dreaded it as he dreaded and politicians, politics and policies, trigues and calculations.

"No!" cried Mr. van Loomis sha aloud. "No. I can't go back. I can't."

"Tsula! Tsula!"

He lifted his head. For the last few utes a sound had been steadily growing in the room, but outside in the air. It to a near-roaring drone as Filipino rushing in, panting and glowing.

"Tsula! Tsula! It's come. It's come!"

Mr. van Loomis could hear the serv running through the house and out from kitchen, as they would be running from lages. He could hear the excited cries i garden. He sat still.

"Tsula! Tsula!"

"Go away."

"Tsula!" said Filipino firmly. "Tsu

(Continued on Page 103)

(Continued from Page 100)

And Mr. van Loomis had to look.

They could see the plane now out of the window. It was flying high over the sea. Mr. van Loomis made quick calculations: Valentine was in the forest; even if he heard the plane there over the sound of the river it would take him a long time to come out on any place where he could signal. Valentine was safe. But McGinty? Mr. van Loomis did not know where McGinty was; he had sent him out into the villages, but if McGinty were in a village on the hill or on the shore he could very well make a signal: he could light a fire as a beacon, wave a white cloth if the plane came near. Sweat broke out on Mr. van Loomis's neck. He sat tensely, his hands pressed on the desk, waiting, as still as if he were frozen there, but Filipino was eager and ever helpful.

"Are you thinking what to do?" asked Filipino. "Give me your keys, Tsula. I will get your gun. You can fire the gun, Tsula, and make the plane come here." Mr. van Loomis kept his gun locked away; he had not known that Filipino knew he had a gun, or indeed what a gun was. Now Filipino was saying impatiently, "Give me your keys." Mr. van Loomis had the feeling that Filipino would not have hesitated to fire off the gun himself. "Tsula, the keys!"

Filipino's voice was almost peremptory, but Mr. van Loomis only said, "Not yet."

"But if it's not yet the plane will go away, Tsula," cried Filipino.

"It's . . . too soon," said Mr. van Loomis. If Valentine goes now all this may stop, thought Mr. van Loomis. He has not spoken to me yet. Nothing is arranged. Pride rose in him, and he thought, Well, Charis could forget Valentine, but he knew that Charis would not; with these reserved cool girls life went deep; they did not forget, and Mr. van Loomis's resolution hardened.

"Be quiet, monkey!" he said angrily.

"Tsula, I get your gun."

"No."

"No?" cried Filipino again. He could not believe his ears.

"No!" said Mr. van Loomis fiercely. He did not wish to explain, but Filipino's eager eyes were on him and Filipino's lips were parted to argue with him. This boy is becoming a nuisance! thought Mr. van Loomis. He is getting to be familiar, much too familiar! He glared at Filipino so fiercely that Filipino was intimidated and was sulkily silent.

The plane did not come near the island. Why should it? It was looking for the Water Star or the wreckage of the Water Star. It dipped over the bay, turned south, circled again over the Hat, and flew away out to sea. Filipino gave a little wail. Mr. van Loomis lifted his hands from the desk with a long sigh. Where they had lain were two wet patches on the wood.

A typewritten page of the letter caught his eye. "We must also tell you," it said, "that your brother, the late earl, was about to make a gift of the castle to the nation; we were actually negotiating with the National Trust at the time of his death. He intended to keep the south rooms and tower for the perpetual use of the family. If you should want us to continue ——" What should I do now with a castle? thought Mr. Van Loomis. All I am fit for is a cell. He looked again at the letter and remembered that the turret room was in the south tower.

"My little room!" said Mr. van Loomis aloud.

Deep in the morning of log rolling and discovery with Charis, Valentine had not even heard the plane. He and Charis knew nothing about it until they came down and met the first islanders running up from the beach.

McGinty did not hear it in time. Mario had been showing him a hive of wild bees in a loop of wax and honey on a tree; the humming from it filled the little glade where they had found it at the back of one of the villages that McGinty had to visit along the shore. "Of all the rotten bits of luck," he said to Valentine afterward. "With those bees buzzing, I didn't notice anything till too late."

"What's that?" he had said suddenly, raising his head. He had shaken Mario's arm to quiet him, then he had turned and run down to the beach as if all the bees were after him. Mario ran behind him, but by the time he had lumbered through the village, McGinty had stopped running. He was lying face downward on the sand under the palms.

For a moment Mario did not understand; then he too heard that other humming and, looking, bobbing his great head at the sky, at last he saw the speck that was the airplane flying away over the Hat.

McGinty was lying still, except that every now and again his shoulders heaved. Mario watched him. McGinty looked oddly small, lying there. Was he crying? Mario moved forward and, putting his hands on his knees, bent down to look at him.

"M-McGinty? Sir?" he said. McGinty liked Mario to call him "sir," but now, "Get out!" said McGinty's muffled voice.

Mario waited, puzzled and dismayed and hurt, until McGinty sat up and pushed his hair back into its crest and wiped the sand off his cheek and chin with his hand; but there were tear marks on his face where the sand had stuck. Yes, he had been crying. Mario averted his head. There was a long silence.

"Cheer up, old boy," said McGinty, but Mario did not look up. McGinty stood up and brushed his clothes, then gave Mario a pat on the shoulder. "It's all right. I'm not angry with you," he said. "It was just bad luck. Forget it! I'll get out somehow."

He patted Mario's shoulder again. Mario wanted to be reassured, and McGinty's hand on his shoulder made him tremble with gratitude. Together they went up the beach back to the village again.

In the study, Mr. van Loomis was having a passage of arms with Filipino. The tears were running down Filipino's cheeks.

"It's gone. You let it go!" cried Filipino.

Damn the boy! thought Mr. van Loomis. He will go and tell all this. He saw that he must deal firmly with Filipino and he said witheringly as he had often said to Charis, "When you are grown up and know some of the things you don't know now, you will know that most men have a reason for everything they do."

"And if the reason is against other men's reasons?" Filipino flung back.

Mr. van Loomis thought for a moment of slapping him; for a moment he thought he would vent on Filipino all his anger and nostalgia and feeling of inadequacy and grief. Then he felt curiously weak and he said, "Hush."

"Hush!" cried Filipino. "I not hush!" He shook back his hair and ran out the door. Mr. van Loomis sat thoughtfully on at his desk, drumming with his fingers. Events were growing too strong for him. He, Mr. van Loomis, was gradually being outmaneuvered. He shut his eyes. He longed for peace.

It was nearly midday. The island, under the full sun, was hot and growing more languorous each moment but Mr. van Loomis suddenly shivered. He stood up, pushing his chair back so sharply that it rocked and almost fell. He could have sworn he felt, on his cheek, the chill, revivifying dampness of a Scottish mist.

(To be Concluded)

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

LESTER
Betsy Ross Spinet

Give Happiness This Christmas

Give your children the keys to happiness and popularity. Give your entire family a lifetime of musical pleasure and entertainment. Say Merry Christmas with the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet!

Built by the same family since 1888 . . . each quality instrument has the full 88 note keyboard . . . each one is endowed with glorious tone and responsive touch.

Dampp-Chaser equipped . . . only Lester offers this moisture control feature.

Priced from $595.00; model pictured $750.00 f.o.b. Lester, Pa. Your dealer will arrange convenient terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

ONE name quality price — a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 17, Pa.
Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)
Name
Address
City
Zone No. State LHJ 5T
Foreign Sales Representatives H. M. ASTLETT & CO., 39 Broadway, New York 6, N.Y.

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

At home anywhere

By H. T. WILLIAMS

Bright as a new dime, comfortable as an old shoe,

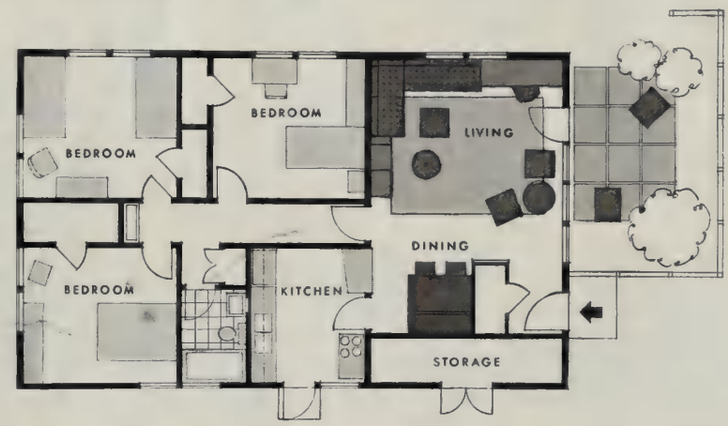
this Arizona living-dining room is a charmer at $657.57 wherever you live

JUST as the house it's in is built of durable materials, insulated throughout and equipped with a heating system adequate to a colder climate, so the room shown here would settle in with a friendly air much farther north of the border. The informality of modern living, whatever the geography, takes to the simplicity, the vigorous colors and casual fabrics that used to be associated with summer furnishings or semitropical climates. And these are inexpensive.



It looks as if long, lazy evenings on the corner day bed would come as high as fifth-row seats at a Broadway hit. Yet all this comfort and apparent luxury resolve themselves into two sets of bedsprings on (Continued on Page 204)

A cut-down mail-order kitchen unit and a flush door make the roomy modern desk (left). White bathroom or kitchen tiles, set in rubber cement, form the top of the handsome coffee table.

The walls of the dining space are stenciled for contrast. A Mexican lantern replaces the ceiling fixture. Colorful runners and napkins, cut from a Mexican rebozo, would add spice to any meal.

HAROLD FOWLER

Furnishings to live up to the good looks, convenient arrangement and low cost ($6950) of this Tucson, Arizona, house were something of a challenge.

The 9′ x 12′ Indian drugget rug ($37.50), the draw curtains of dyed unbleached muslin, and the Mexican water jar wired as a lamp base are ideas you can't afford to overlook.

Sally got tinsel...

Sally told her husband to get her "just anything" for Christmas. So—instead of the new carpet sweeper she needed, she got some gew-gaws she had to pretend she liked. Silly Sally!

Sue got a time-saver...

Susy came right out and said, "What I need this year is a new Bissell Carpet Sweeper. Then I won't have to plug in my vacuum cleaner every time you folks spill a few crumbs!" Smart Sue—who knew it paid to have both!

Only BISSELL has "BISCO-MATIC"* brush action

This miracle-action brush adjusts itself automatically to thick rugs or thin, without any pressure on the handle whatsoever! It even gets the dirt under beds, where you can't press down.

New Bissell Sweepers with "Bisco-matic" Brush Action as low as $6.95. Illustrated: The "Flight" at $9.95. Prices a little more in the West.

BISSELL SWEEPERS

Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's full sweep conventional brush.

MOTHER OF THE GROOM

(Continued from Page 36)

dress and, most of all, neckties. On account of a certain November afternoon, Thanksgiving would always be more associated in Martha's mind with neckties than with turkey and cranberries.

Jimmy had been chosen master of ceremonies for the junior-high-school entertainment, welcoming guests and introducing the program. Pretty good for eleven years old, Martha thought, trying not to mention it too often to other mothers because she didn't have Jim, Sr., to talk to about it. He was away for one of his business trips and wouldn't be home till Thanksgiving morning.

On the great Wednesday Jimmy came home for lunch as usual, and over their soup and sandwiches he and Martha discussed the forthcoming entertainment. Did Teddy Elliot know his speech any better or would Miss Hoyle have to keep prompting him? Did Mary-Kate Porter speak up in the play or did she still whisper, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" so even John Alden himself couldn't hear her? Was there surely enough ice cream and cake for afterward, or should Martha bring some cookies?

As they finished Martha looked at the clock. "Well, run along and put on your clean shirt and jacket. I laid them on your bed. And your new necktie."

"Necktie?" said Jimmy, lowering.

"Why, of course," Martha said. "A gentleman always wears a necktie in public, and you're in plenty of public this afternoon."

"I'm not a gentleman," Jimmy said, his eyes getting their stubborn look.

Martha laughed amiably. "Maybe not yet," she said, "but we're going to make one of you eventually."

She pretended not to notice Jimmy balking at the table, and went on clearing away the dishes. Delia was off for the afternoon on account of Thursday's being Thanksgiving, and Martha figured she had just time to wash up, change her clothes and get to school by two-thirty. Running upstairs, she passed Jimmy coming down, as open-collared and tieless as the day he was born.

"You forgot your necktie," she said pleasantly.

He paused a moment and clattered past her. This would not do. This was not forgetfulness, but defiance. She ran to the front door and called after his fleeing figure:

"Jimmy Bartlett, don't you dare go to school without that necktie."

Jimmy kept on running.

Martha came back into the house. I mustn't let him get away with this, she told herself. I mustn't. She walked to the telephone and called the teacher.

"Miss Hoyle, Jimmy forgot his necktie," she said. "When he comes, tell him to come right home and get it."

SHE was still sitting an hour later with the horrid strip of silk in her hand when Miss Hoyle rang back.

"Where's Jimmy?" she asked. "It's past time to start. I sent him home for his tie as soon as he got here."

Martha had not tried to fool herself. She was frightened immediately. She remembered Jimmy's mutinous mouth and fleeing back. She got in the car and drove to all his familiar haunts and then along the road to his boat and the river. Her heart congealed as she saw the gray water slipping by and remembered newspaper stories of what adolescent boys sometimes did when they were humiliated as she had humiliated Jimmy by calling his teacher. Why did I do it? Why? Why? she asked herself, more and more panic-stricken as the hours went on.

At five o'clock she called Stewart Brewster, their old friend and neighbor. Stewart, being childless and a lawyer, was calm and resourceful.

"Why, the little devil," he said. "But if he's been gone this long, we'd better call Harry Case and have him notify the state troopers. They'll pick him up on the highway before he gets too far." In those days Harry Case was Riverside's sole motorcycle cop.

"The police! Oh, I can't do that," she sobbed into the telephone.

"Of course you can. That's their business," Stewart said. "I'll go talk to them. You stand by."

Martha stood by at the front gate. It was black night when she took up her vigil there, but it got darker and colder as she waited shaking, praying, and peering in every direction for a gangling, home-coming figure. No telephone rang from the house. No car stopped at the drive. Jim! He would come home for Thanksgiving and Jimmy would be lost—lost and gone forever. Martha collapsed over the gate, muffling her sobs. She couldn't let the neighbors know yet. It was bad enough for Stewart and the police to know. Delia appeared behind her with one of her periodic cups of hot coffee. But she brought more than coffee this time.

"He's to home," she whispered with gusto. "Sneaked in the back way and up the back stairs. I didn't say a word to him."

Martha flew on winged feet, but Jimmy's door was locked. It did not open until Jim came home early the next morning and rapped a cheery "Hey, kid," as he passed by.

Martha had to tell Jim about it then, but she'd had time to think things over. "Don't let's punish him. He's too big for that and I think he's ashamed enough. The way he shut himself in. And we don't want to spoil Thanksgiving—this one or any others to come. Let's have our dinner and go to the football game as if nothing had happened."

"We-ell," said Jim, who was only too glad to enjoy a well-earned holiday and who hadn't shared Martha's vigil the night before. "Whatever you say."

So there was no mention of the runaway. All day Jimmy wore a puzzled expression, wondering—very respectfully, too—what was going to happen. They ate their roast turkey and went to the football game. They came home and ate their cold turkey and finally bedtime came.

"Bedtime," Martha said casually. "Good night, Jimmy."

"'Night, old man," Jim said, barely glancing up from his paper at the overgrown body wavering uncertainly on the threshold.

"Aren't you going to say anything about yesterday?" the young voice said, hovering as uncertainly over the octave as his big puppyish feet hovered over the doorsill. "I'm sorry."

"Don't apologize to us," Jim said. "It was the school you let down. I hear the exercises were a flop."

Jimmy swallowed his budding Adam's apple, but kept his gaze on his father. "I'm awful sorry," he repeated miserably.

"Just remember all your life long," Jim said carefully. "Any time you accept a responsibility, you fulfill it. No matter what."

"I will," Jimmy had said, very true-eyed. And remembering the part he'd played at Okinawa and Leyte, Martha's eyelids prickled.

Neckties and girls. He'd hated them both. Nowadays he swiped every necktie of his father's he considered worth the effort. And he was writing, "I'd like to bring Betsy Evans home with me for the spring vacation."

THE metamorphosis, when it came, was sudden and complete. In December of his freshman year at Princeton Jimmy had written a suggestion that sent Martha into gales of laughter.

"You ask what I want for Christmas," he had written painstakingly. "I would like a new phonograph, the big record-changing kind. And a lot of new records. I enclose a list of ones I like. Then we could have a dance during the vacation. Or we could rent a juke box."

Dance. Juke box. Martha couldn't believe her ears.

"By the way," the handwriting sprawled on, "I took you up on those dancing lessons. Thirty bucks in advance. So please remit by return mail. It's a long walk home."

What's hit him? Martha wondered. But of course she knew.

For years she'd begged him to go to Miss Averill's dancing classes.

"I should say not," he'd say mulishly. "Lugging all those girls around by their middles. Getting stuck for hours too. I heard all about it. Include me out."

As he started off to college, Martha had made one last try: "Listen, son, dancing is part of being educated. When you realize that, get a really good teacher and I'll pay the bill."

He'd certainly done it. Martha rushed to the telephone to read Jim the news, and as she did so she saw the postscript:

"I bought some tails, too, while I was about it. Charged and sent for a Christmas present. Hope it's O.K."

"Never mind getting me anything either," Martha said to Jim over the phone. "Just give me a check now. A fat one. I'm going to give a dance that's a dance. A band from the

(Continued on Page 110)

"Your mother wants me to be firm with you, so—— either you're going to eat or you're not going to eat!"

New life-size TV picture. Big chest type off-the-floor cabinet with provincial legs, unique door pulls. Hand-rubbed Walnut. Model 17F2

CHOOSE THE RIGHT GIFT THIS EASY WAY

do your CHRISTMAS SHOPPING on this page

Motorola TV AND RADIO

TV FUN FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

20 inch rectangular TV . . . "Golden Voice" FM/AM radio . . . 3-speed record changer . . . 2 record storage compartments—all in a stunning new cabinet. Hand-rubbed Mahogany or Limed Oak. MODEL 20F1

This "18th Century" cabinet has a BIGGER than life-size screen. Classic styling features half doors, bowed grille, antique door handles. Ideal for traditional settings! Hand-rubbed Mahogany. MODEL 19K3

Here's a handsome cabinet that blends with either modern or traditional furnishings. Life-size rectangular TV . . . FM/AM radio . . . 3-speed record changer. Hand-rubbed Mahogany or Limed Oak. MODEL 17F1

Big life-size TV in a custom-styled console with distinctive half doors. It's a swell gift for home and family that's priced to spare your budget. Hand-rubbed Mahogany or Limed Oak. MODEL 17K2

This lovely 16 inch TV console will be "at home" in any home! Pictures are photo-perfect, life-size! There's a hint of Oriental influence in the Fashion Award styling. Mahogany or Limed Oak. MODEL 17K1

Here's BIG-PICTURE TV at a big saving! Life-size 16 inch rectangular screen in a streamlined table cabinet . . . Styled to blend beautifully in the modern American home. Walnut-finish Bakelite. MODEL 17T3

FOR FUN INDOORS

The gift with the "Golden Voice"! Compact AM radio with plenty of rugged power. Choice of six striking colors in handsome cabinet. MODEL 5R

Two gifts in one! Supersensitive radio plays both FM and AM with full concert tone. Exclusive "Sweep Station" Dial, beautiful styling. Brown or Green. MODEL 7XM

FOR FUN OUTDOORS

Portables play outdoors on own batteries . . . indoors on ordinary house current.

The "Jewel Box"—a gem of a gift! Your lady will be thrilled with its brilliant styling and performance. Ebony or Green. MODEL 5J

The "Playmate Jr."—gift of fun! Sturdy yet light steel cabinet takes to travel like a duck to water. Amazing tone! Green or Maroon. MODEL 5M

FOR MUSIC LOVERS

Finest FM AM Radio-Phonograph, featuring "Golden Voice" tone, 3-speed record changer, record storage compartments, exquisite styling. Luxury-grained Mahogany or Limed Oak. MODEL 9FM21

WAKE UP TO MUSIC

The new Motorola RADIO-LARM CLOCK RADIO wakes you musically each morning . . . starts your coffee . . . performs dozens of duties automatically. A new and "different" gift! Green, Walnut, Ivory. MODEL 5C

GIVE A MOTOROLA AND YOU KNOW YOU GIVE THE BEST

The happiest people this Christmas are sure to be the ones you remember with a beautiful new Motorola television or radio set. For playing Santa, there's no finer choice than a Motorola—the gift of lasting entertainment!

fashion academy award for distinctive styling

all specifications subject to change without notice

MADEIRA SUGAR SPOON — $3.00
CHIPPENDALE GRAVY LADLE — $10.00
CRAFTSMAN FLAT SERVER — $12.50
KING RICHARD COLD MEAT FORK — $13.00
OLD LACE NUT SPOON — $9.50
OLD COLONIAL SUGAR TONGS — $6.75
SILVER FLUTED PIE OR CAKE SERVING KNIFE — $10.00
CANDLELIGHT CHEESE SERVING KNIFE — $3.00
FRENCH PROVINCIAL SERVING SPOON — $12.50
RAMBLER ROSE BUTTER KNIFE — $6.50

You Know She'll like Sterling

SHE PICKED HER PATTERN HERSELF!

IT all adds up to this: TOWLE Sterling is Santa's best bet! A reasonable man can work it out: (1) She picked the pattern herself so, of course, she likes it and she always needs more! (2) It's beautiful and serviceable, too . . . unbeatable combination. (3) She takes real pride in her TOWLE Sterling because it's all solid silver and because it proves her good taste. (4) Because TOWLE can be found in the finest stores, whose names prove that a man was looking for the best . . .

It's so easy to get TOWLE Sterling. Telephone your favorite TOWLE store, give the name of her pattern and the price you want to pay. They'll suggest pieces (and prices) to you, including the brand new TOWLE serving pieces she wants so much. And every Santa Claus will find a price to suit his wallet—teaspoons cost as little as $3.40; six-piece place settings, $27.50; and serving pieces from $3.75—see the page opposite!

Whether this is her sixteenth Christmas or her sixtieth, solid silver by TOWLE is the perfect gift. The Santa Claus who starts her set, or who gives it new life and beauty by adding long-needed serving pieces or place settings, knows he's right when he gives TOWLE Sterling.

Hint to a wife:
Tell the man your pattern!

Old Master — King Richard — Candlelight — Chippendale — Old Lace — French Provincial — Rambler Rose — Silver Flutes — Old Mirror — Madeira — Craftsman — Silver Plumes — Old Colonial — many more — all solid silver by TOWLE.

TOWLE
STERLING
Newburyport, Massachusetts

Quaker Oats helps grow "STARS OF THE FUTURE"

Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! They say that because a recent survey shows only 1 school child in 5 gets enough breakfast.

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition! To help your boy or girl become a "Star of the Future," serve good, nourishing, hot Quaker Oats often every week. Your youngsters get more growth, more energy from oatmeal than from any other whole-grain cereal!

A GIANT in Value! Penny for penny, oatmeal is the richest source of all leading types of cereals in 4 vital food elements—Protein, Vitamin B_1, Food-Energy, and Food-Iron. Yet it costs less than 1¢ a serving!

A GIANT in Flavor! It's creamy delicious! Remember, people eat more Quaker Oats than any other cereal in the world because THEY LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR!

Tomorrow morning serve hot

QUAKER OATS

Less than 1¢ a serving!

QUAKER AND MOTHER'S OATS ARE THE SAME

(Continued from Page 106)

city and everything. We haven't got a daughter, so this is Jimmy's debut."

The dance was a knockout. Standing by Jimmy at the country club that night, watching him greet his guests, Martha had marveled. Was this gay young blade—over six feet and still growing—her woman-hating son?

"'This can't be love because he feels so well,'" she quoted to Jim as the party got under way. "Or is it someone at college? I'd know if it was a local girl."

"Just girls in general," Jim answered easily. "Petticoat fever. Good healthy complaint."

Jimmy's years at college had been full and happy. Martha was to treasure their memory when vacations became "leaves" and you didn't dare think from one to the next.

There had been the Charity Ball when Jimmy wore his tails the first time, his first big dance. It was before his own party—and it had taken both parents and Wump to get him into them. Wump was visiting as usual. Lake Forest was fine, but Wump was generally in flight from one or the other of his divorced parents and glad to show up at Riverside where it was slower but easier sailing.

"Jimmy ties his finger in his tie every time," Wump had reported. "When he pulls it out to make the bow it all falls apart. You fix him, sir."

They finally had, and Martha considered the results beautiful. Evidently Jimmy was equally impressed with himself because he had hardly zoomed out the driveway when he was back again.

"Hey, dad," he yelled up the stairs, "I forgot to ask. What do I do when I sit down? Spread 'em and sit, or just sit as they fall?"

It seemed only yesterday in some ways, but in others the war made a gap so wide that everything that happened before it was clear but very tiny, as if you were looking through the wrong end of a telescope.

Martha remembered standing before the steps of Nassau Hall the spring after Pearl Harbor watching the boys take their R.O.T.C. commissions, and as Jimmy's six-foot-four head towered unmistakably above the others, Martha had felt her heart crack. God bless them and bring them all safely back, she had tried to pray. But she knew God would not bring them all back, so she went on saying over and over instead, Please bring Jimmy back anyway. Anyway, Jimmy.

But before that, during the three easy prewar years, the petticoat-fever chart had run high. Girls for football games and girls for ski week ends. Girls in Philadelphia and girls in New York. Girls for spring house parties and winter formals. At the time, Martha and Jim had thought there were too many girls and too many parties. But later they were glad for every good time. For Jimmy had hit the Pacific for the fighting that didn't bear thinking of. But he got through it someway, lived through it, and came home again.

Now he was a man grown with a man's job done and a man's control of his memories of the past and a man's eye on the future.

Not so Wump, who came back for his first visit after the war—in flight from his mother's second marriage and his father's third—just as he had left, charming, irresponsible, with the same roving, Wumpish eye.

"I can't understand it," Martha said to Jim. "He's still a male debutant. The war might never have happened."

"It didn't for Wump. He ate his heart out in San Antonio all those years. Just one of those things. Bad knee and bum luck. It's hard to tell yet about Wump," Jim answered, squinting back to World War I.

Wump had arrived the afternoon before and Martha had given a buffet supper that night for the old crowd. But so far as the guest of honor was concerned, it hadn't been a success.

"Say, isn't there a female left in this town?" he'd demanded as the door closed on the party. "I mean one that talks about anything but her engagement ring or Junior's tonsils?"

"Well, naturally the gals had to look for other interests when you disappeared," Jimmy laughed. "What d'you want? A kindergarten?"

"Yep," said Wump. "You got me. Exactly."

So, just for laughs, Jimmy had gone next door to the Pollocks' next morning and cornered Georgie, the neighborhood sheik, at breakfast. "George," he said, very man-to-man, "I've got a pal visiting me who has a taste for young blood. Any suggestions?"

GEORGIE, who had followed every move and medal of Jimmy's years in the service and longed only for a similar war, and to be six feet four to handle it, rocked back on his chair's hind legs and stared.

"You serious?" he asked.

"Dead serious," said Jimmy. "You remember Wump Everard?"

"You want me to fix you two up with a double date?"

"That's it," agreed Jimmy, hoping no other Pollocks were within earshot.

"Lemme think," said Georgie, and did so, masticating his bacon. "I tell you," he announced finally. "You and Wump come to high school this noon. We'll pick 'em as they go in the cafeteria. Any women you want," Georgie ended grandly. "Just point 'em out."

So the three of them had hidden in an empty classroom and peered out the half-closed door as the girls jostled past to lunch. At least Wump and Georgie peered. Jimmy was trying to stifle his laughter in a far corner.

"Oh, gosh. Oh, gosh," Wump moaned in ecstasy. "How can a guy choose?" Then, grabbing Georgie's arm, "There! There's mine. The blonde in the plaid dress."

"Nothing doing," said Georgie shortly. "Not that one."

"Private property, eh?" said Wump respectfully. "All right. All right. That one then. The redhead. Wow! How about her?"

"Wow's the word. That's Kitten Boyd. And she'll jump at a date with an older man. Let's go."

Jimmy wiped his streaming eyes. "You two go," he said, "and just tell Kitten to pick out something over five feet tall for me. I'm having lunch with dad at the bank."

He was still laughing when he told Martha about it.

"Wump can't face an evening without something soft, warm and furry by him," he said. "Silly, isn't it?"

"You'll fall harder than that someday," Martha had smiled back. But of course "someday" was years off.

Said the lady, shaking hands with the preacher after the service: "Wonderful sermon! Everything you said applies to somebody or other I know."

After the war Jimmy had gone back to Princeton for a year's postgraduate before law school, but it wasn't quite the old carefree fun hunt. With Jimmy's record, he'd got home among the first and it still seemed a miracle to find himself back in the ivied academic walls. Work was the thing, with three years lost and law school still to come; never mind the dames, he said. But of course he couldn't help noticing they were around. There was the girl from Boston, for instance. Jimmy had gone all the way up for her coming-out party that fall, which sounded serious to Martha, but Jimmy had only laughed when she questioned him.

"Just a good party," he said. "Practically the whole club went. We were sleeping all over the house."

So the Bostonian passed and by February he was wearing out his tires between New Jersey and Vassar. Martha never saw that girl. What was her name? But with the spring came this Betsy person. Jimmy had written about meeting her:

"I went to Bob Saunders' for dinner last night. He married a girl from Baltimore, lots of fun. She had a cousin, Betsy Evans, for the week end. She asked me to come down

(Continued on Page 113)

When he's cold... you know what to do

BUT WHEN HE'S NERVOUS AND UNDERWEIGHT WHAT DO YOU DO TO HELP HIM?

Mother, he needs your round-the-clock help to keep healthy.

Many thin, nervous children are "well-fed," but ill-nourished. They may get lots of food, but not always enough of the right kind. Such children obviously need special care in the selection of the foods they eat.

A mother should always remember that every child needs, proportionately, 2 to 3 times as much of certain food elements as an adult. These food elements include protein, calcium, iron, vitamins C, B_1, niacin and riboflavin. These may be called the "spark plugs" of robust health and vitality and a child needs plenty of them. A lack of one or more can cause a slump that could easily lead to even more serious trouble. And—please note this—they are the very ones most apt to be deficient in average meals.

In theory—an adequate family diet can be provided by serving a wide variety of carefully selected foods, thereby obtaining all the essential elements. And this every mother should strive to do.

In practice, however—this is hard to do, because of the many problems of food buying, seasonal shortages, storing and cooking, and the wide differences in individual tastes and requirements within the family.

And so, today—busy, intelligent mothers employ a sound and simple method in approaching this problem. They use a supplementary food like Ovaltine.

Ovaltine is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes that may occur even in "good" meals. Ovaltine, mixed with milk, contains practically all the vitamins, minerals, and high-quality protein necessary to bring such meals up to the full requirements of a growing child.

So why don't you join the host of other mothers in this program for better health through better nutrition. Give 2 to 3 servings of Ovaltine daily in addition to regular meals. Then you can be sure you have done just about everything you can do to insure proper nutrition for your child.

NOTE: Ovaltine has a remarkable appeal for children who refuse to drink plain milk, and it is especially processed for easy digestion.

READ WHAT FOOD-VALUES

YOU GET IN OVALTINE

MIXED WITH MILK

HIGH-QUALITY PROTEIN—essential in building body and nerve cells.

HIGH-ENERGY FOOD—needed for keen vitality.

IRON—necessary to maintain good red blood.

VITAMIN B_1—required for good appetite, digestion and healthy nerves.

VITAMIN C—necessary for healthy gums and all connective tissue throughout the body

VITAMIN D, CALCIUM & PHOSPHORUS—all needed for straight, strong bones, good teeth.

VITAMIN A—a deficiency prevents normal growth—affects vision—may cause night blindness.

NIACIN—for normal functioning of nervous system and digestive tract.

VITAMIN G (Riboflavin)—essential to normal growth—and health of eyes and skin.

OVALTINE

THE PROTECTING SUPPLEMENTARY FOOD-DRINK

Upside down ... but the downside's tops!

Those swirls of fresh goodness are the world's most famous cream cheese... Philadelphia Brand

2 POPULAR SIZES

3 OZ. famous since 1880

½ LB. saves you as much as 12%

FINE SNACK FOR SMALL FRY. Fresh, crisp graham crackers, nutritious Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese, jam or jelly, and a glass of milk. That will hold those hungry youngsters over till dinnertime!

JUST LUSCIOUS—

That upside-down cake you're so proud of . . . whether you make it by grandmother's time-tested "receipt" or with one of the handy modern prepared cake mixes, here's a simple, final touch that will make it taste richer and better than ever. Top it with fresh Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese!

Soften "Philadelphia" ever so slightly by working in a wee bit of milk; whip till light and fluffy. Fill your pastry tube and garnish the cake with a scallop of this delicate, creamy-white cheese. Put a rosette in each apricot around the edge. And be sure to cut big slices or you will most certainly be smothered with requests for seconds.

WATCH OUT—

Don't take just any cream cheese when what you want is Philadelphia Brand. Other cream cheeses are in similar wrappers but they can't bear this brand name or bring you this quality famous since 1880. Philadelphia Brand is so superior it outsells all other brands of cream cheese combined. So always look for and insist on genuine Philadelphia Brand.

There's only one "Philadelphia" Cream Cheese... the brand that's made by KRAFT and guaranteed fresh!

(Continued from Page 110)

or the Annapolis boat races later. Maybe I will."

He had, and Betsy had been back to the Saunderses' several times before that, but it was all so casual Martha hardly noticed. She had been through more torrid affairs. Even when Jimmy invited Betsy up for commencement and she sat with Martha and Jim, Martha didn't give it much attention. Ellen Saunders sat with them, too, because Bob was graduating and they were all going back to the club for lunch, so it was the natural thing.

Afterward, she'd asked Bob if he thought Jimmy was serious about Betsy.

"Oh, you know Jimmy," Bob answered. Love 'em and leave 'em."

And so it seemed. Jimmy had taken a summer job in Buffalo and gone to Columbia Law School in the fall. Not much time for social life, he wrote home. Oh, a couple of football games, of course.

"I took Betsy Evans," he reported about one of them. "It seems she has relatives in New York too. You know these Maryland girls. Kissing cousins everywhere." Martha had smiled vaguely.

But here was the letter. "Please, mom, write her a very special invitation." Under Jimmy's schedule the spring holiday was only a few days. Still, it was a different invitation from a week end. She was being asked for the whole vacation. Martha read the letter a third time and her heart began to pound.

She closed her eyes to remember how Betsy looked. And to her surprise she could. Exactly. Even the pretty cowlick where her brown hair curled upside down over her left temple, her extraordinarily tiny soft waist, her penchant for plaids and ballet slippers.

Coming here. To visit, she told her still-banging heart. With Jimmy. And you, Martha Bartlett, know why. She's coming here, Martha's practical brain picked up the message and sent it on, changing the emphasis. Here. To this house.

Her eyes flew open, circled the hall, flashed through the living room, and recalled only too clearly the dining room beyond.

"It's so shabby," she said, shocked into speaking aloud. "The wallpaper's faded and the curtains are worse. I didn't even dare have them cleaned last fall. I knew they'd fall apart. And the poor old sofa ——"

Of course she'd let everything go during the war. It hadn't seemed important even if she could have got materials. But things had been sort of running down before that. She'd said it was because the house was always full of boys. Let them enjoy themselves and put their feet on things. But actually she had stopped noticing the rooms. She had probably stopped noticing when Delia got married and was never replaced. Jimmy was at prep school by then and there were only the two of them. It had been easy to bump along and let things go.

THEY'D gone all right. Look at Jim's chair all sagged down and a hole in the arm where he'd gone to sleep with a lighted cigarette. She'd been balancing a piece of lace and an ash tray over it for three or four years now. And those lamp shades! Mercy! She'd never liked them. She couldn't let a girl—any girl, let alone a prospective daughter-in-law—find Jimmy's home in this state. She couldn't stand it herself. Not another minute.

Not another minute. How much time did she have, actually? She rushed to the kitchen calendar. Less than three weeks—nineteen days, to be exact—before Jimmy's vacation began. On her way to the calendar, Martha passed the telephone. She really ought to call Jim, and tell him the news, but she hadn't time. Her eyes roved. Impossible to paint and paper, which was what was really needed, but curtains and slip covers would cover a multitude of sins. Florence Allen, the dressmaker, was no professional, but she would do in a pinch, and somebody had told Martha you could have curtain material cut to accurate lengths in the store. Florence could certainly put in heads and hems after that. If she could just find something cheery ——

In fact, she'd better drive right into the city this morning and look for it, stopping only to write her note to Betsy first. If she found the material today, Florence could get to work tomorrow. Florence had machine-stitched Jimmy's diapers in the days when you owned your own; shortened his first pants and lengthened his later ones. She'd drop everything when she heard about this.

MARTHA hummed happily as she untied the package. She hadn't wasted time having it sent, because she'd found the very thing. Lovely English linen in glowing colors on an off-white ground. She hadn't seen anything so good since before the war, and they'd cut it for her carefully at the store by the old curtain she had taken in, allowing the right number of extra inches for hems and so forth. So obliging and interested. The linen was so heavy, it didn't really need lining, so Florence could surely manage it.

"Everything's coming my way," Martha hummed. She was always a few years behind with her humming tunes. She held up a length of the material and gazed at it admiringly. The colors which had looked so beautifully handblocked in the store suddenly seemed rather bright. Of course that was because it wasn't properly draped and gathered. Still humming, she fetched the folding stepladder from the kitchen, took down the curtain behind Jim's chair and hung a length of the new fabric over the fixture, and another over the sagging chair. She stepped back to admire the effect, but no admiration came. The white background jumped forward at her from the tired springs and the colors battled with the tired wallpaper. Martha walked out of the room and came back hoping to surprise the stuff back to its original beauty, but it didn't work. The cheerful English flowers were as ill at ease as before.

"Where's Ethel?" Martha cried, making for the telephone. Friend Ethel, who still read all the magazines as religiously as if she were still in that decorating house in New York; Ethel, who was still the volunteer decorator for half of Riverside. Martha had tried to reach her that morning before she went to town, but the telephone had not answered.

Ethel answered this time and came on the run. "Why, that's nice," she said, fingering the linen respectfully. "Where did you find it? I couldn't have done better myself."

Martha brightened a little. "I thought it was pretty, too, but now I've got it home it doesn't look right."

"Why, of course it doesn't. Unless you do the whole room over—which, heaven knows, it's needed for years. Now suppose we ——"

"I'll never tell anyone what that stuff cost a yard," Martha moaned. "And all cut to lengths, too, so it can't possibly be returned—

NEXT MONTH

SOME people love dogs. Some can take dogs or leave them alone. Some want to growl first when they see a dog. But here, for everyone, are the heart-warming adventures of George and Helen Papashvily, who made devoted friends of four-footed ladies and gentlemen and saw them through the trials of birth and death, of growing up and learning about people.

This is not just a story about dogs; it's a story about happiness as a way of life. "If only it could be that simple," people say. But happiness is simple. For this delightful couple, happiness is no more complicated than the beat of an intelligent dog's heart.

Thanks to Noah

By George and Helen Papashvily

Complete in the January JOURNAL, condensed from the book soon to be published by Harper & Brothers.

■ When rheumatic pain has you ready to scream...quick...reach for Absorbine Jr.!

This famous soothing liniment comes to your rescue fast—goes to work as soon as you apply it with two wonderful pain-chasing actions:

First, it quickly soothes those aching sore spots! Second, it counters the irritation that causes the pain with ■ grand, warming effect!

Keep Absorbine Jr. ready for the next time rheumatic pain strikes at you. Only $1.25 a long-lasting bottle wherever drugs are sold.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

even if I had strength enough. I think I'll just go to bed until after vacation is over. You can write the Evans girl I've died."

Ethel ignored this nonsense. "With that material," she said, "I'd paint the living room a good oyster white to match the background. It'll transform the place. But the hall and dining room need wallpaper. I saw a scenic in town the other day that ——"

"Don't be crazy," said Martha. "It takes months to get painters and paper hangers. Everyone says so, and ——"

"Not if you try," said Ethel crisply. "Let me see. I think your best bet is Ike Levandowski. He's working at Julie Mapes' now and I don't mind hauling him off that job because I told Julie about him. And Julie'll be glad to help you out when she hears why, anyway. It'll take Ike more time to scrape off the old paper than it will take us to find the right thing to put back on. You be ready to leave for town about ten tomorrow."

And so it had been done. There were times during the next two weeks when Martha was sure Betsy Evans would arrive to find a torn-up mess, times when she wished the house back in its old shabby comfort; but finally it was done. In fact, since Ike Levandowski was a lover of romance, he finished with a couple of days' leeway. "To get the paint smell out before comp'ny," Ike said, winking. Martha and Ethel used the time for other purposes too. They hung the new curtains and put on the new slip covers.

"Not quite professional," Ethel said, eying them coldly. "If I'd known sooner ——"

The morning before the great evening Martha had taken Jim for a tour of the first floor.

"I always think," she said, in a very Ethelesque voice, "that a good house calls for good colors and materials."

"Very nice," said Jim.

"Don't say a word," Martha begged. "I know how you feel about curlers, but you have to stand them tonight. I can't spend half tomorrow morning in a beauty shop with all I have to do."

Jim was already in bed. He glanced up from his magazine. "You're too pretty for beauty shops," he said. "But what's all this about tomorrow?"

"Tomorrow! Why, you know perfectly well tomorrow is the day that ——"

"That Jimmy and Betsy Evans are coming," Jim joined her, mimicking and making it a duet. "What a fuss over one lone girl."

"She's not lone. That's the point."

"You feel awfully sure about that," Jim responded, laying down his magazine and paying attention at last. "Why?"

"Well, it's the longest he ever had one girl. And bringing her up here the whole holiday. He never did that. What else can I think?"

"Would you mind?" Jim asked gently, drawing her head onto his shoulder, curlers and all.

"Of course not," Martha answered rather loudly.

"Then what are you worrying about?"

"I'm not," said Martha. "Put out the light, please, though."

There was a long silence.

"Yes, I am," Martha confessed finally. "I'm worrying for fear she won't like us."

The executive, who had been dozing off, awoke. "Seems to me more important whether we like her," Jim said. "She's on the selling end."

"You couldn't be wronger," Martha contradicted ungrammatically. "If she doesn't like us and they marry, we'd never see anything of Jimmy again. He wouldn't come home and she'd tell him we're back numbers. We are, you know, and ——"

"We are not. And don't borrow trouble. You got along together all right before, didn't you? And they aren't even engaged yet or Jimmy would have told you. They may have a fight on the way up. She may be secretly engaged to Wump and her family disapprove—no wonder—so Jimmy is helping them elope. She may ——"

"Oh, go to sleep," said Martha, laughing.

It was late afternoon. Martha sat in the wing chair by the living-room bay window, a deep satisfaction pervading her. The chocolate cake was moistly perfect and the seven-minute icing was right, slightly crusty on top, soft and thick underneath. The ham was baking in its coat of brown sugar and cloves and the yams—she'd been lucky to get real red ones—were ready for glacéing. With creamed spinach and mushroom sauce, it was Jimmy's home-coming dinner since his prep-school days. There was, as always, strawberry ice cream to go with the chocolate cake.

The house looked nice. She hoped Jimmy either would not notice the new decorations or would pretend they had always been there.

She had set the table with her best gold-banded china and she'd forced some forsythia which had actually come out for a centerpiece. Florist flowers would have been too obvious, she decided. She had had a leisurely bath and dressed slowly, and it was still only four o'clock. No wonder, considering the time she got up.

"What's the matter now?" Jim had grumbled to the dawn. "Something else to do before Princess Margaret Rose gets here?"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Song

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Beside the Thames or by the Don,
In ancient Rome and Babylon,
In every dwelling place of man
The world around since time began

Small boys have homeward gone,
all grins,
Torn clothes and dirt and banged-up shins
To mothers whose sharp tongues denied,
As ours do now, the love and pride

They felt, as we, for little lads
Who like their no less winning dads
Are but the dearer for the sake
Of all the woman's work they make!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

And he'd turned over for another couple of hours' sleep.

He didn't get them. Martha, frisking down the hall to the bathroom, had stopped in dismay at the door. One bathroom! How small-towny! How absolutely antediluvian! All four of them dashing into and out of it like a boardinghouse. She turned and ran back to the bedroom.

"Jim," she wailed, shaking him, "there's only one bathroom!"

Jim opened one eye. "No kidding," he said coarsely. "Sure you counted right?"

"But it's such a family-looking one," Martha said miserably. "The bathtub has feet."

"Get Ethel to come paint its toenails red," Jim said. "And the what's-it sky-blue-pink. And don't you move my shaving things," he roared after her, because Martha had already disappeared again and he could hear disturbing clinks and bangs in the distance.

Well, there's one sure thing, Martha vowed, frantically stowing bottles and gear in the medicine cabinet and linen closet and praying Betsy wouldn't have occasion to open either one, I'll have another bathroom before she ever comes again. With a mirror dressing table and a glassed-in shower and anything else I can think of, so she'll forget this antique.

"They can't possibly get here before six," Jim had said at breakfast. "It's a long drive and they won't start before nine at the earliest. You know girls."

"They may. I'll be ready just in case," Martha had answered. So here she was watching the driveway hours ahead of time.

The window overlooked the side yard as well as the drive, the yard where Jim's boyhood gang had congregated and grown up. It looked, Martha suddenly realized, rather bare and down-at-heel. She had never planted any shrubbery there.

"How can boys kick footballs and slide bases in a yard full of bushes and bird-baths?" she had said. "Boys are more ornamental than shrubs anyway." That had been when she still hoped to provide a good part of the ball teams herself. But when Jimmy proved to be a one and only, she'd comforted herself by filling up the place with the neighbors' boys.

That bald place in the corner was where the gang's first clubhouse had been. Later they'd demolished it, and used the lumber to build the tree house that still perched on the limbs of the big elm by the garage.

"That tree house ought to come down," Jim had said more than once. "The boards will blow down sometime and hurt somebody."

"Then you climb right up and nail them tighter. Remember how the boys used to lower the bucket for their lunch sandwiches? I think of peanut butter every time I pass that tree. Don't you dare break up the house."

The grass was particularly sparse and bumpy in the middle of the yard. That was where the miniature golf course had been. Martha laughed. She hadn't thought of it for years.

She had come home late from a bridge game, rushing because it was Delia's day off and she had to get dinner, so she left the car in front of the house instead of driving it to the garage as usual, and she hadn't seen the side yard. She missed her long-handled soup ladle first, then the colander, and finally her favorite ring mold, before she began to notice how strangely bare the pan closet was. And how unusually noisy the yard was.

Those monkeys! she stormed, reaching for the egg beater, which also wasn't there. What have they been up to? I'll tell them a thing or two! She started for the back door, fire in her eye, and met Jimmy coming in, his face one wide grin.

"Come look, mom!" he shouted. "Come out back and see our midget golf course. Trickiest one in town, better'n the pay ones. We—we borrowed a few of your things for it."

Light dawned on Martha. "I should say you did, James Bartlett, and you can go right out there and bring back my kitchen utensils this minute!"

But at the sight of the bridges made by long-handled spoons and ladles spanning upside-down pots; at sight of the water hazards in dishpan and roaster, her spatula turned to a springboard and her waffle iron to a trap, she had melted in a burst of laughter.

"It's wonderful," she said sincerely to the circle of eager grubby faces. "Where's a ball? Let me try it."

"You spoil them," Jim had said, surveying the scene.

"Not when they've done something really good," she said. "You can buy new pots and pans, but ideas are important."

She had retrieved only her big Sheffield well-and-tree platter. Looking back, she felt mean to have done even that. They wouldn't have hurt it much. The craze was short-lived.

Martha picked up her knitting again. She could knit with her eyes shut. Nothing would get past, up the driveway, without her seeing it. Jim had been so offhand. "Call me if they get here before I do," he said, "and I'll come home if I can." . . . If he could, with his probable daughter-in-law being driven the length of the Empire State to visit him.

She got up restlessly and wandered out to the hall mirror. Did she have on enough lipstick, or too much? The curlers had done only fairly well, but as long as she had on a red dress she would look all right to Jimmy. Funny how he loved it. It really wasn't her color. She had seen him off after his last leave in a little red hat, waving and smiling from the station platform until the train was out of sight, determined to give him a gay picture to take away with him. He'd come home

(Continued on Page 119)

it's Dove Skin® Undies

"You'll love playing Santa Claus with Dove Skin Undies."

for Christmas and a happier undie New Year!

Lovely to wear . . . full-cut . . . perfectly tailored . . . of exclusive Dove Skin rayon knit fabric. Dove Skin Undies are the perfect gift! (And budget-priced, too!) Ask for them today at your favorite store.

LUXURAY, Empire State Bldg., 350 Fifth Avenue, New York 1

NOW! Betty Crocker's STIR-N-ROLL Biscuits

The One Great New

GUARANTEED* to give you richer, flakier biscuits with a wonderful tender crispy crust...top and bottom!

THE REASON? Wesson Oil with Gold Medal Flour in this amazing new easy STIR-N-ROLL Biscuit Recipe

RICHER! These wonderful delicate golden-crusted biscuits are richer and flakier than we ever baked before. You make them with a revolutionary new recipe developed by the Betty Crocker Staff of General Mills. And they're so easy to make that even a beginner can bake perfect biscuits the very first time.

EASIER! Far quicker than other home mixed recipes. Here's why. There's no cutting in shortening. You simply pour Wesson Oil with milk into dry ingredients and stir. No floury mess to clean up. Roll or pat out the dough on waxed paper.

SURER! Here are the reasons. First—this amazing new, easy Betty Crocker STIR-N-ROLL Biscuit Recipe has been tested and retested to perfection. Second—you use fine, dependable Gold Medal Flour and light, pure Wesson Oil. This great team makes STIR-N-ROLL Biscuits more tender—gives them a delicate crispy crust, top and bottom.

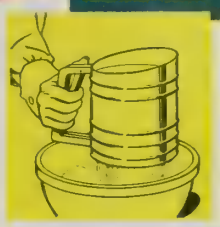
Gold Medal's splendid all-purpose baking qualities help assure you of success in all your bakings every time. Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour is uniform from sack to sack . . . month to month. You can count on every cupful —every time!

Mild, light Wesson Oil is so easy to measure accurately! Pure vegetable Wesson Oil stands up under highest baking heat—your biscuits are readily digestible every time. Wesson Oil is famous, too, for Chiffon Cakes, STIR-N-ROLL Pastry, delicious salad dressings and for frying.

"Betty Crocker" and "Kitchen-tested" are reg. trade marks of General Mills, Inc.
Copyright 1951, General Mills.

GUARANTEE: Full cost of ingredients refunded if biscuits made with Betty Crocker's new STIR-N-ROLL recipe, Gold Medal Flour and Wesson Oil, are not superior to biscuits made with any other recipe. Simply itemize cost of ingredients used and send with your letter to General Mills, Dept. 262, 623 Marquette Avenue, Minneapolis 2, Minnesota.*

General Mills

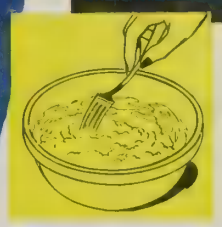


Gold Medal Flour

America's No. 1 All-Purpose Flour

Biscuit Recipe OF ALL TIME!

START WITH GOLD MEDAL FLOUR...WESSON OIL...COLD MILK



Sensational Recipe! Here's all you need. Just these simple ingredients; Gold Medal Flour, milk, salt, baking powder, and Wesson Oil.

- Sift dry ingredients into bowl!

NO CUTTING IN SHORTENING...JUST MEASURE WESSON OIL WITH MILK

No guessing! Wesson Oil is so easy to measure. Simply measure Wesson Oil and milk together in cup.

- Pour all at once into the flour mixture! Stir with fork!

Betty Crocker's STIR-N-ROLL BISCUITS

Make rolled, patted or dropped biscuits with this recipe

ROLLED BISCUITS | PATTED BISCUITS | DROPPED BISCUITS

Preheat oven to 475 degrees.

Sift together.....
- 2 cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
- *3 tsp. double-action baking powder
- *1 tsp. salt

Pour into a measuring cup (but don't stir)
- ⅓ cup Wesson Oil
- ⅔ cup milk

Then pour all at once into the flour.

Stir with a fork until mixture cleans sides of bowl and rounds up into a ball. Smooth up by kneading about ten times, without additional flour. With the dough on waxed paper, press out ¼ inch thick with hands or roll out between waxed papers. Cut with unfloured biscuit cutter. Bake 10 to 12 minutes on ungreased cooky sheet in very hot oven (475 degrees). Makes about 20 medium-sized biscuits.

Note: If doubling or tripling recipe, measure oil and milk into bowl, then pour all at once into flour.

SUCCESS SECRETS

1. For a thicker biscuit, roll dough ½ inch thick.
2. For nice straight sides, use sharp edged cutter and cut straight down into dough without twisting.
3. For biscuits with smooth tops, roll out dough between two sheets of waxed paper.

If you use GOLD MEDAL Self-Rising Flour, omit baking powder and salt.*

IMPORTANT: This sensational new Betty Crocker recipe developed exclusively for GOLD MEDAL FLOUR and WESSON OIL

"Wesson Oil" is a reg. trade mark of Wesson Oil & Snowdrift Co., Inc.

AND Wesson Oil

America's No. 1 Salad Oil

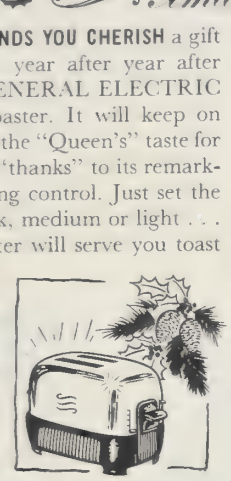
BUY-LINES

AN ADVERTISING PAGE

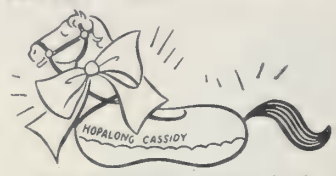
WANT TO LOOK LIKE AN ANGEL at all the holiday parties? Well, you can't if your hair is dry, brittle and unruly from using drying shampoos . . . so let me urge you again to switch to new KREML Shampoo today. What's so different about it? Many things . . . to begin with, it has a natural oil base. That's why it coaxes your hair to silken softness . . . leaving it angelic to style and manage. But that's not the only blessing of KREML Shampoo . . . its magic new ingredient "Folisan" has special cleansing qualities . . . brings out all the natural highlights in your hair and leaves it fairly glistening with glossy sheen. Whatever your hair style, KREML Shampoo will bring out new beauty and brilliance . . . but it's simply a must if you're trying to train it along the new longer hair-dos. However, only seeing is believing . . . so give your hair this new beauty treatment today and see if you don't look like an angel.

DECK THE HALLS WITH BOUGHS OF HOLLY... but be sure you're pretty as a picture when you "grace" the holiday scene. And you will be if you depend on CO-ETS for all your beauty needs . . . for these little fluted cotton squares answer every need to perfection. Reason is this . . . they're soft as down and petal-smooth . . . yet amazingly absorbent, too. That's why a CO-ET is your best bet wherever beauty is served . . . for applying make-up, astringents and foundations . . . plus removing creams, excess rouge and powder, nail polish and endless other uses. And remember . . . the first essential for a radiantly beautiful skin is correct cleansing. Like this:

Twice daily apply cleansing cream lavishly and smooth into your skin thoroughly with gentle, upward strokes . . then remove with a CO-ET. Follow with a good skin freshener applied with a new CO-ET.



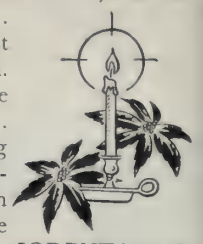
The cost of CO-ETS? Only 33¢ for the large economy package with 80 fluted cotton squares . . . at all Drug and Cosmetic Counters.



ONCE again it's the Christmas Season . . . a time of special menus, generous gift budgets and the bright gaiety of Yuletide decorations. But before I wish you a happy holiday and a very Merry Christmas, let me remind you that to enjoy the true spirit of Christmas . . . you must give generously of yourself! So wear your warmest smile and let your good will brighten every moment . . . from the time you tie your first beribboned package until the bells ring out in welcome to the New Year.

Xmas Hints

GIVE THE FRIENDS YOU CHERISH a gift they'll cherish year after year after year . . . a GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster. It will keep on giving toast to the "Queen's" taste for a lifetime . . . "thanks" to its remarkable new timing control. Just set the control to dark, medium or light . . . the G-E Toaster will serve you toast when and how you want it. That's no exaggeration . . . it keeps the toast down or pops it up . . . only when you, the family and breakfast are ready. It doesn't matter whether you toast one slice or 20, either . . . it will always be exactly the way Y-O-U like it. Its wonderful Snap-in Crumb Tray is something to rejoice over, too . . . simply snap it out, brush it off and snap it in again! With all these marvelous features, you'll want to be on the receiving end of a GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster as well as the giving end . . . so better whisper in your own Santa's ear while there's still time. Just $22.95 at your G-E Dealer's.



When the stockings are hung by the chimney with care
The gift a child wants most should surely be there.

And that's Hopalong Cassidy's horse Topper, the first really new play horse in a generation and the new favorite among young "westerns". Topper is made of rugged white VINYLITE Brand Plastics by U. S. Fiber & Plastics Corp., Stirling, N. J., is easy to inflate and loads of fun in and out of the water . . . with plastic bridle, realistic tail and adjustable shoulder straps to fit any youngster from 3 to 12. And "thanks" to VINYLITE Brand Plastic, a product of Bakelite Division, Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation, Topper is lightweight and buoyant . . . yet so tough, it's resistant to cracking and abrasions . . . and is waterproof, mildew-resistant and easy to wipe clean with a damp cloth. I don't know anything that promises more year round fun for young cowpokes . . . yet Topper costs only $3.95.

HERE'S A TIP FOR CHRISTMAS that will add glamour to any gift! Wrap your presents in colorful CELLOPHANE—to brighten the holiday season . . . to give your gifts that Cinderella look! It's easy, too. All you need are colored sheets of DU PONT CELLOPHANE, and some CELLOPHANE tape and ribbon. For an extra flair, you can make pompons with a handful of colored CELLOPHANE drinking straws. Just tie a string around the middle, pull it tight, and watch the shimmering straws fan out into a smart "decorator" effect. And use CELLOPHANE tape to hang Christmas cards on your tree and mantel. And for your tree or around the house, bells, garlands, streamers and snow—all made of sparkling CELLOPHANE—give your holiday scene a special look! Make yours a CELLOPHANE Christmas—but shop early—for the stock of CELLOPHANE in your local store may not last long.

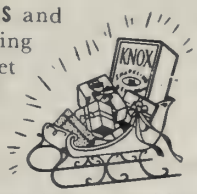
SAFETY FIRST, last and always is the IODENT creed . . . it's made by a Dentist to safeguard your teeth. Now you can smoke and smile, too . . . twice daily brushing with IODENT Toothpaste gives your teeth sparkling brilliance and fights tooth decay. IODENT is made in two textures . . . which means you can select the toothpaste best suited to your needs: IODENT No. 1 for Teeth Easy to Bryten (especially for children). IODENT No. 2 for Teeth Hard to Bryten (particularly for smokers). Yes, IODENT No. 2 erases smudge, even smoke smudge, with absolute safety . . . has a delightful flavor that lingers and sweetens your breath. While IODENT No. 1 with its new flavor children love is the only toothpaste with a gentle action especially for young, growing teeth. So get IODENT to safeguard your family's smile with safety . . . only 43¢ for the BIG family-size tube. If you prefer IODENT with Ammonium Compounds which also fight decay, get No. 1-Plus-A and No. 2-Plus-A at the same low price.

'TIS THE SEASON TO BE JOLLY . . . but you won't feel like joining in the fun if painful feet put a damper on your holiday "spirit"! So let me give a suggestion . . . get a pair of DR. SCHOLL'S Air-Pillo Insoles and slip them into your shoes. You'll feel like you're walking on air . . . for they're made of Latex Foam (actually 90% air!) and are air-ventilating air-cushions that float your feet from toe to heel in heavenly, walking ease. I wager your feet will jump for joy . . . because these Air-Pillo Insoles not only relieve painful callouses, burning, tenderness and sore heels, but offer a wonderfully soft, restful bed for your feet . . . ease pressure on nerves and arteries in the feet. You'll find DR. SCHOLL'S Air-Pillo Insoles at your Drug, Shoe, Dept. and 5-10¢ store in practically all sizes and colors . . . white for men and in white, red, black, brown, gray and green to harmonize with women's open-toe and open-heel dress, sport and casual shoes.

PLAN YOUR YULETIDE FEAST to include all the dishes your family lists as favorites . . . then "invite" a CAVALIER to add the perfect finishing touch to your celebration. I think you'll be truly thankful for this tip, too . . . for this distinctive, new, king-size cigarette is winning new friends (and keeping them!) day after day. And it isn't difficult to understand why, either . . . for CAVALIERS combine cool, cool mildness with smooth, mellow flavor just the way you've always dreamed of. The secret, of course, lies in their special modern blend of fine, light Colonial type tobaccos . . . which are naturally mild and delightful. And here's something else you'll like about mild, flavorsome CAVALIERS . . . the longer, more leisurely smoking of their extra king-size length. And cartons of CAVALIERS in their gay Christmas wrappings make wonderful Christmas gifts. So why not add CAVALIERS to your Christmas list now?

SANTA CLAUS IS COMING . . . and I miss my guess if he doesn't bring you lots of lovely NYLON Stockings. So let me remind you that many things affect their wear . . . such as fabric construction, proper fit and length, careful handling, proper gartering and denier. Denier, you know, is the weight and thickness of each thread of NYLON yarn in stockings . . . the higher the denier number the stronger the thread. In other words, 30 denier yarn is twice as heavy and twice as strong as 15 denier. Before 1948 most NYLON Stockings were the heavier 30 and 40 denier, and they're still available. But today many women (me, too!) prefer the sheerer 15 denier, because they're so lovely and flattering. Remember, DU PONT makes only the NYLON yarn. Over 600 manufacturers make the stockings. For helpful hints on the care of stockings, write Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, for your FREE copy of the NYLON Booklet.

THE GIRL UNDER THE MISTLETOE is sure to get a kiss . . . but I can tell you how to get one every day in the year from the man in your life. Just give yourself a TONI Home Permanent! He won't be able to resist the wave that's lovely as naturally-curly hair right from the very first day. Yes, I said "very first day". From the first wonderful moment, actually, your TONI looks soft and natural. TONI guarantees it! Because TONI—and only TONI—now has the wonder neutralizer, Permafix, that conditions your hair . . . leaves your wave feathery-soft at the first combing, more beautifully natural month after month. Imagine—not a minute of frizz! No waiting for stubborn kink to soften. With a TONI you'll have an adorably-soft wave that looks and feels like naturally-curly hair immediately. One that sets instantly at a finger tip's touch. So give yourself a TONI right now . . . guaranteed soft and natural from the very first day.



y Nancy Sasser

Fun with Foods

YOUR FRIENDS AND FAMILY WILL WELCOME SANTA CLAUS Christmas morning when he arrives with this tempting box of Seafood goodies. Sh-h-h . . . I'll let you in on a pre-Christmas secret . . . it's DEMING'S TREASURE CHEST. Chock-full of delicious assorted Seafood, it makes an ideal gift. There's DEMING'S Dungeness Crabmeat, DEMING'S Diced Smoked Oysters, DEMING'S Salmon Hors d'Oeuvres, DEMING'S Sirloin Salmon with skin and backbone removed, DEMING'S Puget Sound Sockeye Salmon. But that's only 5 tins in this delicacy pack. DEMING'S Treasure Chest also includes Smoked Salmon, Tuna, Chinook Salmon and O-O-OH, of course, DEMING'S haven't forgotten that famous skinned and boned light meat Salmon, DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets. It's so rich in protein and so good in salads, cocktails and sandwiches. Here's the way to solve your Christmas problem: Send a DEMING'S Treasure Chest, attractively gift wrapped, to a friend, neighbor, or better yet, surprise yourself Christmas morn. Prepaid anywhere in the United States, only $6.85. Write DEMING'S Treasure Chest, Bellingham, Washington.

VISIONS OF SUGAR PLUMS and Christmas Candies dancing through your head? Then get KNOX, the real unflavored Gelatine . . . and try these luscious-tasting, easy-making Marshmallow Marvels:

Soften 1 envelope KNOX Gelatine in top of double boiler in ⅓ cup cold water. Place over boiling water and stir until gelatine is dissolved. Add ½ cup sugar and stir until dissolved. Remove from heat. Pour ⅔ cup light corn syrup into large bowl of electric mixer. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla extract, and gelatine and sugar mixture. Beat on highest speed until mixture becomes thick and of soft marshmallow consistency. Grease pan about 7″ x 10″ x 1½″. Chop 3 cups Bakers' Shredded Coconut and toast in oven (350°-375° F.). Use part to thoroughly line sides and bottom of pan. Pour in the marshmallow, smooth off top with knife and sprinkle top with part of remaining coconut. Let stand in cool place (not refrigerator) until well set. Loosen around edges with sharp knife and remove from pan onto cookie sheet. Cut into squares. Roll marshmallows in remaining coconut.

MAKE YOUR DAYS MERRY AND BRIGHT . . . by serving tall, sunny glasses of DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice as your taste-tickling refresher with meals and 'tween times, too. It has a delicious, tropic goodness all its own . . . not too tart, not too sweet, the perfect juice for all 'round use. But that's only natural . . . you know DEL MONTE'S reputation for flavor . . . and DEL MONTE makes a point of selecting only the juiciest pineapples . . . right when natural tartness and sweetness are in perfect balance. That's why so many people agree with me that no other juice, nor drink, for that matter, offers such tempting, delightful refreshment . . . or tastes so good with so many foods. So ask your Grocer for several cans of DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice today . . . then try this: Start the day feeling fresh with this bracing tropical juice. Serve it with snacks . . . there's nothing like the sunny sparkle of this golden, tropical juice. Make it your first course at lunch and dinner . . . it's bright as all outdoors with a flavor to match.

A PRE-CHRISTMAS GIFT to make you believe in SANTA CLAUS . . . a generous FREE supply of INSTANT POSTUM! Don't delay over writing for it . . . for it may help you to better sleep, better health and better looks for the holidays. These scientific facts explain why: both coffee and tea contain caffein, a drug and nerve stimulant . . . and while many people can drink these beverages without ill-effects, others who are caffein-susceptibles suffer "jittery nerves", indigestion and sleepless nights. That's why POSTUM makes such a big difference . . . for this wholesome wheat-bran drink is entirely caffein-free! As a result, it can't "torment" you with the ills suffered by caffein-susceptibles:

FREE! Trial supply of POSTUM . . . just write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J2, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N.Y.

ACT NOW . . . a gift leading toward good health is too priceless to postpone!

LET'S SING AND DANCE AND MAKE GOOD CHEER . . . for the Yuletide season is finally here. And that's your "cue" to give a party . . . and my "cue" to urge you to put TRISCUIT Wafers at the top of your "guest list". Even the nicest parties become nicer when these taste-enticers make an entrance . . . because they're made purely for your eating pleasure by National Biscuit Company . . . from hearty, tangy whole wheat, salted to a "T" and golden toasted to crisp, crunchy perfection. So insure the success of every party you give . . . by serving TRISCUIT Wafers with salads, cheese, appetizers, drinks, sliced meats, soups and canapes. And for a really elegant holiday treat, top 'em with this luscious Mock Pâté De Foie Gras Spread: Discard casing from ⅛ lb. liverwurst and mash. Add 2 tbsp. minced parsley, 1 tbsp. mayonnaise, 1 tsp. minced onion and mix well.

You'll want to serve them to your family, too . . . just be sure you ask for TRISCUIT Wafers baked only by NABISCO.

(Continued from Page 114)

just after V-J Day, in late summer, and she'd met him in a wide-brimmed red straw. It couldn't be big enough or red enough for the way she'd felt that day.

She wandered on out to the kitchen to baste the ham. It looked delicious. Martha was a good cook, if she did say so herself. She checked the plates waiting in the warming oven, and wondered with a sudden sinking feeling why she hadn't got Bertha Foley in to help as she had done, ever since Delia left, when they entertained. She hadn't thought of Jimmy's coming home as "entertaining" and had just barged ahead with the usual schoolboy dinner, but it wasn't right for this occasion. All small-towny and calories. Betsy would think she didn't know any better. She should have had a fillet of beef and a sophisticated dessert—vanilla soufflé, perhaps. It was too late to change the dinner, but maybe she could still get Bertha to serve and wash up instead of everybody hopping up and down, changing plates, and Betsy insisting on helping with the dishes, and all that confusion. What had possessed her not to think of it?

She started for the telephone, but there was a car slowing down in front of the house and she looked to see if it was Jim, home early after all his pretended nonchalance. But it was Jimmy's gray convertible turning in. They must have started at dawn, as excited and eager as she was herself. Martha ran to the driveway.

Jimmy's long body unfolded from behind the wheel. "See what I brought," he said.

Why, she feels as shy as I do, Martha thought, and forgot her carefully rehearsed greeting. She put her arm around Betsy's shoulders and kissed the young cheek.

"A great big welcome, my dear," she said, and saw a pleased light flash across Betsy's face.

"Oh, thank you," Betsy said, blushing and looking even younger than Martha remembered. "A great big thank you, Mrs. Bartlett."

Men are always asking questions, and women are always inventing answers, but men are none the wiser.

—PETER BRENNER: Uncommon Common Sense

Jimmy did not actually tell her until the night before they left, but Martha had known from that first minute.

Jim was at a meeting, so Martha was alone, reading in bed, when Jimmy came in and perched on the side of her bed. He had always made his confidences that way and it made him look young and boyish in spite of his great height.

"You're early," Martha said. "Wasn't it a good party?"

"Swell. But Betsy has to pack and I wanted to talk to you." He took Martha's book away gently and laid it on the bed table.

"Yes?" Martha smiled. Did he think this was a surprise?

He took her hand and turned her rings. "You know I'm in love with her, don't you?" he asked.

"Yes. I know."

He glowed with happiness. "The wonderful part is that she loves me too."

MARTHA smiled on. "That doesn't seem at all strange to me," she replied. "I'd think it was very strange if she didn't."

"You're not a good judge," pronounced the budding lawyer. "You're biased. Definitely biased."

"Betsy's a fine girl," Martha said softly.

"She's perfect," Jimmy breathed.

There was a moment's silence. Jimmy shattered it.

"We want to be married practically right away," he said. "June, probably, so we can have the summer before I go back to Columbia."

June. But he hadn't finished law school.

"We'd thought we'd make it right after my exams. As soon as I can get squared away. We'll have a short honeymoon someplace de luxe and the rest of the summer cruising around the Lakes in my boat. Using you for headquarters—if you'll let us." He went on talking, giving her time to take it in. "Isn't it luck, the way Betsy's sailed, too, on the Chesapeake all her life?"

In spite of herself Martha laughed, remembering Betsy's introduction to the honeymoon craft.

"We're going to the river." Jimmy had announced at breakfast, the morning after their arrival. "I want to show Betts my boat and see about sprucing her up. She's going to be absolutely shipshape this summer." He'd looked so smug Martha should have guessed something then, but she was used to spring boat enthusiasms.

"WHAT did you think of Jimmy's pride and joy?" she'd asked when they came home for lunch. "I'll bet you told them to launch her, Jimmy, cold as it is, and are going to take her out this afternoon."

Jimmy had looked sheepish.

"Not this afternoon," Betsy had answered. "Not till we paint her. Her stern, anyway, though it's got an awful lot of coats on it already. Mrs. Bartlett, does Jimmy always forget to paint off his old girl's name before he is on with the new? The man at the boatyard took one look at me and he said, 'Why, you ain't Mary Lou. That Jimmy Bartlett's changed his mind agin.' The Mary Lou, I ask you! Well, the boat's going to be Bouncing Bett for a while now, till Jimmy changes his mind again."

Martha's little spurt of laughter died away. For Jimmy's mind would not change again. He was like his true-blue father in that, once the choice was made. He would marry this girl with the bright smile and tiny soft waist. A sweet girl, but not so different from lots of others Jimmy had known.

Your daughter's your daughter all her life. Your son is your son till he gets him a wife.

The jingle came unbidden, taunting at Martha with the fact that she had no daughter. Nor any other son. Only Jimmy, who was getting him a wife.

"What are you thinking about?" Jimmy's voice reached her anxiously.

Martha put the ugly couplet out of her mind. Forever. "I'm just thinking," she said, "how wonderful it will be to have a daughter. And a June wedding will be lovely. Now kiss me and hop off the bed. I want to put on my best dressing gown and go tell Betsy how pleased I am."

Martha's sister Alicia, her oldest one, lived in Washington, and for both reasons she considered herself the family arbiter in all matters of taste and social usage. Martha wrote her the news of the engagement and a letter of instructions flew back.

"You should call on Betsy's mother as soon as possible, and the fact that you live so far away" (At the back end of nowhere, she means, Martha thought, making a face at the thick stationery) "is no excuse for not doing it, because you can visit me and just drive over without its seeming so strained. It's no distance from here."

Goodness, she actually approves of the match, Martha thought, guessing Alicia had looked up more about the Evanses than the mileage to their house. Are they that grand? she wondered, quaking.

It made her want less than ever to make the duty call. She had written Betsy's mother at once and had a cordial letter in return, saying they were very happy about the marriage and were devoted to Jim already. Well, they'd better be. The wedding date had been set for July third, and all she and Jim had to do was to go down for it. The groom's mother is just a figurehead in a marriage. Everyone said so. Anyway, she was too busy right now to go gallivanting. They were starting the upstairs decorating immediately, and again she was deep in wallpapers and curtains.

The new bathroom meant changing so many partitions that it was only common sense to do the whole floor at once. Espe-

SNACK 'EM OR FEAST 'EM—with a fine choice of Borden's Fine Cheeses!

The jolliest Holiday spreads!

For super sandwiches or captivating canapés—the "party" part of holiday time—stock up today on Borden's Cheese Spreads!

They're the most delicious cheese spreads you can buy—blended from Borden's finest cheese. Taste the fine aged American Cheddar in Vera-Sharp and Cheese 'n Bacon. (These two come in 1-lb. bowls or 5-oz. glasses.)

Enjoy Pimento, Pineapple, or Relish—three favorites made with Borden's Cream Cheese. Nine kinds in all. A new formula gives them more flavor and finer texture for spreading.

At your store, in heavy-based, crystal-clear "Party" glasses you'll be proud to use for fruit juices, children's milk, or party beverages. Collect a set!

Pass the cheese tray!

Everybody wants more of that good Borden's Gruyere Cheese! Sweet as a nut, delicious! It's made from really fine Swiss cheese aged 11 months or more. Even folks who seldom go for cheese love this one!

For folks who like a cheese with lots of spunk, Borden's Vera-Sharp is the thing! Fine American Cheddar aged till the flavor crackles, gives process Vera-Sharp its rich personality.

Both Gruyere and Vera-Sharp come in 1-oz. foil-wrapped portions. In a handy to-table plastic box . . . need no refrigeration. Good cheeses to have on hand for spur-of-the-minute celebrations!

Borden's Fine Cheeses

FOLKS WHO KNOW CHEESE SAY "BORDEN'S, PLEASE!"

cially, with Jimmy and Betsy planning to make the house their "headquarters" most of the summer, everything should be fresh upstairs as well as down.

Then there was her wedding outfit. "Ensemble," Alicia would call it. Everyone gave her the old chestnut about "all the mother of the groom has to do is buy a fancy hat and show up at the church," but unless she was going to appear as a Thurber cartoon the fancy hat called for shoes, dress and bag at least. It looked like lots of fuss. Ethel said she'd undoubtedly have to have the hat made, even if she was lucky enough to find a ready-made dress, and Martha was always unhappy with milliners. Of course she wanted to look her best walking the length of the church as the mother of the groom—with Jimmy the groom—but it all took so much time and workmen were already swarming over the place. She didn't get around to answering Alicia's first letter, or her second, but the third one, heavily underscored, jarred her.

"For heaven's sake, when are you coming?" it demanded. "Do you expect to meet the Evanses for the first time at the church? It isn't civilized not to make some gesture before the invitations go out. And speaking of invitations, I've started a tentative list from Patricia's wedding list." (Alicia's Patricia had been married In a Big Way the year before.) "There are dozens of things for us to settle. How about Monday? I'll expect you."

"Must I?" Martha appealed to Jim.

"Of course not," he said. "It's entirely the Evanses' headache. We're just a couple more guests. But the trip's not a bad idea. You're getting jumpy and Alicia's dying to put her finger in the pie. So go on down next week and break the ice with the Evanses. And by the way, while you're there, find out if I've got to wear my cutaway. It was pretty tight at Patricia's wedding, but since you made me buy the thing—I never did need it any more than a cat needs two tails ——"

This was an old sore and Martha rushed in with flattering balm. "Why, of course. I've been so set on my own clothes I forgot my handsome husband was going to be there, too, and nobody will look at me. Your cutaway's in a bag in the cedar closet. I'll get it out so you can take it to that good tailor in the city while I'm gone."

So she was going.

"I think I'll drive," she mused, "if you can spare the car that long."

Jim looked at her in astonishment. Martha hated to drive alone even to the city.

"Because if I have to borrow Alicia's car to call on the Evanses she'll come, too, as sure as fate. And I want to be independent. Just red-crayon the road map for me and I'll start Monday."

BUT she didn't, because first she had to have a spring suit and it took three days of shopping in town.

"What's the matter with your blue one?" Jim asked after the second dinner devoted to a detailed account of the search. "You always looked so nice in it."

This was not worth answering, and Martha didn't.

The next day, however, she hit the jack pot. Martha and Ethel drove home in triumph with the back seat of the car piled with striped boxes from the city's smartest shop "Wasn't it luck?" they exulted to each other, regaling themselves with coffee and gloating over the loot spread through the living room. "To hit the very morning the buyer got back from New York with the new summer things?"

That adorable print and the little flower hat," Martha chanted, enumerating. "And the faille suit. Just right to travel in summer. And I had to have the dressy chiffon if we go down to the wedding several days ahead of time as the Evanses insist. It's an awful lot of clothes, though."

The deepest thing in our nature is this dumb region of the heart in which we dwell alone with our willingnesses and our unwillingnesses, our faiths and our fears.

—WILLIAM JAMES.

"About time," Ethel said. "You've be prewar long enough. But the real prize your wedding dress. If we'd started out look for it we'd have hunted all the way Fifty-seventh Street in New York, and day you walk spang into it. That yumm green. We can decide on the hat and thi as soon as you get back. Miss Delicia sa that they'd have samples ready. It'll be cinch. How's Ike getting on upstairs? Le go see."

"You go," said Martha. "I can't budge

"Do I look all right?" Martha ask Alicia. "Do you really like my dress a hat?"

"Yes, you look nice," Alicia said. "But would have been better to have a plain h with a print dress. Don't you know y should always wear a plain hat with a prin and a flower hat with a plain dress?"

MARTHA'S face fell. "But it's such a pret hat. Jim said the violets made my eyes— said it was especially becoming."

"Well, it is," Alicia conceded, softenin "You look sweet and the violets do mat your eyes. I only meant it was more chic

"Oh, well, you're chic enough for t whole family," Martha smiled back. It w the nicest visit she and Alicia had had years. "How's my hair?"

"I was going to bring that up next Alicia pounced. "In fact, I'm going to ma an appointment for you this very morni for a good cutting and permanent with n own man before you home. You can't buy a h for the wedding till you g rid of some of that hai

Martha drove out alo the Baltimore Turnpi glancing alternately at t mirror and the dashboa clock. She did have t much hair; perhaps th was why her hats had tendency to ride up. And she was, as pr dicted, too early.

"You're leaving way too early. It wo take you much over an hour," Alicia had pr tested. They had called the Evanses t night before to say she was coming and ask directions. "You can't possibly call b fore four."

"But it's quite far out of town and I'm stupid at finding country places. Anyway she added hastily, seeing a last offer to a company her trembling on her sister's lip "anyway, if it's much too early I'll just pa somewhere and read. I'm taking a mag zine—though what I wish I could take is anesthetic."

The car rolled along, bringing the fatef call closer every minute. What would th be like, this Sally and Arthur Evans soon be Jimmy's other parents? People said y didn't marry the family, but the fact w that even the in-laws married each other some extent. Family visits, holidays, an versaries, not to mention—Martha felt queer fluttering inside her—not to menti sharing the grandchildren. Betsy was so u affected it didn't seem possible the Evans could be stuffy or high-hat, but last nigh telephone conversation with them had be awfully stilted, consisting mostly of "I looking forward so much"es.

They were glad enough to get Jimmy, Ma tha suddenly decided. And they'll have to ta me, even in a print dress and flowered hat. F half an hour anyway.

She began to recognize the landmarks she been given. I'm nearly there, she thoug slowing to a snail's pace. Now I know h the Queen of Sheba felt going to meet King So mon—or was it Cleopatra and Antony—taki all those jewels and what not to make sure of welcome. Jewelry. Why hadn't she brought present for Betsy, some family thing, ho ever simple, in honor of this occasion? T old-fashioned pearl lovers' knot would ha been a perfect touch. It had been Jim's mot er's. Or the little garnet heart that had la all these years in its red velvet box. If s hadn't had sense enough to think of it be

(Continued on Page 122)

Let's make the FIXIN'S festive, too!

Easy and thrifty with

DIAMOND WALNUTS

PARTY-STYLE TURKEY STUFFING

It's so simple to make and serve! Roast the turkey without stuffing. Then add coarsely broken Diamond Walnut kernels generously to your favorite stuffing; form into 2-inch balls. When turkey is done, bake balls in shallow pan at 375° F. 30 minutes, or until brown. The turkey will slice better after standing!

Thrifty is the word for Diamond Walnuts! One pound goes so far—gives you over 2 full cups of crisp, usable kernels.

SEAFOOD SALAD SUPREME

- 8" to 9" ring mold of tomato aspic (4-6 cups)
- 1 ½ cups cooked or canned shrimp
- 1 cup thinly sliced celery
- ½ cup coarsely chopped Diamond Walnuts
- ¼ cup sliced stuffed olives
- ½ cup mayonnaise
- ¼ cup French dressing
- 1 or 2 hard-cooked eggs, sliced (optional)

Make tomato aspic day ahead. Shortly before serving, mix 1 cup shrimp, celery, Diamond Walnuts and olives with blended mayonnaise and French dressing. Fill center of aspic with mixture, garnish with Diamond Walnut halves, remaining shrimp and egg slices.

With ready-shelled Diamond Walnuts in your cupboard you have extra goodness at your fingertips! Vacuum-packed in 8 and 4 ounce cans, they stay fresh, crisp, sweet for year-round use.

HOLIDAY RELISH PLATE

Three good ideas for good eating! Stir crisp chopped Diamond Walnuts into raw cranberry-orange relish. Mix chopped Diamond Walnuts with savory cheese to stuff celery. Sugar-coat big Diamond Walnut halves for dessert-time nibbling.

Now—even lower prices

Treat yourself to the best this season—Diamond Walnuts, of course! They cost so little, now. And Diamonds always give you so many usable kernels per pound—the real test of value. They're packed in 1 lb. cellophane bags (red for large-size, blue for medium). The Diamond brand on every shell means California's finest walnuts—every time!

(Continued from Page 120)

self. Ethel or Alicia or someone should have suggested it. Now here she was, with nothing in her hand but a lot of names in a blankbook.

Limp and depressed, she looked again at the dashboard clock. It still said three-thirty. Doubtless the elegant Mrs. Evans would be having her afternoon rest. The white gate marked "Evans' Hill" appeared, and beyond it she glimpsed a rambling white house.

I can't hide anywhere here to read. It's too conspicuous. She paused another minute to summon up her courage. Here I go, she said, and started up the curving drive. She felt turned completely inside out.

At the portico she stopped. She reached for her compact and put it back without using it. Mrs. Evans might be watching out a window - Martha certainly would be, in her place—and even if she didn't actually see Martha fixing her face she would wonder what she was doing and why she didn't come in. She put on her gloves, tucked in a lock of hair, and stepped out of the car gracefully and casually. She hoped. She went up the steps and reached toward the bell.

Martha sat in the Evanses' bright chintzy living room drinking a mint julep. She felt entitled to a celebration. She was over a big hurdle.

Before she had even rung the bell the door had flown open—she had been so concentrated on the senior Evanses she had almost forgotten Betsy would be there too—and she had been enveloped in a fragrant young embrace. Behind Betsy came her mother exclaiming spontaneously, "Why, you look like Jimmy. Except female, of course, and a foot or more lower down!" She laughed over her shoulder. "Arthur, she looks like Jimmy. Only little." So Martha knew they were human, after all, and had been speculating about her too.

Next, in a comfortable old tweed coat and baggy flannels, came Arthur. She had to call him Arthur at once because he said, "Hello, Martha," and kissed her, knocking her hat askew. "Sally's got us all lined up for inspection. This is Thomasina. She completes the roster."

Heavens. Martha had understood Betsy's sister was a child. Fourteen or fifteen. Or was it sixteen? This sophisticated young sprig looked older than Betsy, although maybe it was the riding clothes.

"How do you do, Mrs. Bartlett," Thomasina said, without enthusiasm, her eye flicking over the rather tired Bartlett family car.

They filed into the bright airy room and sat on the squashy down cushions. There were quantities of flowers about in what the Riverside Garden Club called "arrangements," and through the French doors Martha could see white-iron-and-glass furniture on the terrace. The pause that followed the first burst of greetings lengthened perceptibly. Arthur was frankly looking her over. Thomasina had crossed her long jodhpurred legs and was gazing out the window. Betsy, Sally and Martha all rushed into speech.

"What did you ——"

"How about ——"

"So nice of you ——"

They all stopped dead and Arthur took control.

"The occasion calls for a libation," he said, getting to his feet. "Mint julep, Martha?"

Before Martha could answer, a lank and handsome youth roared up in a station wagon and removed Thomasina.

"Don't mind Tommy," Arthur said. "She's going through the social phase and she's mad at Betts for not marrying Clay Stanton."

"Daddy!" cried Betsy, turning scarlet.

"A young whippersnapper," Arthur went on easily. "Just the kind I don't want for a son-in-law. Just the way Jimmy is."

After that everything was perfect. While Arthur retired to the pantry for the complicated julep ritual, Martha presented her "tentative" wedding list, and by the time Arthur came back with the thick-rimed glasses, followed by a wonderful old Uncle Remus bearing delicious appetizers, they were working back from Betsy and Jimmy's meeting and courtship to their school days and thence proceeding to a happy interchange of anecdotes about their childhoods and infancies.

A grandfather clock boomed in the hall and Martha jumped guiltily.

"Don't stay too long" had been Alicia's parting shot. "It's a first call, so don't settle down and tell how cute Jimmy was as a baby."

Bull's-eye, sister, Martha conceded mentally. Aloud she said, "Goodness, is it that late? I must go."

Sally walked over and removed the flower hat from Martha's head. "You're going to stay all night," she said. "And tomorrow we'll go and look at the church. I need your advice about lots of things."

"Oh, thank you, but ——"

This time it was Arthur who pushed her back on the sofa. "Of course you'll stay. We're just getting acquainted."

"Please," begged Betsy.

"I'll give you a toothbrush and one of Betsy's trousseau nightgowns," Sally urged.

"We-ell," said Martha, "I'd better call my sister." Which she did, hanging up firmly on Alicia's protests.

At dinner Arthur said, "You know, Martha, Sally wanted to invite you to stay overnight when you called to say you were coming. Betts had given you a big send-off. But you sounded so sort of stiff and formal on the telephone, she got scared."

"She was scared!" gasped Martha, so wholeheartedly that a burst of laughter swept away the last tension.

It was after they had gone up to bed that Sally tapped at Martha's door and entered with a long garment bag over her arm. As cozy and friendly as if she were Ethel.

"I thought you'd like to see my dress for the wedding," she said. "I expected to have to hunt and hunt for it, but when Betsy and I were shopping last week there it was. Just what I wanted. So that's off my mind."

It was on the tip of Martha's tongue to say, "I have mine, too," but some instinct stopped her.

Sally unzipped the bag and lovingly lifted out the gown, satisfaction in her eyes. "Isn't it pretty?" she asked. "I've always loved that yummy shade of green."

"But what on earth possessed you?" Alicia cried. "You should have known you shouldn't buy your dress until after the bride's mother—not to mention the bridesmaids. They have to blend!"

"I guess it was crazy," mourned Martha. "But I saw it, buying those other things. How could I guess Sally would choose exactly the same color? The exact shade? I never dreamed of such a thing."

"'Dreamed' is the word," said Alicia. "Really, Martha, you're a perfect babe in the woods."

Martha was too miserable to fight back. "Can't I possibly wear it? Mightn't it be effective to wear the same color? The dresses are so different. If Sally agrees, that is," she added, catching Alicia's eye.

"A sort of sister act," Alicia disposed of the idea. "Well, you'll just have to go and buy another."

"But the shop is getting samples to match. And it was so expensive."

"Oh, they'll take it back," said Alicia authoritatively. "Just wire them to stop alterations, they won't have started yet anyway. You said there wasn't much but the hem. And you bought all those other clothes there. They'll want you to come back."

"It seems sort of mean if they have started to fix it."

"Tell them you're getting something in its place. You'll need another long dress for the parties. You said there was a dance too."

"So I will," said Martha, clutching at a straw. She hated fusses with shops, and always lost out. "And why haven't I got it? That green is just as good for a dinner dress. If you could see how pretty ——"

It was no use. "You can't possibly sport Mrs. Evans' exact color before the wedding."

"Anybody might," Martha made a last feeble effort.

"Anybody but you," said Alicia with finality. "We'll start again today right here where I can keep an eye on you. You're so pretty, Martha, but you've let yourself go. I've been itching to get my hands on you for years."

Martha resigned herself. She'd pretty well exhausted the possibilities in the city and she knew she ought to be grateful to Alicia, but instead she dreaded it. Her sister wouldn't leave a stone unturned, a shop unvisited, till she found the exact dress. And fixings. Well, they'd have one day off the pavements. Sally had invited them both out for lunch Wednesday. She hoped Alicia wouldn't try to boss Sally too.

The circuit of Connecticut Avenue shops was as thorough as she'd feared. Every bone in Martha's body ached.

"Especially my arches," she moaned, crawling into bed right after dinner. "I believe that they've fallen. And nothing to show for it."

(Continued on Page 124)

"I fell, with my mouth open."

Sensitive skin. "Noxzema is a wonderful cream for my sensitive skin," says lovely Mrs. Connie McDiarmid. "I use it at least three or four times every day—and as a make-up base and night cream. It feels so refreshing and helps protect my skin! Noxzema is my all-purpose cream. It's so economical, too."

"Soft, smooth and glowing" describes the complexion of Toby Robins, beautiful radio and stage actress of Toronto. "I count on Noxzema to help keep it that way. It makes my skin feel so wonderfully fresh and smooth," she says. "This fine, greaseless cream is especially well suited to my every need!"

NEW HOME FACIAL

Look lovelier in 10 days . . . or your money back! Read these 4 simple steps developed by a doctor

No need for a lot of elaborate preps ions...no complicated rituals! With cream, you can cleanse...help pro-
...and help heal! Yes, here's a won-ful new aid to a more beautiful-king skin. Now, you can help your nplexion look not only softer and other, but fresher, too...with just dainty snow-white cream—famous seless Noxzema.

The way to use it is as quick and y as washing your face. It's the new xzema Home Facial—and daily use help bring you a lovelier-looking nplexion, in as little as 10 days' time r your money back!

Here's All You Do

Morning—Step 1.—Apply Noxzema over face and neck. With a damp cloth, "creamwash" just as you would with soap and water. Rinse well. "Creamwashing" with Noxzema cleanses so thoroughly. Why, Noxzema even smells clean!

2.—After drying,
th on a light film of ema for your make-foundation. This eless, invisible film of ema not only holds
-up beautifully, but so helps to protect skin—all day!

Evening—Step 3.—At bedtime, "creamwash" with Noxzema, just as you did in the morning. How clean your skin looks! How fresh it feels! See how you've washed away make-up, the day's accumulation of dirt and grime—without any harsh rubbing!

Step 4.—Now, lightly massage Noxzema into face and neck. Pat a little extra over any blemishes*. While you sleep, Noxzema helps heal them—helps your skin look softer and smoother, too. And it's greaseless! No "smeary" face or messy pillow!

Proved in Clinical Tests

A skin doctor developed Noxzema's New Home Facial! Then, under the supervision of three skin specialists, it was tested on dozens of women—women of all ages, with many different skin types. And 4 out of 5 showed marked skin improvement—in 2 weeks or less!

The new Noxzema Home Facial proved a wonderful aid in softening and smoothing rough, dry skin... helped heal blemished* skin...helped normalize both dry and oily skin. And you'll be thrilled to see how it can help your skin look lovelier, too!

An Exclusive Formula

You see, greaseless Noxzema is a unique medicated formula—a marvelous oil-and-moisture emulsion. This exclusive formula not only helps supply a light film of oil and moisture to the skin's outer surface... but it helps heal blemishes*, at the same time! That's why daily use of Noxzema, in this easy Home Facial, can do so much for your skin...why it can help bring you lovelier-looking skin in 10 days—or your money back! Noxzema leaves your skin feeling cool, refreshed, too!

It Works—or Money Back

We're so positive that the new Noxzema Home Facial can help make your skin lovelier-looking—we make this sincere offer. Try the new Noxzema Home Facial for 10 days. Then, if you are not genuinely satisfied with the results, return your jar to Noxzema, Baltimore, Md.—your money cheerfully refunded. But you will be delighted! Get Noxzema today—while you can get the 85¢ jar for only 59¢ plus tax—almost half again as much for your money as in the Small size! But don't wait—this offer is for a limited time only. Get your jar of Noxzema now—at any drug or cosmetic counter.

*externally-caused

"Blemishes* are no problem for me," says Mrs. Phyllis MacDonald. "Noxzema makes my skin look so much softer and cleaner. I apply it first thing in the morning and at bedtime, too."

Dry skin. "My skin was once dry and very sensitive," says Philadelphia's Barbara Swanson. "But since my Prom Queen days, Noxzema has consistently taken care of my complexion."

MONEY SAVING OFFER ON NOXZEMA

Big 85¢ jar

now only* 59¢ plus tax

Limited offer—Stock up now!

recipe

Party Peach Dreams... so stunning! so sunny! so easy with flavor-rich Canned Cling Peaches from California

3 egg whites
⅛ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
¾ cup granulated sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
¾ cup whipping cream
6 canned cling peach halves
Mixed candied fruits

Beat egg whites with salt until foamy. Add cream of tartar and beat until stiff. Beat in sugar ■ tablespoon at ■ time. Fold in vanilla. Shape meringue in 6 shells on baking sheet covered with brown paper. Bake in very slow oven (275° F.) 1 hour. Cool. Remove carefully from paper and fill each shell with whipped cream. Top with a chilled, drained peach half and decorate with candied fruits. Serves 6.

Glamour dessert, family style. Gorgeous, sun-mellow California cling peaches, instantly ready for serving spooned right from the can! Brilliant, deep-yellow clings, with all the juicy sweetness and natural fruit richness of peaches just-now picked. Glamour eating any way—plain for dessert, at breakfast, in salads, pies, puddings, cakes, upside-down cakes, as a garnish. So useful, so delicious you'll keep several cans handy! Remember! For finest flavor choose California cling peaches!

(Continued from Page 122)

"Why, you can't expect to find it the first day. You just hate to shop, that's all."

"I certainly do. It's people I like, not things. I wish I could buy everything out of a mail-order catalogue."

"Well, lately you haven't spent much more time than if you did. You have to plan."

Alicia certainly did.

"Now let's see," she'd said as they started off that morning. "The bridesmaids are wearing bois de rose. Mrs. Evans green. How about toast?"

Martha stared. "Toast? What are you talking about? Oh, you mean that tan color? I can't wear tan. And anyway, I won't. I don't like it."

"It's awfully smart this year. If you use enough make-up ——"

"Which is another thing I won't do," said Martha crossly. "There's a woman at home that just slathers herself with middle-aged war paint, a nice woman too. Every time I see her she reminds me of a piece of good old furniture that's been stained and varnished and shellacked until you just die to scrape it down to the real wood underneath."

Martha lay in Alicia's guest bed trying to take her sister's advice.

"Here," Alicia had said, tucking her in. "Drink this hot milk and go to sleep. You're going to worry yourself sick at this rate, and it isn't worth it. After all, you're only the mother of the groom."

"Smarty," Martha said. "Just because you were the mother of the bride last year."

"Yes, I was," teased Alicia. "I was the bride's mother and a V.I.P. You are the groom's mother and a V.U.I.P. So go to sleep and forget the whole thing till morning."

Martha had been too weary to translate the initials, but now they drifted back to her. V.I.P. That was Washingtonese for Very Important Person. But V.U.I.P.? Why, of course. Very Un Important Person.

Un Important. The idea. She jumped out of bed, threw on her dressing gown and ran down the hall. V.U.I.P indeed.

Alicia was waiting up for her husband, who was at some sort of conference. She looked up as Martha sailed into the library.

"Hello," she said. "You still awake?"

"I certainly am," said Martha. "I just realized what you called me. And I'm not! I'm not a V.U.I.P. because there couldn't be a wedding without the groom, could there? And there couldn't be the groom without me. So I am not a V.U.I.P. I am a B.N. Now you guess."

"B.N.," repeated Alicia. "All right. I'll bite. What is it?"

"A Biological Necessity," said Martha and stalked back to her room.

I've done it now, thought Martha. I've crossed the Rubicon.

SHE sat at Alicia's hairdresser's getting the works. It had taken some further argument to get her there. She hated beauty shops, as she hated all shops, and was always amazed when her friends said cheerfully, "Oh, I'm sorry I can't go. It's my hair morning." What a waste of time. Her own hair had always curled a little at the temples so she washed it herself and tucked the ends under the best she could. But since it had turned gray it didn't seem to curl or tuck so well. It sort of wisped out.

"Gray hair must be short and crisp unless you want to look like Whistler's Mother," Alicia said, and Martha was afraid she was right. "What's more," she added artfully, "you won't have to bother with curlers and hairpins and things any more. With a good permanent you just run the comb through and it's fixed."

As Alicia foresaw, that settled it.

Snip, snip, went Gaston's scissors. "Madame is going to be very happy with this cut," Gaston pronounced.

Maybe, but she certainly wasn't happy now. She should have consulted the two Jims before she did anything so drastic. She was only doing it to look well for them at the wedding, but now she could only remember how Jim had carried on back in the 'twent when she cut off her really long hair, the ki you boasted you could sit on.

"Your hair was beautiful. It was one of t reasons I married you," he'd ranted.

Snip. Snip. Would anything be left cover her scalp? Martha looked fearfully the floor.

"What do you do with it all?" she aske

"Sweep it up," said Gaston disint estedly, toeing it aside.

"How wasteful. My mother always sa there is nothing like a good hair mattress."

"Madame's hair has a small natu wave," Gaston flattered. "I will cook it n shortest time so the curls may be soft a gentle."

MARTHA didn't believe a word of it. H locks would certainly come out of the a sensal she was supporting on her head in stiff washboard effect.

"I have cut it unformal, which is suitab to madame's type," Gaston went on wi picture-painting gestures. "But I regret y will not be back to me for the first settin We have here such an oil treatment. T first setting is important to make the cu pliable. Like a young girl's. But madam own hairdresser will know."

Ha. Ha, Martha thought. But perhaps s had better go to someone really good in t city for one set.

"And then," Gaston burbled on hopeful "perhaps you will come soon enough bef the wedding so that I, myself, may wave y for that special occasion?"

All right. Two sets then. It was nice Gaston to be so interested. But no mo Darned if she'd get into that habit.

Jim was waiting on the porch when she g home. "My!" he said. "Your trip certain did you good. You look ten years younger

For the first time in her married life, Ma tha wished she could get rid of her husban Not permanently, of course, but it would c tainly simplify things if he could be call away on one of his usual business trips un this job was done. But no. He stuck arou like glue.

Ike Levandowski and his horde had tak over. They were everywhere, measuring pi connections in the bathroom when s wanted a bath, filling buckets at the laund tubs every time she went to the basemen tracking up the back stairs if she wanted go down, and down the front stairs if s wanted to go up.

"What's the rush?" Jim had said. "T girl came here and visited us, didn't she? S liked us the way we are, didn't she? Wha the rush to change everything? . . . It is the money," he said when Martha, horr struck, showed him the estimates. "You ra it, if you want it. You've always been t economical one. But I don't want you tired out. Do it some other time."

Jim had fussed and Martha had go ahead. She knew if they didn't do it now th never would, and Jimmy and Betsy wou need the new guest room and bath this su mer. After the wedding trip, she was goi to give a tea for Betsy, so that all the Riv siders who couldn't go to the wedding cou meet her. Martha couldn't have the wh town traipsing upstairs the way it was. Wh there were still those gouges in the hall pla ter from Jimmy's hockey puck that tin And the ceiling in her own bedroom still h a map of South America on it from the ti Delia's bathtub overflowed. And Delia h been gone ten years.

But as she got in deeper and deeper; as s moved clothes from one closet to another a back again; as she carried the contents bureau drawers from one place to anoth wondering what to do with them; as t wrong wallpapers came one day, and t wrong colors came out of the paintpots t next, Martha's brain reeled and her spi swooned. She hadn't even the satisfaction a good moan to Jim in the evenings. He'd a vised against the whole procedure, and s couldn't give him the least hint he mig have been right. Especially when he was b ing so darned disagreeable.

Jim, who was always so amiable, so good-tempered, had taken to bellowing. He said he couldn't find anything—and, of course, he couldn't. Neither could Martha, as one room after another fell into the general chaos. But every time Jim couldn't lay his hand on a thing the minute he wanted it, he'd roar. Spoiled, that's what he was.

The latest commotion had been over his American Legion button, of all things. Anyone would have thought she'd deliberately baked it in a birthday cake.

It was the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Legion post. Thank heaven he'd be out of the way one night, anyway, so Martha could clear out the linen closet and the upstairs cleaning closet which, with a chunk of the guest room, were to become the new bath. Talk about a mess. And Jim doing all the complaining!

Intelligence appears to be the thing that enables a man to get along without education. Education appears to be the thing that enables a man to get along without the use of intelligence.

—ALBERT EDWARD WIGGAM.

She was just opening a can of soup for her supper when the familiar roar came down the stairs.

Mercy, she thought, what's lost this time? Must be the family fortune.

"MAR-THA!" the roar came to her again.

"Yes, dear," answered Martha, walking to the foot of the stairs and feeling like Mother in Life With Father. "What is it?"

"Where's my button? What have you done with my button?" Jim glared angrily at her from the head of the stairs.

"For goodness' sake. What button?"

"What button do you think I mean when I'm going to a Legion dinner? A pants button? Did you have to move my past commander's button along with everything else in the house? Right out of the studs box where you've kept it for thirty years? Where I saw it just the other day?"

"Well, if you saw it, it's still there," said Martha mildly. "I'll come look."

But that didn't suit him either. "Don't come up. All you do is run up and down stairs, wearing yourself out with this falderal. Just stand still and think where you put it. Try to think rationally if you can."

It certainly didn't sound like Jim, and when she heard herself answer she didn't sound like herself either. She was already up the stairs pushing past him into Jimmy's room, their present camping place, and the only room not being torn asunder.

"I haven't touched the silly thing," she said, pawing about on the cluttered bureau and in the tumbled drawers. "And if you've lost it, you'll just have to go without it. If anybody there doesn't know you're a past commander, the first commander, you can tell them."

Jim banged the door and went out.

He was walking into the Legion Building, heading for the pay booth to call and apologize to Martha before going in to dinner—poor little Martha, all tired out with this nonsense—when Tom Barker, Ethel's husband, hailed him.

"Martha's on the phone," he said.

"I found it," said Martha in a small voice. "I've sent it over to you by a taxi driver. I knew you really wanted it. And I'm sorry I was so edgy."

"I was the one that was nasty," said Jim in a surge of relief. "I was just going to call and tell you so. You needn't have gone to all that trouble, though. Where was it?"

"IN the buttonhole of your Tuxedo from when you went to that governor's dinner last winter. I saw it when I was moving the mothbags out of the guest-room closet. It's lucky we stir up the house once in a while, isn't it?"

"Stir up is right," said Jim.

"Things will be better soon," she promised.

They weren't, though. They got steadily worse, and as day after day she heard the sounds of wrenching laths and falling plaster, her heart quailed. She should never have got into such an upheaval with the wedding so near. Day after day she dashed into town to match samples and rectify mistakes. Night after night she tried to tunnel through the debris—who were those eccentric old brothers, the Collier brothers, in New York, who died in a house full of junk they couldn't find their way out of? Martha could see just how it happened.

AND suddenly, just when they were at their wits' ends, when even their refuge in Jimmy's room was piled with stuff; when the attic stairs spilled sheets and towels at you every time you opened the door; when Martha, finding still another layer of plaster dust downstairs in spite of all her precautions, finally broke down and sobbed to Jim that she'd been a fool, an utter fool, to start the business, it was done. Ike Levandowski's truck carried off the last man and paintbrush; the last barrel of rubbish disappeared. And Ethel and old Delia came and helped move everything back into place.

"Of course it looks nice," Jim said. "Who said it wouldn't?"

They were back in their own big bedroom and it was good to be there. Jim's suits were hanging in neat rows in his closet once more, his shirts and underwear back in Grandfather Bartlett's bureau. Everything had turned out well. The guest-room paper was beautiful and Williamsburgy behind the old Southern four-poster. The new bathroom glistened grandly down the hall. Jim had already adopted it for shaving—to get something back from his investment, he said.

"It's fine. Just fine," Jim pronounced, climbing into his familiar bed and stretching there luxuriously. "I always said it was time the old place had a good face-lifting."

It was June twelfth. Tomorrow the invitations would go out. Sally had already mailed a sample to Martha and Jim, and every time Martha passed the mirror over her bureau she looked at it, stuck proudly in a corner.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Evans request the honour of your presence

.....

to

Mr. James Carlisle Bartlett, Jr.

There it was, engraved, for all the world to see.

Martha had thought her job with the invitations was finished when she turned the list over to Sally at that first call. But it had been going on ever since. Jimmy kept writing her to look up addresses in his old class books, and then he sent his whole club list and a list of his friends in the service. Alicia came up with a dreadfully long list of Washington friends who were all, she claimed, so fond of Jimmy. And every couple of days her mother would write by air mail to suggest another relative or two. Uncle Timothy. Cousin Mollie. Aunt Marie. To the third and fourth generation. At least. Mother's Tennessee blood was coming out again. This morning it had been Fifth-Cousin-Once-Removed Tillie, whom Martha had forgotten for the reason psychologists talk about: that you don't want to remember. "You mustn't hurt the feelings of any of your kin," mother's letter ended this time.

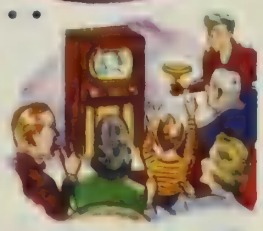
But it wasn't distant kinfolks' feelings Martha was worrying about. It was mother's, so she tacked on poor old Fifth-Cousin Tillie. If she really comes to the wedding, Martha said, I won't.

This morning had been the pay-off, a letter from her next younger sister in Oklahoma City.

"I hate to bother you with this," Emmy wrote, "but do you remember Susanna Turner who used to live across the street

They taste so good...

during the Holiday Season!



No holiday feast is complete without PLANTERS—America's favorite salted nuts. COCKTAIL PEANUTS or MIXED NUTS—they're crisp, fresh—with a flavor only PLANTERS know how to develop.

They taste so good...

when guests drop in!

So good—so tasty and crunchy—PLANTERS PEANUTS are a real compliment to your guests. They know you're offering them something special.

They taste so good...

as an appetizer!

Just watch folks go for these fine, selected Virginia peanuts, when you serve them as an appetizer. They're tops for flavor.

They taste so good...

when you're tired and hungry!

For a quick pick-up you need PLANTERS SALTED PEANUTS! No one else can roast and salt peanuts like PLANTERS.

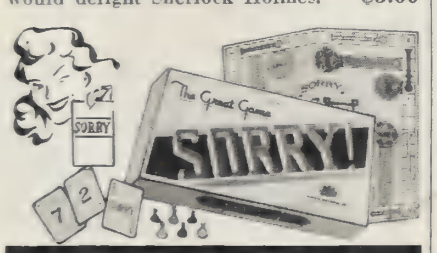
PLANTERS' genius lies in bringing out the rich, distinctive flavor of every nut they roast. Try PLANTERS CASHEWS, ALMONDS, MIXED NUTS!

MR. PEANUT ®

Three big factories at Suffolk, Virginia, San Francisco, California and Toronto, Canada—Shipping warehouses in all major trading areas throughout the country.

PLANTERS IS THE WORD FOR PEANUTS

FAMOUS PARKER GAMES



MONOPOLY

Most popular of the great board games. A world wide favorite. Set. No. 6 at $3.00; Set No. 8. Popular Edition, always bound in pebbled green $4.00; Famous White Box set with Grand Hotels, convenient removable Bank Tray, etc. $5.00.

CLUE
UNIQUE DETECTIVE GAME

A New Best Seller. Exciting and of intense interest throughout. A game that would delight Sherlock Holmes. $3.00

SORRY

An immensely popular Board game, unlike any other, with original moves and thrilling situations. Don't count on victory until the last play. SORRY is full of surprises! $2.50

MAKE-A-MILLION

A wonderful game. Quick climaxes and exciting play from beginning to end. Thousands of players consider MAKE-A-MILLION the most thrilling of card games. Easily learned. $1.00

ROOK—America's [illegible] card game $1.00
CAMELOT—A far better game than Checkers. Entirely [illegible] $1.50;
Pictorial board [illegible] $2.00.
CAM is a new quick-playing form of the famous game Camelot. $1.50
FLINCH—The grand old game. With [illegible] cards $1.50
HEX—The Zig Zag game of [illegible] $2.00
TREASURE TRAIL GAME—Great fun! A delightful new game for children $1.50

AT ALL DEALERS or by mail from Salem

PARKER BROTHERS INC.
SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK • CHICAGO • LONDON

when we were little? She's still in Franklin. She married that Fred Haunton on Church Street, and Auntie Gibbs wrote me that Alicia didn't send Susanna an invitation to Patricia's wedding last year and she was terribly miffed and went around telling everybody we were all very snooty. Maybe you'd like to send her one this time and calm her down."

Martha drew the line at Susanna Turner. All she could remember of her was that she had adenoids and was older and used to gang up with Alicia against the rest of them. Her list was already so long she was embarrassed. Even though people couldn't go, when you lived in a small place like Riverside you had to invite everyone, and the Evanses were paying for these hundreds of engraved invitations in double vellum envelopes. "No matter how careful you are," Sally had gibed that first evening in Baltimore, "you always forget your richest aunt." And like a nitwit Martha had chimed right back, "Except that Jim hasn't got any really rich aunt." She still remembered Thomasina's look. Martha was glad the lists were officially closed tomorrow.

It was that night that Jim—up to now a complete bystander—asked if the Drapers had been sent an invitation.

"Drapers? I don't think so. Who are they?" asked Martha. "Don't touch that door. It's fresh paint."

"Al Draper is president of Best Crop Canning Company, that's all," Jim said. "Of course you know them. The Brewsters had that big party for them last month. I told you then to invite them."

"Oh, you mean that company that's building the big factory here? Of course I didn't ask them. They haven't moved in yet. They wouldn't want to come."

"They do, though. They're in Washington a lot and they like their daughters to get around. Al saw the announcements in the Washington papers and said he hoped to see us at the wedding."

"Why, they never even saw Jimmy," Martha protested.

"Evidently they want to. I'm afraid you have to do it, Martha."

"Well, if you say so. But is this a wedding or is it a cocktail party? I only hope Sally's got another invitation. She said last time she was about down to bedrock. And I want to save mine for posterity."

She got up and put in a final long-distance call to Sally.

Now it was June fifteenth, the day Jimmy was coming home. He had gone directly from law school to the Evanses, and on the twenty-eighth he was going back for the pre-wedding festivities, but meanwhile he would be home. For that brief while the three of them would be together, and afterward he would no longer be the boy in this house. He would be the head of his own.

But he'll be here sometimes, Martha told herself nights after Jim was asleep. The more I can make Betsy love us, the oftener they'll come.

"Hi, mom," Jimmy greeted her, tumbling out of the car in an avalanche of textbooks, suitcases and sports impedimenta just as he always did when he got home for vacation. "Hi there! Betts said to tell you she wanted to come up for a few days, but her mother said absolutely nothing doing."

MARTHA and Jimmy were cleaning his room, the one room that hadn't been renovated. Jimmy had long ago decreed that nothing was ever to be disturbed there, and the edict had been religiously obeyed. That room was his castle, and in it he was absolute monarch. Only once in all the years had Martha rebelled, and that was when she found the catbird living there.

She had come in to clean and found Jimmy poking worms down its beak.

"You said I could have anything I wanted in my room," he had argued when she said he must open the windows and let the bird free.

"I meant collections like butterflies and bugs and birds' nests. Or even live turtles and fish that live in aquariums. But not a bird out of a cage. A bird is too—too messy. And anyway, it will hurt itself against the walls." . . .

"I suppose I ought to burn all this junk," said Jimmy. "I started to, on one of my leaves, but you wouldn't let me."

Martha pushed that memory back. "I used to come in here, when I thought I couldn't bear the war another minute, and dust all your treasures. I made it a sign that you would come back to them."

Jimmy patted her shoulder cheerfully. "Too bad to blitz them after that, but the time's come. And the first thing to go is that sweater." He gave a fiendish imitation of a bursting bomb and attacked the old red sweater tacked spread-eagle fashion between two windows. It was faded and holey.

"It'll leave an awful place on the wall," said Martha. She looked at the heap of tattered wool regretfully. "Will I ever forget the fuss you made about that sweater!"

"You were too easy on me. I'm going to discipline my children better," said Jimmy solemnly. "Except when it comes to—well, sweaters and birds."

How many years had the little old sweater hung there? He couldn't have been more

Winter Afternoon

By Elizabeth Coatsworth

Out into the cold and the north wind
Facing the blue of the sky and the white snow
The only sound the crunch of our snowshoes or a pine top singing
That old song, sighing and slow,

We had all time to ourselves and all space,
We had as much happiness as our hearts had room to hold,
We had the sun, too, waiting in its place,
And the clear equanimity of the cold.

than ten when she tossed it on the bundle of outgrown clothes for the fresh-air camp. He had come back from school and missed it at once.

"Where's my old red sweater?" he shouted. "I can't find my red sweater."

"Why, I sent it with some other things to the newsboys' camp," Martha answered, never dreaming the storm she was unleashing.

Jimmy had let out a savage howl. "That was my special good-luck sweater. It was mine. You had no right to give it to anybody else," he roared.

"But it's too little for you and all raggedy. I was almost ashamed to send it, but it was still warm."

Jimmy, usually so generous, continued to protest. "That's my lucky sweater. It's the one I won the track meet in. I was first boy up Mount Monadnock in it at camp. And I always beat dad fishing when I wear it."

The collection committee had been very decent. "I've got an old camel's-hair coat," the chairman said, "that might as well have belonged to Mrs. Noah, but I'd shoot anybody that sent it to the Goodwill."

"There," Jimmy had said as he tacked the sweater to the wall, "it's going to stay right where I can look at it, and wish on it."

"It will stay there till you take it down yourself," Martha had responded. . . .

Beside the sweater hung something Martha knew would never be thrown away: the narrow thong of leather that had been Bruce's collar.

Bruce had been Jimmy's dog. There had been others before and after him, but Brucie was his once-in-a-lifetime dog. No other had slept with him, insinuating himself under the puff on cold nights; coasted with him bolt upright on the sled; sailed with him, eagerly assisting with the tiller; and fished with him—the better fisherman of the two if it was stream fishing, for Brucie's snap was unerring. Brucie had whiled away the tedium of Jimmy's childhood ailments and pensively shared his young-boy dreams. He was only five when Brucie came, a fuzzy yellow collie pup, and they had grown together until Jimmy was a long-legged schoolboy and Brucie a dignified white-ruffed old gentleman. He had been waiting to meet Jimmy at the bus when the car hit him.

Jimmy had hung the collar there and Martha knew that would always be its place. . . .

"The hot breads go next," Jimmy said.

"The oldest hot breads in existence," Martha laughed. "But crumbling at last. I sort of hate to see them go, though. They're harmless. Not moth traps like the sweater."

HE had brought them home from prep school when he graduated. Actually they were just a couple of ordinary muffins, but to the ravenous schoolboys they had meant the Sunday-breakfast treat.

"What are you going to do with those?" Martha had cried when she saw them wedged among his socks in a drawer of the wardrobe trunk.

"I'm going to keep them," he'd answered, as if they were the most natural keepsakes in the world.

"But you can't. They'll hatch ants or something."

"No, they won't," Jimmy answered, as nonchalantly as before, "because I'm going to lacquer them."

So all through his college years, his years in the service and at law school, the two muffins had adorned his desk. . . .

Above the desk, suspended by wires from the ceiling, hung the blue-and-silver airplane. Jimmy had made it the spring he was home from school recuperating from scarlet fever. He stood, the shrunken hot breads poised over the wastebasket, gazing admiringly at it.

"Pretty good job for a kid, wasn't it?" he said.

Jimmy had always loved to work with his hands. His room was evidence of that. He had graduated from one hobby to another until there was no more place for his output, so then he had built the long shelves across one wall and they, too, had slowly filled with carvings and inlay work, with model planes, trains and sailing ships. One entire shelf was occupied by marching wooden toys. "Jimmy Bartlett's Toy Town" he had called the basement workshop where he spent so many hours. Odd that he'd chosen the law instead of some kind of mechanics.

Martha looked at the shelves admiringly. "Let's keep everything there, except perhaps ——"

Jimmy laughed. "I know. The soap carvings. The only thing in the house you can't scrub. Whew, you're right. They are dirty." He wasted not a backward glance as they joined the hot breads. "How about the closet?" He climbed up on the folding step-ladder because, six-feet-four as he was, he couldn't quite see the back of its top shelves.

From the highest one he pulled forth a small hat, a cocky, dusty little hat with "Bunker Hill" in tarnished gilt letters across the peaked crown. He stuck it on his head and sat on the ladder grinning at Martha.

"Remember it?" he asked.

Remember? Although she had long since forgotten the little souvenir hat, she would never forget the fun they'd had on that sight-seeing trip through New England.

"Chuck it in the basket," Jimmy said, tossing it to her. "Say, what's this?" He was fingering a test tube of cloudy liquid in which floated what looked like a disintegrating human finger.

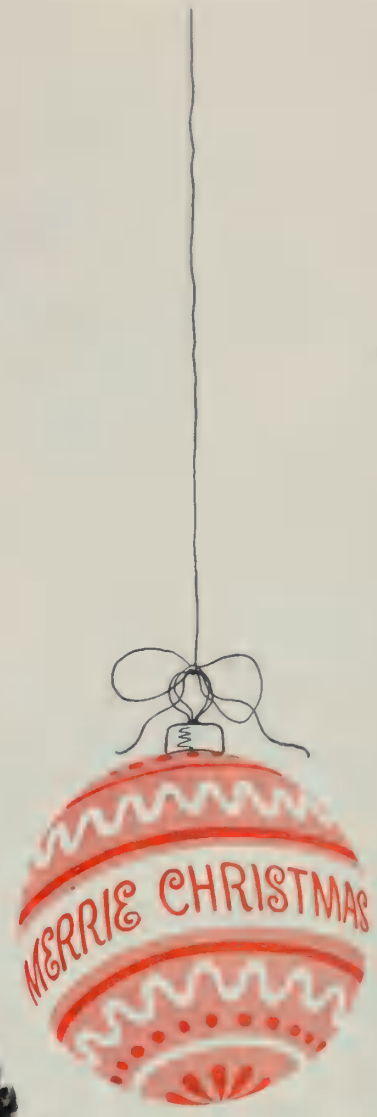
"Don't you know?" asked Martha.

"My appendix!" shouted Jimmy, clapping it against its original location.

But was it Jimmy's? He had been too miserable to ask for the discarded organ until the day after the operation.

"I'm afraid it's gone by now," Doctor Acker had told Martha.

(Continued on Page 129)



Holiday thrill, everyday pleasure . . . that's what a gift of Reed & Barton sterling promises. Whether you choose dainty Dancing Flowers — newest of all — or any of the other world-famous Reed & Barton patterns, you'll find timeless beauty and flawless craftsmanship in every shining piece.

REED & BARTON

STERLING

MADE BY ONE OF THE WORLD'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS — ESTABLISHED 1824

6-pc. place settings approximately $26.75 to $35, including tax, at leading stores.

Helpful Hostess Hints: For fascinating 52-page booklet, "How To Be A Successful Hostess," send 10c to Box 990 L, Taunton, Mass.

"Right in time for Christmas giving — this darling new Angel Face case!"

Mrs. Anthony Drexel Duke

"I know that every 'Angel Face' girl on my Christmas list will love her new Mirror Case—because I'm so delighted with mine! It's the most useful bit of prettiness I've ever owned!"

NEW! Angel Face by POND'S "MIRROR CASE"

Now, in a beautiful new case for your handbag — the make-up that's foundation and powder in one!

Give the gift you'd love to get! Wonderful, wonderful Pond's Angel Face—a soft tinted blend of foundation and powder in one—now in a sweet new "Mirror Case"! A darling to carry—Angel Face "Mirror Case" is slim, sleek as polished ivory with golden tracery. A darling to use—Angel Face smooths on like sheer velvet, clings much longer than powder—can't spill! Complete with its own full-view mirror and satiny puff, Angel Face "Mirror Case" is the perfect "take it with you" gift of glamour. Every "she" on your list will adore it!

only $1 PLUS TAX

In the sweet blue and gold box too now in two sizes—89¢, 59¢ plus tax

(Continued from Page 126)

"Then get another. Surely they'll snatch other out today. Please," she begged. "If u had had the first operation in a gang of ys, you'd want something to prove it to em, wouldn't you?"

Doctor Acker had produced the bottled pendix.

"My first business venture," Jimmy mused, aking the little vial back and forth. A ckel for a look, he'd charged, a dime to ld the bottle. From Jimmy's point of view, not his father's, the operation had been a ancial success.

"That had better go in the garbage, not e trash," Martha said, taking it from him ngerly, but Jimmy wasn't listening.

"My bugle!" he cheered, grabbing it from e shelf. "You can't get 'em up, you can't t 'em up, you can't get 'em up in the morn-g."

He sat on the side of the bed practic-g the old calls on the bugle he'd bought at first summer at camp. He had prac-ed it, and spit-and-polished it daily for o years until it was succeeded by the arinet and the Benny Goodman craze.

"Remember our Boy Scout bugle corps?" mmy asked, pausing for breath.

"Yes," Martha said.

She was not likely to forget the martial otes they'd practiced so eagerly off-key in e garage, nor what those same calls had one to her when they were played in earnest e day the Princeton R.O.T.C. marched up r their commissions. The day she knew mmy was going to war. It had seemed the d of her world. It was cky she hadn't been able see his next jump to the rrible Pacific-island ghting. There were no ementos of those years this room except the nny head he'd carved om a coconut husk. . . .

Finally they finished. he room was strangely are and neat. Jimmy ven wiped down the alls with the wall brush and waxed the oor.

"Bertha Foley will do that Thursday," lartha protested, and Jimmy replied:

"Oh, I want to finish it up myself. It won't ake long and it's always fun to do things ith you."

As they carried the trash baskets down-airs together, Martha treasured the care-ss words. Soon, of course, he'd have a gay oung wife it was always "fun to be with," ut still he'd said it.

Into the maw of the incinerator went the roken games and puzzles, the scraps of arving woods, the Bunker Hill hat, the red weater, the varnished hot breads. The ames licked them all impartially.

"It's like a funeral. One of those Indian uttee things," Martha said mournfully.

Jimmy put his arm around her. "Only it's a edding instead," he said. "So smile, chum, mile."

The full moon shone on Martha through he open windows, but that wasn't what had vaked her. It was a sudden vision of empty ews, miles of them stretching back the ength of the church, the whole right side a owling wilderness while the left, the Evans ide, was packed with handsomely appareled uests.

ONLY this morning she'd had a letter from Emmy, her Oklahoma sister who had mar-ied a rancher and had a procession of daugh-ers each prettier than the others. Emmy aid they were all heartbroken, but they ouldn't make the wedding. They had hoped o drive, making a family trip of it—the three oungest girls had never been East—but hey'd decided they really couldn't afford it. Nobody's ever told the colleges it's cheaper y the dozen," Emmy ended.

Martha had been disappointed, but it had aken her subconscious mind to register the wo empty pews where that big, good-look-ng family should be. And her third sister, Polly, had reneged too. She and Blair and the little girls would be in Maine for the summer by then. It was too long a drive to Baltimore for a week end, too expensive for four of them to fly. Martha tossed restlessly.

"Go sleep," Jim grumbled thickly. "Wha's matter?"

"Plenty of matter," Martha mourned. "There aren't going to be enough people on our side of the church."

"Now I've heard everything," Jim said, jolted awake. "What do I do about that? Hire a claque?"

BUT long after Jim was whiffling placidly again, Martha lay calculating. First and worst, Jim wouldn't be in the front pew with her. Of course it was lovely, Jimmy asking his father to be best man. It had touched Jim deeply. "Nicest compliment I've had since you said you'd marry me," he'd told her. Still it would be a blow to be sitting through Jimmy's wedding without Jim beside her. She'd thought she'd ask Alicia and Tom as well as her mother to sit in the pew with her, so there'd be a male representative anyway, but now she'd better put them with Patricia and that snappy new son-in-law in the pew behind. It would make a handsome splash. Martha giggled a little in spite of her worry.

Ethel and Tom Barker were driving down from Riverside, of course, and bringing two other couples from the bridge club. They could be spread over two more pews. July was a terrible time for a wedding, so many people away for the summer. And a holiday week end on top of that.

Of course the Evanses needed the space. Sally was already worrying because acceptances were pouring in, but that made Martha all the more determined that the Bartletts would make a decent showing.

People will think we haven't any friends. That we're nobodies, she told the night watches.

For the first time she regretted that Jim had, practically speaking, no family. "I come of a long line of only sons," was one of his boasts, and it was almost literally true. His father had died when Jim was a baby, his mother shortly after his marriage. There were distant cousins in California, that was about all. Martha, being Southern-bred, had so many relatives she had been just as glad not to take on a new supply. Now, suddenly, she wished for pews full of Bartletts.

The Drapers, of course. Well, since they were so anxious to come and she needed them to fill space, give them a front pew too. Wasn't there anybody else at all?

"What do you want me to do? Hire a claque?" Jim had said.

And why not? If she just wrote Emmy and Polly how much it meant to her to have them with her for the wedding, if she enclosed their airline tickets as if it were the most natural thing in the world, and put them up at a hotel in Baltimore, they'd come like a shot. You could tell they were all really dying to.

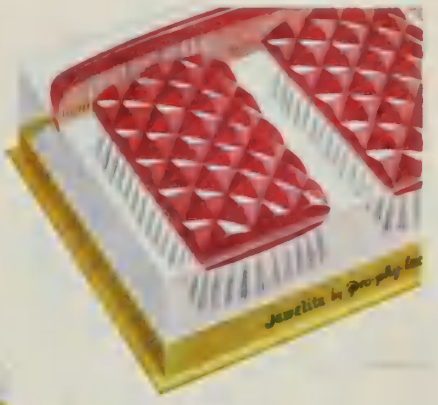
That would fill one-two-three-four-five-six-seven pews at least. And with some ushers' families—and couldn't Bob and Ellen Saunders sit on their side, too, even though Ellen was Betsy's cousin? After all, she'd introduced them, and Bob was an usher. Eight-nine-ten-eleven ——

Martha drifted off peacefully.

"What was biting you last night?" Jim asked at breakfast. "This wedding is getting you down. I don't see why. You haven't anything to do with it. Suppose Jimmy had been a girl?"

"It would have cost you a lot of money, for one thing," Martha answered pertly. "Speaking of which, do you remember the little fur cape you offered to give me for my birthday?"

"Sure," said Jim. "Want it? You look so pretty these days I want to dress you up."



"Would you just as soon give me the check instead?"

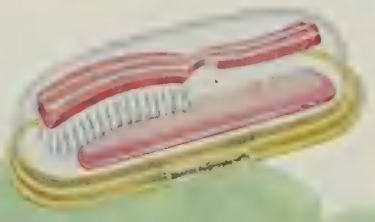
There is in every true woman's heart a spark of heavenly fire, which lies dormant in the broad daylight of prosperity; but which kindles up, and beams and blazes in the dark hour of adversity.

—WASHINGTON IRVING.

For The Top Man

on your totem pole! Distinctive military set in diamond-back pattern. Garnet or Crystal. $7.50

For Your Best Girl Friend



3-piece dresser set in Ruby, Sapphire or Crystal. $5.00

Other sets available, up to $12.50

For Mom

famous Roll-Wave Brush and Comb. Ruby, Sapphire or Crystal. $4.50

A Junior Roll-Wave Set costs $2.50

I'm dreaming up a Jewelite Christmas!

Jewelite gifts for Tom, Dad and Harry . . . for Mom, Sue and Mary! Gay as a Christmas tree! Lavishly gift-packaged. Get Jewelite at your favorite toilet goods counter. Pro-phy-lac-tic Brush Co., Florence, Mass.

For Sue—Bonnie Kit in Scotch-plaid, zippered case. Sapphire, Ruby or Crystal. Wee price $1.50

For Baby—bless her little head! Dainty Brush and Comb in Pink, Blue or Crystal. $2.50

For Aunt Mary—and last-minute gifts! Brush and Comb in Ruby, Sapphire or Crystal. $2.00

Jewelite is also available in Canada at slightly different prices.

only

PERMA·LIFT

Bras give you

"The Lift that never lets you down"

Look for the Magic Inset

Because you love to look lovely, you must wear a "Perma-lift"* Bra. Delicately designed to assure the fashion favored curves you crave, it magically, lastingly supports your breasts from below. Wash it, wear it—the Magic Insets lift you always. Select the style just made for you at your favorite corset department. Priced so low you can have several—$1.50 to $5.

For cocktail lounge elegance, wear a "Perma-lift" Magic Inset Girdle. No Boning. Allows Ease of Sitting. Up With-out Stays.

* Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

"I guess so," said Jim without much enthusiasm. "Why?"

"Pew rent," said Martha.

Martha and Jimmy were driving in to the city together. He had asked her to come with him to choose the wedding ring and she was as set up as his father had been when he was asked to be best man.

"The ushers' presents, too," he said. "And after that a great big lunch at a hotel to celebrate."

Martha's mind purred with the motor. Everything was ready. All she had to do now was relax and enjoy these last few days without a single chore or obligation. She smiled as she thought of her dress, a deep rosy coral so becoming that when she tried it on to show Jimmy he'd kissed her and said, "You look like a bridesmaid, not a mother." It was even prettier than the green one the shop had so obligingly credited. She had bought a heavenly blue dinner dress in its place—at a slightly higher price, of course.

"Mom!"

Martha came out of her happy dream. "H'm? What is it, Jimmy?"

"Remember how I kicked against dancing school and finally crawled back and begged for lessons?"

"It turned out all right," Martha said. "You're a wonderful dancer. What made you think of it?"

"That. You've got rhythm and you love it, but your dancing is way out of date. You—excuse it, please—you bounce."

Martha sat up straight. "Why, you great big tall somebody, I'm the best dancer in our crowd."

"Exactly. But the new dancing is smooth. You can learn easy or I wouldn't bring it up. You're getting modern, mom. Go all the way!"

He was joking, but he was in earnest too. Martha gulped. This was putting the shoe on the other foot with a vengeance.

"Are you seriously suggesting I take some learn-dancing-in-a-hurry private lessons?"

"Just for your own fun. We're going down almost a week before the wedding. There'll be parties or dancing nearly every night. You know Baltimore. And you want to be tops—in your class, of course," he added, looking impudently at her.

I feel a perfect fool, Martha thought. But the girl at the desk was matter-of-fact. Middle-aged women being brought up to date were apparently as common as teen-agers to her.

"Let's see," the girl said. "I'll give you our Mr. Taylor. He's a good height for you. You'll like him."

Does she think I want a gigolo? Martha thought, picturing a dapper Johnny with a waxed mustache. What difference does it make whether I like him or not?

"How about our complete course of lessons?" the girl said, pushing the blanks toward Martha. But this was too much.

"That is not necessary. I was dancing before you were born. All I want is someone to take the bounce out of me before my son's wedding."

"Oh," said the girl.

Why, he's just a boy. About Jimmy's age, Martha thought when she saw Our Mr. Taylor. But he's more like Wump.

At the thought all the "I-feel-a-fool" stiffness left her and she concentrated on the lesson. She began to like it, to be interested.

"You're a natural dancer," Mr. Taylor told her, starting the machine again.

There. Just what she'd told Jimmy. So what was she here for?

"But you bounce."

Martha's swelling ego burst. In her ire she took a sudden step.

"Like that," said Our Mr. Taylor. "That is very Nineteen-twenty. You must glide instead. Let me show you."

Around and around and around. The backs of Martha's legs began to pull. She glanced surreptitiously at her watch. Only half an hour.

"That's better," said Mr. Taylor kindly. "I am sure you will get it quickly."

Around and around and around. The ache traveled up her legs to her lumbar region.

"That's it," said Mr. Taylor the next day. "You're coming on wonderfully." He nipped Martha's answering smile in the bud. "But you still hop. Remember. Never up and down. Just glide. Glide. Gli-ide."

There went the backs of her legs again.

"Now," said Mr. Taylor, "I think we're ready for some dips."

But they weren't what Martha meant by dips. Not gay-twenties tango dips. They were one smooth motion. Back—glide—close—forward—dip! She lost her balance. Mr. Taylor held her up.

"Now, now," he soothed. "Not so fast. Easy does it."

She danced and tried not to bounce. She dipped and tried not to fall on her face. She thought of the good old days when you danced and didn't think about it. The ache had hit her lumbar region again.

Around and around—glide—forward—dip. At last she could do it. She caught the rhythm of it. She could dip without staggering, smooth as silk. It felt wonderful.

"Wonderful," echoed Mr. Taylor. "Perhaps you and your husband will be interested in joining our older-group rumba and samba classes next winter."

It was their last night home and Martha was packing. They were starting at six in the morning, Martha and Jim in their car and Jimmy in the convertible which sparkled in its new wax job, ready for the wedding journey.

"About a ten-hour trip," Jimmy pronounced. "Maybe more, the way you two drive."

Half of ten is five, Martha thought. Five hours alone with Jimmy before she turned him over to Betsy forever. The prewedding week would be full of chatter but no real talk, and she would have liked to drive the whole way with her son. But she knew that, although he himself had suggested it, that would hurt Jim's feelings. "I'll go half and half," she said.

It was nearly midnight, but she was still packing in the new guest room where her wedding finery had been assembling all this time.

"Stop pottering," Jim called, "and come to bed."

"Pretty soon, dear," she soothed.

But she knew, looking about, that it wouldn't be soon. How wonderful to be efficient like Jim. Still, he had only his own clothes, few and easily folded. No tissue paper and pleats. No hat-shoe-belt-handbag combinations to fit together. No refrigerator to defrost, notes to milkman, egg man, paper boy. And there was that dressing gown to go back for credit. They hadn't called for it yet. What would happen with the house closed? Would she have time to drop it at Ethel's in the morning?

"Mom!" It was a low, desperate call.

Martha flew. Jimmy's bags and the old officer's kit were neatly closed and strapped. Only the new attaché case she had given him for Christmas stood open, awaiting the toilet articles ranged on the scarred old bureau. What could be wrong?

"I've lost the ring," Jimmy said hoarsely.

"Now, now," said Martha in the tone she'd used when guppies perished and bunnies escaped.

"But it's gone. Did you take it? I put it right there, I tell you, and it's gone."

"Don't get so excited. Where did you put it?"

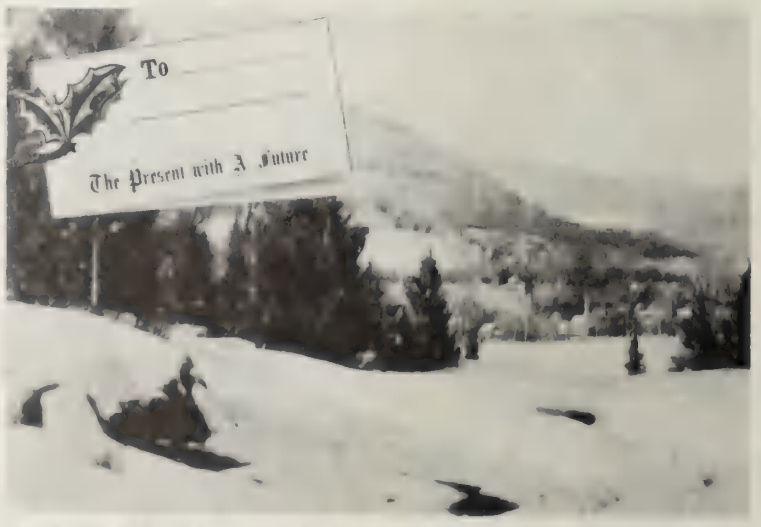
"Why, you remember. We came in the house with it that day and I came right upstairs and put it with the ushers' presents in my top drawer. By the handkerchiefs. I've been through everything. Look!"

The drawer yawned open. It had indeed been thoroughly ransacked. Old scarves, collars and handkerchiefs, not considered worthy of his new life, were tossed in every direction. The lining paper was trampled on the floor. His old studs box was on its side, spewing unmatched cuff links, athletic medals, even some well-worn service ribbons. The six ushers' gift boxes gleamed white in front of the mirror. She recognized them, but there was no beautiful little ring box.

"It's been stolen," announced Jimmy dramatically.

Martha's heart yearned toward him. His hair stood up wildly in every direction, his hands were icy. Last-minute jitters, bless his heart.

"Of course it's not stolen," she said, very matter-of-fact. "It's right here. Perhaps you packed it with your things."



"No. It's gone," said Jimmy, collapsing in the old Morris chair and putting his hands to his forehead.

That's the way you clutch your brow, Martha registered. I always wondered. Aloud she said, "Just sit there a minute. A fresh eye is always best at finding things."

She opened the first bag and began to unpack the new monogrammed pajamas, the carefully ironed white shirts. It would be Betsy's job after this to sew on the buttons and call the tailor, to turn the jacket pockets inside out to whisk-broom the tobacco crumbs, and to moth-spray the camel's-hair sweater. Never mind all that. Where was the ring?

"If the worst comes to the worst," she said to divert him, "you can buy another it

(Continued on Page 132)

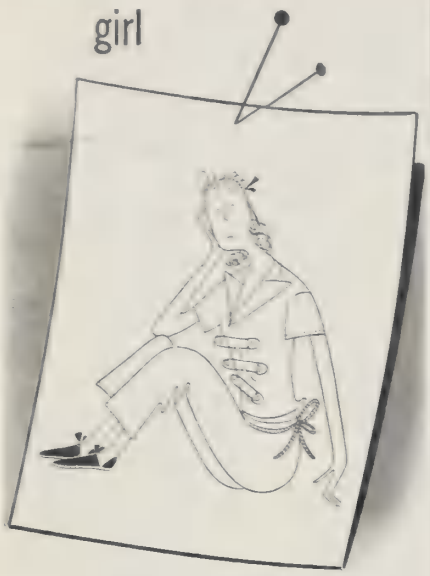
Tucked inside this colorful, Christmasy folder, available at banks and post offices, a United States Savings Bond makes a present as lavish as you please—and one which is more valuable every year.

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS
H. M. QUEEN

YARDLEY, LONDON

There's a joyous bit of London

. . . in lovely Yardley perfumes. Wear "Bond Street" for its sophisticated air, the poise and graciousness it gives you. Choose "Lotus" because it is so colorful, to match your gayest mood. Delight in the one that most becomes you. Venture to use it in new ways . . . in front as well as behind your ears, on your throat, on the palm of your hand . . . make it an accessory to your charms. And for your everyday, all-day pleasure, use lilting, lighter versions of "Bond Street" or "Lotus" . . . in Toilet Water and Dusting Powder.



YARDLEY

"Bond Street" Perfume, $2.50 to $15;
Toilet Water, $1.65 to $2.75; Dusting Powder, $1.65.

"Lotus" Perfume, $3 to $17.50;
Cologne, $1.50 and $2.50; Dusting Powder, $1.65. (Prices plus tax)

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U. S. A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C.

don't be a PINNED-UP girl treat yourself to...

Lady Berkleigh

PAJAMAS

A men s shirt maker double-needle stitched the seams, and SANFORIZED the quality broadcloth. These pajamas will take rough washing machine wear and come back crisp and fresh looking. Pastel shades. Sizes 32 to 40.

About $3.98

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Tailored to a man's Taste.

FREE
LADY BERKLEIGH
"Please Do Not Disturb Card"

Lady Berkleigh • 1107 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.
Tailored by Makers of Men's Shirts and Pajamas for Over 75 Years

(Continued from Page 130)

Baltimore!" but the idea only elicited another groan.

"It wouldn't be marked. Betts wanted it marked with the initials and 'Whom God Hath Joined Together.' It took days."

"There. There," said Martha, feeling in the corners of the next bag. She couldn't bear to take out all those clothes. What had he done with it? Hidden it from himself, of course, because it was so precious. Hidden his treasure—why, of course! She walked to the long shelves across the opposite wall and crouched down to where he had so cleverly fitted them against the baseboard with a secret cubbyhole. She pressed the lock and drew out the little box.

"How could I forget?" cried Jimmy, his long form leaping across to her in one surge. "I've taken leave of my senses."

Martha reached up and patted his cheek. "Oh, no, you haven't," she said. "Your senses have taken leave of you temporarily. They're out in the great blue yonder. I mailed my pocketbook to your father just before we were married."

"You what!"

"My purse. One of those flat envelope jobs. I was in Nashville doing my last shopping. I was a block away from the mailbox before I realized I had the letter under my arm instead of my pocketbook."

Jim roared. "Did you hitchhike home?"

She was repacking, tucking the new lisle socks into the toes of his patent-leather dancing pumps. "No. Nobody had heard of girls' hitchhiking in those days, and the Lord looks out for fools, they say. I rushed back and there was the postman collecting the mail. But would he give me my purse? Not even when I described everything in it. I had to march to the post office with him and identify it."

"Then what?" Jimmy was fondling the little white velvet box, putting it into and taking it out of his dressing-gown pocket. She'd better remember that, considering the state he was in.

"Why, the postmaster just laughed and handed it back to me. 'You must be in love,' he said. And Jimmy, dear, I still am. I hope you can make Betsy as happy."

"Thank you, mother," Jimmy said, and when he called her that it meant he was solemn and moved. "What would I do without you?"

But he was going to do without her. Even when he was home, he and Betsy would be in the guest room. She would hear them talking and laughing together with the doors shut instead of calling back and forth along the hall as she and the two Jims had always done.

Why, you're jealous, Martha told herself angrily, back again packing her own suitcases. She blew her nose on one of her best embroidered handkerchiefs that she'd been saving for the trip and flung it, uncaring, into the laundry hamper. Shame on you. She finished up quickly and tiptoed down the hall to bed. But Jimmy heard her.

"Psst," he said.

She couldn't resist. She went in. "You should be asleep," she said severely. Even in that extra-length bed his feet stuck out over the footboard. She remembered the story they told in that camp in the South where he slept in an upper bunk. His roommate came in a little gay one night and hung his clothes on Jimmy's feet. "Go to sleep," she repeated, touching his forehead lightly. "What! No fever? I'm surprised."

He caught her hand. "Don't you dare cry at the wedding," he said. "Don't you dare be drippy."

"Why, I will, too, if Sally does. One yip out of her and I'll turn on the faucets and flood the place."

"Okay," said Jimmy contentedly. "G'wan to bed, pal."

She went, sliding gently in so as not to wake Jim. But his arms came out instantly to gather her in.

"Jimmy's last night home before he's married."

"Don't you dare be drippy," said Martha briskly.

They were dressing for the dance Ellen Saunders' family were giving in honor of the match she and Bob claimed to have made.

I'd be scared meeting all these new people if I hadn't had those dancing lessons, Martha thought, combing her hair to which Gaston, as promised, had given the wedding set. It sprang obediently back, framing her face, and Martha regarded it complacently. There was nothing like a really good hairdo. She didn't even mind buying hats any more.

Jim was feeling otherwise. He was struggling with his new white dinner jacket. They never "got themselves up," as Jim put it, in Riverside in the summer, and it had been another last-minute struggle and rush to get Jim to buy it.

"Monkey clothes," he said angrily, "with the thermometer at eighty. My collar's tight already."

"It's nothing to my new slippers. But Ah'm suah we both look dee-vine," said Martha in Thomasina's fanciest accent.

"You look smooth," Jimmy said, coming up dutifully for the second dance, and after a turn around the room he added admiringly, "And you are smooth too. Aren't you glad I made you take those lessons?"

"Your father's doing all right without them," Martha smiled, watching Jim pilot Betsy merrily about. Jimmy's eyes followed.

"Isn't she beautiful?" he whispered in awed accents.

Next Martha danced with Arthur Evans. Why, he bounces, she thought, and he tramples too. Between Arthur and the heat and the new brocade slippers, her feet weren't so happy as the rest of her. Somehow they'd never been quite the same since those shopping trips with Alicia.

MONKEY WRENCH

The square wrench was invented by a London blacksmith named Moncke, and in honor of him was called Moncke's wrench, and then spelled euphonically monkey wrench. —DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

She danced with her host, Ellen's father, and they told each other all over again about Jimmy and Betts meeting at Princeton, and about their all sitting together at commencement. It seemed that whereas Martha had not guessed that it would end in wedding bells, Mr. Treadway had foreseen it from the first. They discussed the pros and cons of this for some time. Her feet had become swords piercing her, and Mr. Treadway's prodding patent leathers didn't help.

"Oh, but you were so much cleverer than I," Martha caroled. "And I can't tell you how happy we are about ——"

Wump cut in. Dear old Wump, who would dance her round the floor once—she had just about strength enough left for that—and then lead her to the punch bowl.

But after a few steps Wump said, "Gee, Mrs. Bartlett," and, since she was really with him, he began to evolute. Wump danced as naturally as he breathed, talked all the while as if they were back in the old not-done-over living room in Riverside where she had so often listened to his love lives. "That Thomasina," he crooned. "Where's she been all my life, old Jimmy keeping her dark? Isn't she terrific?"

"H'm. H'm. H'rum," replied Martha. "Absolutely terrific."

"My dream girl I've looked for all these years," gargled Wump, whipping into a turn Martha was sure even Our Mr. Taylor never heard of.

"What, again, Wump?" Martha laughed.

"What d'ye mean again?" asked Wump indignantly. "This is the real for-life stuff. This is my Woman." He mooned across the floor toward Thomasina, in a silver dress indulging in a little jitterbugging with another usher in a corner. "The Woman for Me."

"I believe you're right," said Martha after another look. "She just might be. But listen, Wump, Thomasina's busy for a minute. Could you take me back to the Parnhams' where we're staying? It'll only take a jiffy, their house is right across the golf course, and if anybody else takes me it'll be noticed. I—I forgot something."

Wump's good manners stood him in good stead. He swallowed and said. "Certainly, Mrs. Bartlett. You mean now?"

"Now," said Martha positively.

Wump tore his eyes away from Thomasina. "I'll bring the car around," he said, backing toward the door.

But the Parnhams' house was dark—the Parnhams' Carrie went home nights—and locked. Used to Riverside's easy ways, she'd never thought of that. She looked so stricken that Wump sensed an emergency. In his experience, older people were often dependent on their heart pills. She'd said she didn't want to upset anybody. Nitroglycerin, that was the stuff.

"I'll break in," he said.

"Oh, I don't think ——" Martha hesitated, but he was already galloping around the house, trying the windows.

"The little pantry one's part way open, but it's pretty high up," he reported, panting. "D'you think you could give me a boost? Wouldn't . . . strain your heart or anything, would it?" he asked anxiously.

"Goodness, there's nothing the matter with my heart," said Martha.

Wonderful woman, admired Wump silently. "You better pick up your skirt. The grass is pretty wet. I had to take off my shoes."

"I will too," said Martha enthusiastically. She followed him around the house, stretching her toes and luxuriating in the grassy dampness against her nylons. "Suppose the Parnhams took a notion to come home early?" Martha chuckled, standing on tiptoe on the slanting cellar door and trying to avoid Wump's flailing legs while she hoisted his spanker nearer the window ledge.

The body heaved through the window and the legs followed. There was a thump and Wump reappeared miraculously at the back door.

"You just rest there," he said anxiously. "Can't I get it for you?"

"No, I don't believe you can," said Martha, flying past and up the stairs.

A splash of cold water, talcum powder, fresh stockings and her comfy old mules. Blue, luckily, like so many of Martha's things, and a good enough match under the long, full skirt.

After Jimmy had done his duty by all the bridesmaids, she knew, he would come back and they would have a real dance. Her last dance with her bachelor son.

"Let's make it a good one," she admonished the familiar old slippers as her feet slipped easily into them. "We're old friends, Mules, and I know you aren't the balky kind."

"Feeling better now?" asked Wump solicitously as they drove back to the dance.

"Absolutely okay, thanks to you," said Martha.

Martha pretended not to notice the inward pangs she was suffering about the wedding presents. Not that they weren't beautiful. They were. The trestle tables set up in the Evanses' upstairs sunroom kept on filling with lovely things, but Martha could not join the ohing and ahing so wholeheartedly as she had at first. It seemed to her that the discrepancy between the flood of Evans candlesticks and platters and silver vegetable dishes and the thin trickle of Bartlett offerings was becoming painfully apparent.

She told herself that, of course, the Evanses were surrounded by friends, whereas the Bartlett presents must come from a distance. She told herself not to be so disgusting when she caught herself counting back to particularly nice presents she herself had sent. But the morning she woke up and realized it was only four days to the wedding she couldn't keep it in any longer.

"I wouldn't breathe it to anybody else but you, Jim," she burst out, "but where are our family presents? It's getting embarrassing,

(Continued on Page 135)

·ANN BLYTH AND CRAIG STEVENS IN "KATIE DID IT" A UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL PICTURE

"I'm a Lux Girl"

says ANN BLYTH

Sparkling little Ann Blyth has appeal you can't resist in her newest screen role. Her lovely Lux Complexion is so radiantly fresh in the close-ups!

"Naturally I'm a Lux Girl," says Ann. "Active-lather facials give my skin wonderful, protecting care!"

There's no finer care for delicate skin than these beauty facials screen stars recommend. Use Lux Toilet Soap regularly—discover how truly lovely your complexion can be!

HOLLYWOOD'S ACTIVE-LATHER FACIAL:

Ann Blyth is right when she says a Lux Soap facial gives skin fresh new beauty—so quickly. First smooth the active lather well in . . .

"Such rich abundant lather even in hardest water! Now rinse with plenty of warm water—a quick dash of cold. Skin feels smoother already!

"After you pat your face with a soft towel, look in your mirror. Your skin feels so much smoother now—it's exquisitely fresh, appealing!"

9 out of 10 Screen Stars use Lux Toilet Soap

Magnificent to give...or to get

Wouldn't you love to get this big, beautiful box of Martex towels as a gift...and wouldn't every woman on your Christmas list! You know there's nothing quite like Martex for all-around quality—for soft, absorbent texture, lovely colors, and most important, for the long wear that has made the name Martex famous for generations. Your favorite store has a wide variety of Martex towels for gift giving, priced from around $1 to $3.50. Martex gift boxes from around $2 to $10.

®Martex Towels

THEY DO WEAR LONGER

and Martex brings you the smartest, most glamorous gift boxes of the season...

MARTEX TOWELS—A PRODUCT OF WEST POINT MANUFACTURING COMPANY • WELLINGTON SEARS COMPANY • SELLING AGENTS • 65 WORTH STREET, NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 132)

really it is. Everything from our friends so far has been just—well, you know. Nice, but —— Where is mother's present, even? You know how devoted she is to Jimmy, and coming all the way up to the wedding, at her age. And Alicia? And Ethel? I know Ethel is planning something especially nice and she has such good taste. But where is it?"

"Oh, relax," said Jim, squinting at his yesterday's golf score and jabbing it with the little pencil. He and Arthur had turned out to be evenly matched and thereafter could be counted on for the bare minimum of wedding responsibilities. "It isn't a balance sheet, is it? Nobody notices things like that."

Oh, don't they? thought Martha, remembering a few raised eyebrows yesterday over Aunt Tillie's hand-painted jardiniere.

"Anyway, we've done our bit. Betts is still sending up skyrockets over her chest of silver." He disposed of the subject. "How's for breakfast? Arthur and I are playing at nine-thirty."

Yes, they had certainly displayed the flat silver beautifully and made a terrific fuss over it.

"Thank heaven," Sally'd said frankly when it arrived. "I just knew Arthur and I couldn't afford it on top of the wedding. A dozen of everything and all the serving pieces too. I started with eight place settings and not even a tablespoon over. I never did get things matching right. Betts, I'm going to keep this silver to pay back for all the trouble you've been to me!"

And Betts and Martha and Sally had all laughed and kissed one another and it was great fun. Except it was still the only big present. The chest stood in rather solitary state. Maybe mother was sending a check after all. She'd said she might. She was getting too old to shop. It would be nice, of course, but you couldn't display it.

You mercenary wretch, Martha upbraided herself.

But at lunch, which was another big party, the entire topic of conversation was the wedding presents.

"I've got writer's cramp and ink spots before the eyes," said the efficient bridesmaid whose duty it was to keep the bride book.

"Betsy is so popular, and so are Cousin Sally and Cousin Arthur," Ellen chimed in.

Martha smiled glassily. Speaking of popular, her dreadful other self sneered, where are your bridge-club members, for instance?

After lunch most of the party adjourned to the Evanses'.

"We've seen them all before," Cornelia Parnham said, "but let's go see what today's haul was."

There was nothing Martha wanted less. "Let's," she said brightly.

"You should have been there, Jim," exulted Martha in the privacy of the Parnhams' guest room. "We walked in the house, all of us, and the hall was stacked, absolutely stacked, with packages. Uncle Remus was prying open the biggest one on the porch, a wooden box with mother's return address on it, and I knew—I absolutely knew—it was Grandmother Alton's silver tea service. The one that was buried in the cemetery to hide from Sherman's march, you know." ("Do I!" ejaculated Jim.) "She had it buffed by a jeweler, and put in apple-pie order. That's why it was so late coming. You ought to see it."

"I did," said Jim. "Very pretty."

"Everyone was hysterical about it, and Thomasina actually said, 'Gosh, that's really something.'"

"I hope Betsy liked it, too," observed Jim mildly.

"Liked it! Why, she cleared everything off to put it right in the middle of the long table opposite the chest of silver. Though what Alicia's going to say—she raised heaven and earth to get mother to give it to Patricia last year, but mother said it would only get all the daughters and granddaughters fighting. So, since Jimmy's the only grandson ——" Martha preened herself and Jim started to be funny, but decided against it. This was obviously Martha's Big Moment. "Alicia must feel all right about it, though, or mother must have made it up to her somehow the way she always does, because the very next package was a wonderful old Sheffield tray, just right to go under it."

"Under the what? The only grandson? Or under the bed?"

"Jim! The tea service, of course. And as if that wasn't enough, next came the most be-yew-tiful Spode from the bridge club. They'd got together on it and that's why we hadn't had anything from them before."

"What's a spode?" asked Jim. "Sounds like a trick dog."

"Why, English china, of course. The pattern is that ——"

"Spare me," said Jim. "The main thing is can they eat off it?"

"Not every day, if they have any sense. This is company china if you ever saw it. And then—imagine such a landslide from Riverside the same day—there was a complete set of glasses from goblets to those little liqueur glasses from your poker club. All monogrammed, which is why they were late too."

"Hey!" said Jim, beaming. "The boys kicked through in a big way, did they? Well. Well. Funny, though, the poker club usually sends highball glasses with those ——"

"I know. Hunting dogs with dead birds hanging out their mouths. Revolting. Thank heaven Ethel got hold of Stewart."

"Ethel!" shouted Jim. "What's she got to do with the poker club?"

"My"—Martha's eyes shone—"I'm glad we live in a nice small town where people sort of get together about things, aren't you?"

"You mean about important things like Jimmy Bartlett's wedding," said Jim, coming over to kiss her. "I'm glad you're so set up. You look pretty as a peach. Well, time to climb into our glad rags again. One more dinner party before the wedding. No wonder Arthur Evans doesn't play better golf, if he keeps up this pace. Let's get home early."

It wasn't very early. A few people drifted back to the Evanses' and Martha suggested they go upstairs to see the presents.

And now it was the day. The day of her son's wedding.

Martha went to the window and raised the shade. Sunlight streamed in. "Blessed is the bride the sun shines on." She hoped sunshine blessed the groom too.

"They're going to have a beautiful day," she called.

Jim opened an eye and squinted at the sky. "Thunderstorm by night, I'd say."

"I wouldn't," said Martha, "even if I thought so. And there's not a cloud in the sky."

"Weather breeder," Jim said. He caught sight of her face and amended hastily, "Late tonight, maybe. All I meant was we're due for rain."

Martha was still lingering at the window. She was wishing Jimmy had been put here at the Parnhams' with them instead of at the Catletts' with the ushers. He'd have been in their room right this minute, joking and horsing around to cover his feelings. He'd always been a great boy to come in for an early-morning gabfest, probably a hang-over from childhood, babyhood even, when he'd rattle the doorknob and stand there in his sleepers and announce "Here's Jimmy." She could see him now.

"What are you looking at?" Jim demanded, opening both eyes this time.

She didn't tell him. "I don't know what Sally will do if it rains," she said. "She's counting so on being able to use the lawn." Her voice, to her own utter astonishment, quavered.

"Why, Martha," said Jim, "you come right here."

Martha burst into tears and threw herself beside him. "It's because—I'm so ha-appy. And Betsy's such a lo-ovely girl—and we're so lu-ucky ——"

Jim thumped her back rhythmically between phrases. "There, there," he said. "There. There." And pretty soon Martha stopped. She sat up and blew her nose.

"There," she said, "that's out of my system. You said there'd be a shower before night and we've had it. Hurry up and shave. I want to get over to Sally's early and see if I can help."

"Then I'll drop you there and go on over to the Catletts' to see if Jimmy needs anything. Wedding isn't till four-thirty, but I suppose there's no golf this morning."

Sally was running around distractedly. "Like a chicken with its head off," Martha's mother would have called it.

"Are you sure we haven't forgotten anything?" she kept asking. "Everything is so done. We must have forgotten something important."

"Nothing is important except Jimmy and me—and maybe the minister," said Betsy calmly. "Here, drink your coffee, mother."

Gifts were still arriving, but there was not time to open them now. They were just things to be shuffled upstairs and hidden under the damask-hung trestle tables. Martha, carrying up a load, peeked in the bride book with satisfaction. The Bartlett side was still going strong.

It was going strong in actual arrivals too. Sally's friends had taken them all in so hospitably. They wouldn't listen to anybody's staying at the hotel in town, and had put the pretty young Oklahomans where there were young people, and the children from Maine in a house where there were the young fry. Mother, basking in the reflected glory of the Alton tea service, was ensconced in state with old Mrs. Martin and they were having the time of their lives playing canasta and swapping Daughters of the Confederacy stories.

Martha wandered back downstairs and out onto the porch. There didn't seem much she could do. Jim was over at Jimmy's. She wished she could at least have tied Jimmy's tie for his wedding. Oh, well.

There was a screech of brakes in the driveway.

"It's Wump," Martha registered automatically. She walked around to the front door. "Where's Jimmy?" she called. "Where's the groom?"

"At the Catletts', of course," answered Wump, his eye sliding past her to Thomasina, who just happened to be in the hallway clad—if you could call it that—in shorts and halter. "He can't come here. He can't see Betsy before the wedding."

She had forgotten. This was the one place he wouldn't come. "How about the lunch

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Third Birthday

By Polly Toland

The heart of my child has been caught by Christmas,
His small heart trapped in the snare which has sprung
To chain him to Now with his mind on Tomorrow,
His hope and his eyes all tinsel hung.

He asks of the unknown, splendid coming
For toy desires of train and car;
All he knows of Christmas is sweet receiving
Which harvests the season of the Star.

My heart, as well, is in love with Christmas,
But my greatest gift has been given before:
His timely birth in this holy season
Is a lovely echo; I ask no more.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

1

Gentler bleaching action.....

added protection for linens! Restoring a stained blouse to bright new beauty is just one of the many miracles you can perform with Clorox. For besides removing stains from white and colorfast cottons and linens, Clorox whitens and brightens, deodorizes, makes linens sanitary, too. In addition to all this, Clorox conserves fabrics . . . it's free from caustic, extra gentle!

2

Greater disinfecting efficiency...

added protection for health! The same bottle of Clorox that gives added protection to your laundry also gives added protection to family health. For Clorox is one of the safest, most economical and efficient household disinfectants known . . . more efficient than any other product of its kind! Let this miracle germ-killer combat bathroom and kitchen germ centers in your home. Directions on label.

Copr. 1948 Clorox Chemical Co.

CLOROX AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

ONLY Sunbeam AUTOMATIC MIXMASTER gives you all these advantages

Give Sunbeam and you give the finest

AUTOMATIC JUICE EXTRACTOR

The only juicer that automatically jiggles the strainer to shake the juice out of the pulp. Fast. Easy-to-use. Easy-to-clean.

Famous MIX-FINDER DIAL

All the everyday mixing speeds are plainly indicated. Easy-to-see, easy-to-set.

A nylon button on one of the beaters turns bowl automatically, keeping beater-speed and bowl-speed UNIFORM. You never need turn bowl or slow it down by hand.

AUTOMATIC BOWL-SPEED CONTROL

Sunbeam Mixmaster does a perfect mixing job because the bowl revolves automatically, the beaters are in correct relation to the bowl and the mixture goes into and through the beaters for EVEN mixing every time. Your hands are always FREE to add ingredients in correct proportion.

AUTOMATIC BEATER-EJECTOR

Lift the handle—out drop beaters individually, for easy cleaning. No fooling. No messy fingers.

Only the new Sunbeam Mixmaster gives you all the special advantages you want and deserve when you buy a food mixer. So be sure the mixer you get (or the one you receive as a gift) is the original and the ONLY Mixmaster. There's only one by that name. Mixmaster puts that EXTRA deliciousness, EXTRA success into every recipe. Over six million enthusiastic owners are its best advertisements. It is also the mixer for which you can obtain such marvelous attachments as the combination Food Chopper-Meat Grinder, Hi-Speed Drink Mixer, Butter Churn and others. On sale wherever good electric appliances are sold. See your dealer.

POWERFUL MOTOR

Patented governor controlled motor delivers full power at all speeds. Beaters never vary their speed as batter thickens up, whether set low or high, for even mixing.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50
Canada: 321 Weston Road, Toronto 9

Famous for Sunbeam TOASTER, IRONMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, SHAVEMASTER, etc.

party?" she asked. "If he can't come I'd just as soon go over and scramble him an ——"

"Oh," cried Betsy, rushing out followed by the troop of bridesmaids, "he can go because I'm not. Mother and I are going to have a sandwich here so we can dress quietly."

And have a cozy little visit. Lucky Sally. Martha hung back in the hall unnoticed.

"Hurry up, girls," Wump shouted gladly. "The boys are all waiting at the swimming pool. Pile in. Plenty of time for a swim before lunch."

They piled. How often Martha had admired Wump's artful packing of his car, the glamour girl—Thomasina in this case—always snugly against him, the girls with glasses, the girls who were oversize or undercurved always neatly in the back. Martha noticed the efficient bridesmaid wedged in a rear corner.

"You can't come, Betts," Wump said, waving her off elaborately.

"As if I wanted to," said Betsy, going into the house. "You're all too young and crazy for an old married woman."

The bulging carload racketed off down the drive. The caterers and awning men began to push Martha from place to place. She took refuge in the little-used den. Sally appeared in the doorway.

"Can't you think of anything we've forgotten?" she asked, and disappeared.

Martha sat on. She certainly was a V.U.I.P. The wedding lunch was at the Parnhams'. If she'd stayed there she might have been of some help, but she couldn't get there without bothering someone for a car. Where was Jim? Even he had forgotten her.

There was another whir of tires in the driveway, slower this time. Arthur wandered in.

"Hello, Martha," he said listlessly.

"Hello," Martha answered.

They sat a minute. Arthur stirred.

"I feel awful," he said. "How about a mint julep?"

"Goodness," said Martha. "In the morning?"

"Yes. In the morning," said Arthur firmly. "Jim's out servicing Jimmy's car for a quick getaway. He said tell you he'd pick you up in about an hour. Sally and Betts gave me a brush-off. I feel lonesome." He looked it.

"All right," said Martha. Thank goodness somebody needed her.

The Parnhams' buffet lunch was over, but a lot of people still lingered. Laughter floated up to Martha, who had gone to her room to dress. The lingerers were from Washington, and the Eastern Shore, and round about, who'd come to lunch all dressed for the wedding. Alicia had elected to change at the Martins', where mother was staying, to be sure mother did them proud in the lavender-and-old-lace effect Alicia had selected.

"You sure you don't mind my getting into my togs with Jimmy?" Jim had asked. "It's simpler, since you're driving to the church with the Parnhams."

"Heavens," Martha had said stoutly, "I guess I can still dress alone if you can." She had kissed them both and sent them off together. Lots of people said Jimmy looked like her, but she thought the two tall Jims were exactly alike.

"See you at the church," they'd chorused, driving off gaily.

It was an anticlimax, though, dressing in this strange room alone. She pictured the raucous confusion and male shouts at the Catletts' and the soft laughter and whisking fragrance at the Evanses,' with bridesmaids running in and out along the upstairs hall. In lieu of anything better, Martha talked to the coral dress.

"You certainly are a honey," she told it where it lay in chiffon folds across the bed. "And just you wait." She opened the sacred hatbox, took out a wisp of tulle, and laid it confidently beside the dress. She had tried it on often enough to know how fetching it was on her gray curls. She took a leisurely shower and leisurely she dressed. She was just slipping on the dress when there was a knock. Could it be Jim, or Jimmy even, come to take her to the church after all? But it was the Parnhams' Carrie.

"Miz Parnham send me ask anything Ah kin do."

"Why, thank you, Carrie," she said, "but I'm about ready. Doesn't Mrs. Parnham need you?"

"No, ma'am. Outside hired help wash up the pahty and the ladies and gen'mens stahtin' to the church."

Already! But, of course, ordinary guests would have to be there early to get aisle seats. She, as the mother of the groom, need not arrive until the proper time, because her proper place in the right-hand front pew was waiting for her. Who had first laid down these wedding rules? "The button and the bride on the left-hand side." . . . "Something old and something new." She had given Betts the pearl lovers' knot, the one she hadn't taken on her first call at the Evanses', for "something old."

"You like it, Carrie?" she asked, hearing Carrie's gasp as the gown fell into place. It certainly was a knockout.

ONLY that wasn't what had knocked out Carrie. "'Scuse me, Miz Bartlett, but there's sumpin shows in back where it didn't ought."

Martha whirled before the mirror, and Carrie was right. Her bra, her expensive new strapless bra, showed lace above the rosy underslip.

"Like all really good dresses," Miss Delicia at the shop had said superciliously "this has its own fitted slip. Do not ruin the line with any other shoulder straps." But she had managed to ruin the line some other way. Trust her, trying to be chic and clever when she wasn't. A wave of heat and despair went over her. Carrie saw it.

"Jest take yore dress off," she said kindly. "We kin cut it down. I'll run git the scissors."

After all her planning. Martha looked at her watch. Ten to four. How had she dawdled away all that time? She was still groping her way out of the delicate folds, lost in side passages like Tom Sawyer's cave, when Carrie came back.

"Help me, Carrie," she said faintly from within. Her hair was ruined, and probably the dress too. She heaved frantically toward the exit.

"Look out, Miz Bartlett. You goin' to tear it. You hold still. Jest you put yore ahms out and Carrie pull it off'n you."

I'm going to miss the wedding, Martha told herself, shaking with haste and nervousness, I'm going to miss my own son's wedding while I'm trapped in a triple-decker pink dress.

Carrie kept on tugging gently and finally the dress slid off, wrong side out. Carrie advanced with a pair of shears about a foot long. "Mr. Parnham's liberry sizzahs. I always know where they is." She examined the rear of the new bra. "Ain't nuthin to cut," she announced. "Leastways, any little they is, shows. I'll jest cut it off you." She did. The lace fell in a useless puddle. "Now all we got to do is put this dress back on you." She began to turn the layers right side out again. "It's a reel puzzle," she said, doubtfully.

Cornelia Parnham's voice hailed cheerfully from the hall. "You about ready, Martha?" it said. "We'll wait in the car."

Martha dove again through the rosy tunnels. "Well, I just can't go," she said, striking another dead end and withdrawing. "I can't go like this."

"You sho' can't," giggled Carrie. "Now jump once more with me holdin' the skirt wide open."

Carrie grabbed Martha's arms and guided them past the neck-hole and through the double armholes. She flipped the dress over Martha's head and it fell in gracious folds around Martha's body.

"See that now?" Carrie breathed. "An' yo' bosom looks just lovely the way God made it. Which is yo' hat?"

She was in the church vestibule with minutes to spare. You made it, old girl, she told lf, trying not to breathe heavily. ed and in your right mind. Practically. ut up her hand to be sure her hat hadn't ed.

Don't touch it," whispered Alicia, paus- moment beside her while she waited for sher to escort her to the second pew right. u're just right." Martha registered that a was looking very smart in toast. She worked it into the wedding after all.

e organ pealed toward the vestibule n. Its cadence was quickening. The esmaids had arrived in a body and were tered, giggling, in an anteroom. The rs were whizzing last-minute arrivals to sirable side pews. Martha made herself il and inconspicuous in a corner. Were and Jimmy ready in the vestry at the site end of the church? What were they ing about? What were they thinking? pose a button had popped, a collar ed its mooring, and no one there to t.

ddenly the vestibule was electric. Sally red looking over her shoulder, and be- l her on her father's arm was Betsy, te-misted with stars in her eyes. Martha ed and the proverbial lump came into throat. This girl, this heavenly maiden, to be Jimmy's wife and her daughter. rtha wanted to go and touch her, to say ething memorable, but Sally was fussing the train and veil. "It's just right now, darling, don't turn again." Someone led Martha and there was Wump, crook- his elbow toward her with exaggerated emony.

Hey, hey, Mother Bartlett, it's time for to take a walk."

Mother Bartlett. Wump. The nearest ng to a brother Jim had ever had. Martha w that at fifty Wump would still be Jim's brother. She took his arm lovingly and y started down the aisle.

ER glance swept the groom's side. Who re all these half-familiar faces? Jimmy's lege friends, his fellow officers. There was at wonderful boy who was Jimmy's ser- ant. He was still in uniform. And there was e camp counselor who'd been so fond of nmy—what was his name?—and the pretty l beside him must be his wife. Martha re- mbered sending them a wedding present ng ago. Why, she must have been crazy. ghtmaring those empty pews. She'd forgot- n Jimmy had friends, a host of them, and a ole life of his own.

She and Wump moved forward. Past hel and Tom and the little Riverside con- tingent loyally beaming at her. Past the Drapers. Goodness! As if they'd known her all her life. Past her family, those scattered sisters all together again for the first time in years, and all looking so nice. Emmy and Joe and the six blond step-chair daughters. She'd be going to a wedding in Oklahoma soon or she missed her guess. Past Polly and Blair and the little Mainites bouncing in pig-tailed excitement. Past Alicia's correct pew-ful and down at last to where mother sat, tiny, and erect and proud, waiting for her.

Wump stopped. He uncrooked his arm, seated her, and winked wickedly.

THE organ pealed again, and here came Sally in the yummy green. She looked young, and as if she hadn't a care in the world, but perhaps that hat was a little too ——

There was another surge of sound, an unmistakable sound: "Here comes the bride." The strains filled the church, old but new to every bride in her turn.

Martha's heart—or was it her stomach, or maybe her throat?—thrilled to the noble notes.

"Here comes the bride," they promised.

The congregation rose with a well-dressed rustle and turned as one person to face the bridal procession. All but Martha, whose eyes were riveted on the two tall men emerging from the vestry door and taking their place at the foot of the chancel. Jimmy was gazing with his heart in his eyes up the aisle where Betsy was pacing, but Jim looked first at Martha and then they looked together at their son.

"Who giveth this woman?" the minister intoned. Arthur made his brief gesture.

No one even asked me, Martha tried to thought-wave to him sympathetically, catching his expression.

Ta, ta, te, tum, ta ta cheered Mendelssohn. And now Jimmy and Betsy were facing down the church, down the whole future together. Happiness radiated from them.

As they passed the first pew, Jimmy turned one smile from Betsy to Martha. Even at this minute he felt her love and returned it. To her son she was still a Very Important Person. Her eyes met Sally's affectionately across the aisle and then turned to watch Jimmy and Betts advancing through a smiling sea of good wishes and good will.

Yes, she was still a V.I.P., although in a different way. And there was a Very Im Portant time coming. Perhaps the happiest in their lives.

THE END

JENNIFER

"Now when I say, 'No trumps,' Marge, you say to Lynn, 'Frankly, I don't like that hat on you, dear!'"

Sunbeam

RADIANT CONTROL

TOASTER

Automatic Beyond Belief!

NOW! All you do is drop in the bread

Bread lowers itself automatically, no levers to push

Toast raises itself silently, without popping or banging

PERFECT TOAST— EVERY TIME

Makes no difference what kind of bread you use— you get the same uniform toasting every time.

RADIANT CONTROL automatically adjusts itself for every kind of bread . . . moist or dry, thick slices or thin.

This is the entirely new toaster that has completely changed people's conception of what an automatic toaster should do! Only after you've seen it make toast can you appreciate the sheer magic of its carefree operation.

No levers to push—no popping or banging. Just drop in the bread and let the Sunbeam take over. This turns on the current and the bread silently lowers. When perfectly toasted, the current turns off and the toast comes up silently. It's that sensational.

The new Sunbeam even regulates the toasting automatically, depending on the kind of bread. If the slices are moist, it toasts them a little longer than if they are dry. If they are thin, it toasts them quicker than thicker slices. Moist or dry, thick or thin—you always get the same uniform golden color you want—automatically. Ask your dealer to demonstrate the new Sunbeam Toaster for you.

Only Sunbeam has patented RADIANT CONTROL. The heat radiated from the actual surface of the bread is focused on a sensitive strip of bimetal. When the bread reaches the scientifically correct temperature for perfect toasting, sufficient heat is absorbed by the thermostat to shut off the toaster. The toasting is always the same no matter what kind of bread you use, regardless of line voltage, once you set it for the brownness you want.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50 • Canada: 321 Weston Rd., Toronto 9

Famous for Sunbeam MIXMASTER, IRONMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, SHAVEMASTER, etc.

Pie champion makes 5-minute pie crust with Armour Star Lard!

Miss Jacqueline Hanneman of Indianapolis, Indiana, has won state and national awards for her pie-making ability. Here she shows you how to make MARIE GIFFORD'S famous 5-minute pie crust—the tenderest, flakiest pie crust ever—with Armour Star Lard!

1 To make crusts and decorations for two Holiday Mince Pies, as Miss Hanneman always does, first measure 3 cups of all-purpose flour, then sift with 1½ tsps. of salt. Add ½ lb. of Armour Lard — just cut self-measuring carton in two. Since Armour Lard needs no refrigeration, it's always ready to blend instantly. Stop mixing when lard is cut to size of small peas. Now take 5 tablespoons of water right from faucet —add all at once. Mix lightly and press dough together with knife. Divide into three portions.

2 Star this "all-star" crust! Roll out each portion evenly—about ⅛ inch thick. Miss Hanneman likes to use 2 cups of mince meat for each of the Holiday Mince Pies she's making here—and uses the third crust to make star decorations for two pies at once!

3 Try it yourself! Use America's perfect pie lard in your next pie crust. See how rich, tender and flaky Armour Lard makes the crust. And see for yourself how economical Armour Lard makes hot breads tastier, fried foods more digestible, too. You'll find Armour Lard at your grocer's —in the self-measuring green and white carton!

For free booklet of MARIE GIFFORD'S choice baking recipes using lard, write Dept. 450, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois

—the all-pure lard that stays fresh without refrigeration

Quick and Easys for Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

DONALD STUA

Sally and Dick arrange greens from their dooryard in an antique salad bo

SALLY and Dick live in a dark green "tree house"—or so they li to call it. Actually it's an apartment, built over a garage that w part of an estate. Far from the main house, it is set down in a gro of trees beside a slow, winding river. The trees are mostly evergree so there's a woodsy view from all the windows in winter.

Sally says of their first home, "Our two rooms and a kitchene high in the treetops is not palatial, but snug—and we love it. It is tiny we haven't room for all our wedding presents. And without t equipment or the space, I don't have to entertain formally. Since work in the village nearby and meet Dick's train from New York eve night, we don't have time or the desire for elaborate meals. O friends know they can drop in any time for a bite and there'll be fuss. It may be just a casserole of Spanish rice and a salad, and th may have to sit around on the floor to eat it, if there are more th two, but any meal shared with friends is fun."

One for the Casserole

Chicken, Macaroni and Cheese Casserole
Our Usual Salad
Ripe Pears

"My friends must have known we would like casserole dinners, as we received casseroles in all shapes and sizes for wedding presents. We're always trying new combinations in them. I don't mean 'we' literally, as Dick doesn't help me cook—too many cooks spoil the casserole. I often make this one when there is leftover chicken, but canned chicken does just as well."

CHICKEN, MACARONI AND CHEESE CASSEROLE

To 1½ cups medium-thin cream sauce add ¾ cup grated Cheddar cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspo dry mustard, and pepper to tas Cook 3 ounces elbow macaroni in bo ing salted water while you make sauce. Time it according to packa directions. Drain and rinse with water. Combine with sauce. Add ¾ 1 cup cooked or canned chicken, into nice pieces. Pour into a grea casserole. Sprinkle ¼ cup more gra cheese on top and bake about minutes in a moderate oven, 350° until bubbly and brown on top.

Dinner at a Price

Pork Chops à la Miller
Spinach with Garlic
Hot Spiced Grapefruit

"When I shop for dinner, I lo for the cheapest thing at the m counter and build my meal arou whatever it happens to be. I'm alwa l when it's pork chops, as Dick and .e them cooked slow and easy. They ctically cook by themselves, which es me time to make quick work of usual evening household chores."

PORK CHOPS À LA MILLER

l 4 loin pork chops in flour and wn well on both sides in a hot let, greased with 1 tablespoon rtening. Drain off any excess fat er frying chops. Add ¾ cup chopped ons and ½ cup chopped green per. Season with 1 teaspoon salt l several good dashes of pepper. nd 1 can condensed tomato soup h ¾ cup water and pour over ps. Cover and simmer until chops tender, turning during cooking.

Short Notice

Curried Eggs on Rice
Green Salad
Frozen-Applesauce Whip

"Many a night after Christmas opping we decide to have a cozy nner at home when we'd previously anned to dine at the inn. (We al- ays spend more for presents than planned to.) If I haven't food- opped that day, it doesn't bother e a bit, as I always have something the shelf or in the refrigerator for impromptu meal. Cooking is more n when you don't plan too rigidly."

CURRIED EGGS ON RICE

ip enough scallions into small pieces ith the scissors to make ¼ cup. If ou don't have scallions, of course, se ordinary onions, chopped—same uantity. Sauté until golden in 3 ablespoons butter or margarine. Re- ove from heat and blend in 2 table- oons flour and 2 teaspoons curry owder—more, if you like curries ot—until smooth. Return to heat. dd 1¾ cups milk gradually, stirring ntil thickened. Slice 4 hard-cooked ggs and add to sauce with 1 teaspoon alt and a dash of pepper to taste. It ay need more salt—so taste and see. o save time, you might try the anned, cooked rice.

FROZEN-APPLESAUCE WHIP

Empty 1 No. 2 can applesauce into a freezing tray and set up refrigerator to coldest position. Freeze until apple- sauce is frosty ½ inch around the edges of the tray. Beat 2 egg whites until stiff. Gradually add 3 table- spoons sugar, beating well after each addition. Add the partially frozen applesauce and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Beat until fluffy. Serve icy cold with a generous sprinkling of nutmeg. Whatever is left may be put back in the freezing tray and kept for another meal—when it will be more like a sherbet.

Steak-Sale Dividend

Beef Potpie
Green Beans
Apricot-and-Pineapple Compote

"Dick says he's sure we'd be beef-eating fools if we could afford it. Under the circumstances, we wait for a steak sale at one of the chain stores. Then I buy a steak large enough for a steak dinner the first night, and a beef pie the next. For the pie, I use the tougher part—the tail, if it's a porterhouse. I haven't tried to make pastry in my short history of cooking, as it's so easy to use the pastry mix for a potpie topper and so much bet- ter than I think I could make."

Food and Friends

Oyster Stew—Crackers
Avocado-and-Tomato Salad
Black-Bing-Cherry- and-Pecan Ring

"One of my favorite wedding presents is a French onion-soup crock over an alcohol lamp. It holds quarts and quarts—too much for just the two of us. We like it for oyster-stew parties in the winter. I use my mother's recipe. It's the easiest one I know of. I make the dessert the night before."

Sally and Dick are having their first holiday party, starring oyster stew.

Holiday Ham Loaf

A GAY AND ZESTFUL RECIPE BY ANNE MARSHALL

1 pound ground veal
1 pound ground ham
1 cup bread crumbs
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
3 tablespoons minced onion
3 tablespoons minced green pepper
2 eggs, beaten
¼ cup ketchup
¼ cup water
1 can (1¼ cups) Campbell's Tomato Soup

Combine ingredients in order given, mixing thoroughly. Pack ham loaf firmly into a greased 9″ x 4″ x 4″ loaf pan. Bake in a moderate oven (350° F.) for 1 hour. Pour off juice, loosen edges, and invert on platter. Garnish with green pepper holly leaves and pimiento holly berries or sliced stuffed olives and sprigs of parsley. Equally good, hot or cold. Serves 8.

Tomato-Horseradish Sauce: Mix 2 tablespoons horseradish, 2 tea- spoons prepared mustard, a dash of powdered cloves, a sprinkle of black pepper and 1 can (1¼ cups) Campbell's Tomato Soup. Serve hot with hot ham loaf, or cold on ham loaf sandwiches.

Make it with America's Favorite
Tomato Cooking Sauce

DELICIOUS AS A SOUP... AS A POUR-ON SAUCE ... AND IN COOKING

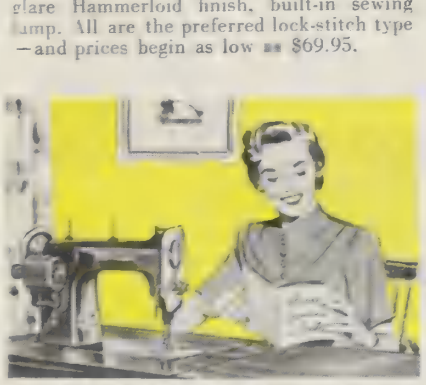
Flavor makes the dish, so why take chances? Campbell's Tomato Soup is tops in flavor and favor . . . used more than any other brand of any tomato product as a cooking and pour-on sauce! . . . That's because Campbell's is double-rich, double-thick, just as it comes from the can . . . smoother . . . better-tasting . . . a real purée of choice tomatoes, table butter, and gentle balanced seasonings . . . 17 fine ingredients in all. The chances are, you have Campbell's Tomato Soup on your kitchen shelf right now. Try cooking with it...today!

Yes . . . CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP MAKES THE BEST TOMATO COOKING SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED!

FREE COOK BOOK
50 PAGES
99 DISHES
FULL COLOR

Mail coupon today to Anne Marshall, Campbell Soup Co., Dept. L 12, Camden 1, N. J.

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____
ZONE_____ STATE_____



Ask your Santa for a

NEW HOME LIGHT-RUNNING HOME® SEWING MACHINE!

This new Queen Anne, Model 629, is just one of the many desk, console or portable models you can choose from. DeLuxe models have light aluminum head, non-glare Hammerloid finish, built-in sewing lamp. All are the preferred lock-stitch type—and prices begin as low as $69.95.

Send for valuable booklet! "Home Sewing Is Easy" teaches you home sewing in a simple, easy-to-learn way. Its many pages are filled with helpful color illustrations. Send 15¢ in coin to New-Home Sewing Machine Co., Beverly Hills, Calif., and this helpful booklet will be rushed to your address.

You can pay $100 more—and still not get all these easy-sewing features!

How thrilled you will be—with a smart, New-Home Sewing Machine for Christmas! This remarkable machine makes the most intricate sewing job surprisingly simple—even for a beginner. And no other machine—at any price—has all these advantages!

- Patented "Nevr-Clog" feature prevents thread jamming in machine.
- Sews both forward and reverse instantly.
- Easily sews over pins, seams, large folds.
- Full rotary gear driven mechanism gives smooth performance at all speeds.
- Famous air-cooled Westinghouse motor.
- Darns, mends and embroiders.
- 15 attachments at no extra cost.
- Wide choice of beautiful cabinets.
- 20-year written guarantee.

For the perfect Christmas Gift, see the complete selection of New-Home Sewing Machines at your nearest New-Home Dealer's. Look for his name in the classified section of your phone book, or write New-Home Sewing Machine Company, Beverly Hills, Calif.

NEW HOME LIGHT-RUNNING

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SEWING MACHINES

Made in America since 1860

ROCKFORD, ILL., BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF., TORONTO, CANADA

COMMENDED PARENTS

HEALTH EMERGENCY VOLUNTEERS

(Continued from Page 23)

desperate, the doctors were forced to accept volunteer aids—skeptically at first, enthusiastically today.

"We couldn't get along without them now," one doctor said. "They really amazed us. Most of them, for instance, went into the isolation ward unhesitatingly, at a possible risk to themselves and their families, even though we couldn't tell them definitely whether polio is contagious or not. In fact, we had about decided we shouldn't chance sending volunteers into isolation at all when we found out they'd already been in there. That's how anxious they were to help these children."

Reactions of the volunteers themselves vary. "It scared the daylights out of me at first," Mrs. Beck said, "but you should see the way the children's faces light up whenever we come in." Mrs. Ballingham, who had cared for her own son two years before, said, "It just never occurred to me that I might get polio." And Mrs. Poulson agreed. "I worked with a nurse who had a five-month-old baby," she said. "We both felt the same way. If you're going to get polio, you'll get it anyway." No volunteer in Ogden has yet contracted polio.

Volunteers feed patients who cannot feed themselves, change beds and diapers, distribute toys and stacks of comic books, and help nurses with sandbags and hot packs—"just anything they ask us to do, in other words." One volunteer saved the services of a nurse for a whole year by taking the children back and forth to the first floor for their appointments with the physiotherapist.

Their chores are not always easy. One lung patient took forty-five minutes to feed because she had to breathe deeply and take a drink after each bite. Children often have to be coaxed to eat or to lie still for a hypodermic.

> Every great and commanding moment in the annals of the world is the triumph of some enthusiasm. —EMERSON.

"Polio is a disease of fear," one volunteer, whose son is a partial cripple, said. "It strikes suddenly, without warning, and the large majority of its victims are children. When they come to the hospital, most of them have never been away from their mothers before. They don't understand what is the matter with them, and the pain—which older people say is more intense than anyone can imagine—absolutely terrifies them."

Probably the most important part of the volunteers' job, therefore, is making the children feel comfortable and loved. Children recognize volunteers by their cotton dresses, so different from a nurse's white starched uniform, and cry out to them, "Hey, Wady I want m'bath," or "Missus, will you read me a funny book?" Small children call volunteers "mommy," and snuggle up to be kissed and petted.

JIMMY had just celebrated his tenth birthday when he came to the hospital with polio. He had great difficulty swallowing and was afraid he was going to choke to death. During the worst part of his illness, he had to be fed intravenously through his ankle while the congestion in his throat was cleared through a suction pump. Jimmy did not understand what was happening to him. Every time a nurse or doctor approached him, he thrashed wildly around the bed, weeping and screaming, "What are you doing to me? Leave me alone!"

"One night the poor little thing screamed so that I could hardly stand it," Mrs. Munson, a volunteer who was staying all night with the children, said. "Without even thinking, I went over and put my head down beside his on the pillow and said, 'See, I'm as close as this. Everything is going to be all right.' And it seemed to quiet him a little."

And then there was Mary, a diminutive five-year-old with long blond curls and a smile that never wavered. Mary suffered all kinds of pain, yet whenever someone asked how she felt, she always said, with a smile, "Just fine, thank you." On her good days, Mary liked to play paper dolls with the volunteers, or listen to Winnie the Pooh. On her bad days she needed someone to hold her hand and smile reassuringly. One morning she woke up crying. Alarmed, the nurse brought the suction pump, then discovered that although she had no temperature, Mary was suffering from pneumonia. For three hours Mary suffered a terrible choking spell. Her last words were to her mother: "I love you," she said, "I love you clear across the room."

No volunteer has forgotten Mary, her spirit and her courage. "These are the kind of youngsters we're working for," one woman said. "It is sad sometimes, yes, but the children need us so, and are so grateful for anything we do for them, that our work is rewarded many times over."

Women have been training to fight polio in Utah ever since 1945, when the Latter Day Saints Women's Society, which had always urged women to take home-nursing courses, first asked volunteers to help out in what was then a record polio epidemic. Women in and out of the church answered the call. At its Pinecrest Inn, near historic Emigration Canyon, the Mormon Church provided hospitality and equipment for a three-day training program. Here doctors explained about polio, and the function of medical workers; nurses demonstrated how to bathe and feed patients, and change their beds; physiotherapists from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis showed how volunteers can assist them in their work. Volunteers were assured that ordinary cleanliness should protect them against contracting polio, and urged them, even if they went into the isolation ward, to wear special gowns and shoes, and gargle and wash thoroughly before going home.

During that same fall 156 women gave 10,000 hours to the epidemic—"absolutely the difference between recovery and non-recovery," a Foundation representative said.

Today similar courses are held annually, not only on a state-wide basis, but at both St. Benedict's and Dee Hospital in Ogden. In 1949, when the Ogden epidemic reached such proportions that St. Benedict's feared it might have to turn patients away and ask volunteers to help out in private homes, P.E.V.'s learned, in addition, what materials emergency hot packs might be made of, and how to fix them in an ordinary washtub or washing machine. While most P.E.V.'s have taken this training course, a few have not. Mrs. Parker had learned how to give hot packs and minor therapy treatment to her own daughter. Other women don't work in the hospitals, but are willing to raise money, fold bandages and collect sand for sandbags—"and we were afraid they might not join at all if we made the training course obligatory."

For Ogden's P.E.V.'s meet, not only in hospital corridors during an epidemic, but at least once a month to make bandages and learn new information about polio from medical authorities, and several times a month during the March of Dimes campaign when, last year, they were credited with raising nearly $5000. More than 1200 polio volunteers have been recruited in Utah as a whole, but Ogden workers—inspired by the energy and devotion of two mothers who wanted to pay back, in effort, the money they could never repay the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis for financing their sons' illness—were the first group to organize into a regular club.

Jane Ballingham and Mabel Poulson met in 1946 when each was traveling seventy-five miles a day to visit her son in a Salt Lake City hospital. Richard Ballingham had polio of the throat. Vernal Poulson was fighting paralysis of the spine. The hospital desper-

(Continued on Page 143)

Polly looked (AND PROFITED!)

Molly hoped
(AND LOST!)

Only LOOKING can tell you it's so!

"Is that a 'Sanforized' cotton? Is it really safe from shrinkage troubles?"

Ask the questions if you like. But get your answer by LOOKING at the label of the cotton you want to buy.

Any cotton that has a right to be called "Sanforized" will tell you so—in nice big letters on the label!

So when you shop for cottons, ask to be shown the "Sanforized" trade-mark. Be sure you see it on every kind of cotton fabric, every kind of cotton garment every single time!

Dresses • Housecoats • Pajamas
Slacks • Children's Clothes • Piece Goods

•SANFORIZED•
TRADE ® MARK

Make even your favorite salesgirl show you "SANFORIZED" on the label!

uett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

Christmas Magic... from Shulton

Toilet Water,
Dusting Powder 3.00
(Other sets up to 7.00)

10 Individual Bath Salts 1.00

Purse Perfume
in Christmas Dress 1.00

EARLY AMERICAN
Old Spice
®

EARLY AMERICAN Friendship's Garden
®

Bath Salts 1.00

Toilet Water with atomizer
in Gift Box 1.50

Toilet Water, Dusting Powder and Body Sachet 3.00
(Other sets up to 6.00)

Purse Flower

Toilet Water and Purse Perfume with charming velveteen purse to hold the Perfume 2.50

Purse Perfume
in Gift Box 1.50

DESERT FLOWER
®

Mug, Lotion, Talcum in set 3.00
(Other sets up to 6.50)

After Shave Lotion, Shaving Cream
(Lather or Brushless) in set 1.45

After Shave Lotion
1.00, 1.75

EARLY AMERICAN Old Spice
®
FOR MEN

SHULTON
New York Toronto

Prices plus tax

(Continued from Page 140)

tely needed helpers, and almost as soon as heir sons arrived, Mrs. Ballingham and Mrs. Poulson went to work in the polio wards four hours a day.

"It did us as much good as the children," Mrs. Poulson said, "because we could see them every day and know that everything possible was being done for them. Lots of the children got so homesick. When I asked Vernal what would be the best time of day for me to come, he said, 'At bedtime, mom. That's the worst, when they put out the lights and leave us alone.' Every night for three months I read them a bedtime story and stayed until they went to sleep."

Later, after they had taken the polio-training course and worked together on a March of Dimes campaign, Mrs. Ballingham suggested to Mrs. Poulson that they form a club "so we'll have an easier time reaching volunteers if there's another epidemic."

Today—three years later—the club has a membership list of sixty women. Most members are like Mrs. Munson, who joined when her son caught polio and she realized, firsthand, the great need for volunteer aids. Others are like Mrs. Russell, who joined because her son has cerebral palsy and she wanted to help other crippled children. Mrs. Beck, who heard about the work through Mrs. Russell, came along once to see what it was all about, has been coming ever since.

A woman's advice is of little value, but woe to the man who will not take it.
—WELSH PROVERB.

New volunteers learn, to their surprise, that a children's polio ward is a lively, noisy place. For most children, the critical part of their illness is over after the first few days, and though they are unable to move certain parts of their bodies, their minds—and the well parts of their bodies—are just as active as ever. They need constant attention—both to keep them in the proper position in bed, and to keep them amused with games, stories and toys.

"Every time you walk in a ward," one volunteer said, "you have to watch out for toys and paper airplanes sailing through the air from one bed to another." An eight-year-old confided to a volunteer worker, "Please don't tell anyone, because I want to surprise them, but I get up every day when nobody's around, and pretty soon I'll be able to stand up good."

"They're just as mischievous as well children, if not more," Sister Mary Margaret, supervisor of St. Benedict's Hospital, said. "For every six children, we need one person just to keep them in place. In serious cases, constant care may mean the difference between recovery and nonrecovery."

And a good volunteer, medical authorities agree, is one who can combine good common sense and a warm, sympathetic nature with a working knowledge of child psychology. When doctors originally opposed letting volunteers into the polio wards, one of their major objections was the feeling that "they might go to pieces in front of the children when they see what some of them are going through." This has never happened.

"The first day I saw Mike's braces, I went out in the hall and cried and cried," one mother said, "but none of the children ever saw me." And other mothers tell of similar experiences. Because hospital authorities feel that children often cooperate better for strangers than for their own parents, and as an extra precaution against any mother's breaking down, no mother works in the same ward where her own child is a patient—"although, naturally, we pay lots of visits."

During the polio epidemic, P.E.V.'s are on twenty-four-hour call. Two or three volunteers go to the hospital every day at feeding time; others help to entertain the children—and during an emergency, all Sister Mary Margaret has to do is call Mrs. Parker, current P.E.V. president, and she is assured of as many volunteer workers as she needs. During the last epidemic in Ogden, thirty volunteers worked anywhere from two to ten, and sometimes twenty, hours a week for four months—"And I can't even think what we would have done without them," Sister Mary Margaret said.

Ask any volunteer why this is so, and each will give the same answer, "The children"—not only the children who need them because of their illness, but the children who need them in so many other ways too: the little boy who had never had pajamas or a toothbrush before and wanted to know if he could "really keep them"; the little girl who sat and looked, enraptured, at her birthday cake for over a week and never did get around to cutting it; the small children who grab your hand and say, "Hello, mommy."

"I will never stop coming as long as the children need me," one volunteer said, and she was voicing the feeling of all volunteers.

OUR GRANDPARENTS' MAXIMS

(Continued from Page 50)

deep-rooted that parents worried little over ailing children, convinced that when they reached the ages of seven, fourteen or twenty-one they'd be completely renovated. Actually no such septennial remodeling occurs. The human body, say physiologists, has three distinct periods in the normal cycle of life: development, maturity and decline; but no periodic rejuvenation.

"Two Can Live as Cheaply as One"

FALSE. Last century, when more people lived on farms and in large families, this well-worn marriage propaganda may have been true. But it certainly doesn't hold good today. As often pointed out, the high cost of marriage isn't the initial expense. It's the upkeep. Actually, statistics show two can live for about a third more than one nowadays, but only with the greatest economy.

Sleeping on the Left Side Taxes the Heart

FALSE. Because the entire heart was believed to be on the left side of the chest, it was thought that the weight of your sleeping body would compress it and impede its action. Actually, though the heartbeat can be felt more distinctly on the left side, the heart itself is nearer the middle of your chest. Even if it were on the left side, as still widely supposed, there would be no danger in sleeping in that position as it's securely protected by the chest wall of bones and muscle.

"Growing Pains" are Perfectly Normal

FALSE. Grandma used to regard "growing pains" quite casually as something to be expected during a child's normal development. Pediatricians today don't dismiss them so lightly. They can be due to some disease condition of the body, a sign of mild rheumatism, vitamin deficiency—or possibly a forerunner of rheumatic fever or heart disease—and certainly are not to be considered perfectly normal.

"School Days are Your Happiest Days"

FALSE. Those who perpetuate this philosophy are the exceptions. Or they've completely forgotten the immediate problems of their early youth and look back through rose-colored glasses. Recent psychological surveys show the happiest period of life for both men and women is by no means their youth, but between the ages of thirty and fifty. Youth and age are in fact the least happy, the middle years the most—presumably because that's when we're best adjusted to our environment and live in the present. THE END

LITTLE LULU

They're safe for next Christmas - in Kleenex!

Little Lulu says: WHEN YOU UN-TRIM THE TREE — PACK DELICATE ORNAMENTS AWAY IN SOFT KLEENEX* TISSUES, AND AVOID BREAKAGE. A SPECIAL PROCESS KEEPS KLEENEX TISSUES EXTRA SOFT. GENTLE, STURDY KLEENEX GUARDS DELICATE COMPLEXIONS, TOO!

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO. ★T M REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BESTFORM

put your curves in their proper place

. . . give your good lines a chance to show, do it firmly and with flattery—just slip into Bestform's all nylon girdle. It has nylon taffeta front, sides and back and boned nylon diaphragm, with four sections of nylon leno elastic that trims and slims.
■ Style 5667—16" sizes 25 to 34. White and pink. $5.95. ■ Nylon taffeta bra with embroidered nylon marquisette trim—style 6077. $2.00

no finer fit at any price

Find New Beauty in your Bath!

Bathe your way to Beauty with the Camay Beauty Bath! The daily Camay Beauty Bath brings to your skin—yes, to all of your skin from head to toe—the finest kind of complexion care! It brings new loveliness to your shoulders and arms and legs. Use the big, economical "Beauty-Bath" size of Camay. Let it touch you—ever so lightly—with the flattering fragrance of Camay, The Soap of Beautiful Women.

ALL ABOARD FOR NEW ALL-OVER BEAUTY!

DON'T JUST TAKE A BATH...REVEL IN IT!

SO GENTLE—THE TOUCH OF SATIN!

JUST ENOUGH FRAGRANCE TO FLATTER!

BATH-SIZE GIVES BILLOWS OF LATHER!

BE ECONOMICAL—BUY BATH-SIZE CAMAY!

CAMAY

THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

the "Beauty-Bath" size

CAMAY is the right size

Bath-Size Camay for your CAMAY BEAUTY BATH!

"We must take care of more children." "Mom" Thorpe's brood numbers 135 now, but 640 were turned away last year "because we had no room."

Life in an Orphan Home

Meet "your other family"— the Cleveland Christian Home for Children.

by ROGER BUTTERFIELD

"CHILDREN," said Anna Thorpe, "need so many things. They need food and a place to sleep and clothes to wear. They need intelligent training and some kind of beauty in their lives—flowers, music, bright-colored toys. But what they need most is love."

As she spoke a sturdy four-year-old boy with black hair and blacker eyes trotted over to the corner of the dining room where we were sitting and climbed into "Mom" Thorpe's capacious lap. His round face crinkled into a happy grin as he squirmed and twisted and pulled himself close enough to put his arms around her neck.

"That's Danny," Mrs. Thorpe explained after he had departed with the "present" he had asked for—a red paper bird which had been pasted to the tree-shaped table centerpiece. "A year ago Danny would turn away and hide his face if an older person spoke to him. When he first came here two years ago, he would cry if I even touched him. Now he's growing into a fine little boy. Did you notice how square his shoulders are getting, and that mischievous look he has?"

I learned more about Danny later, and it wasn't a cheerful story, at least the first part. Danny's Chinese father had been in the United States Army, and married his American mother during the war. Her family bitterly resented the match, and refused any further contact with her or her children. The father's Chinese relatives felt the same way. The marriage broke up because of this

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Brought up in a Home herself ("We slept on straw, wore denim"), 55-year-old Anna Thorpe knows the essentials of home are more than food, shelter and clothing—"a child must belong too."

A dollar a day per child—funds come from the Christian Church, private donations (a dime up); the Masons provide birthday and Christmas gifts.

"Children need s racial discord, and one day the mother almost succeeded in ending her life by cutting her wrists. Eleven welfare agencies in their home city refused Danny and his baby sister any permanent help because of their parentage, and Mrs. Thorpe found them living in a detention home where juvenile delinquents are held. Small wonder that Danny felt unwanted!

Even after Danny and his sister Pamela joined Mrs. Thorpe's big family at the Cleveland (Ohio) Christian Home for Children, there were a few unpleasant repercussions. Some supporters of the Home pointed out that it had long had an unwritten rule against children of "mixed" descent. But Anna Thorpe has never been one for strictly enforcing rules when small and helpless hands are outstretched.

"We call ours a Christian Home," she told the objectors. "But we won't deserve to bear that name if we turn away any little children."

For more than thirty years now Mrs. Anna Noble Garver Thorpe has been mothering boys and girls whose homes have been destroyed by death or poverty or parental failure. For twenty-five of those years she has been superintendent of the Cleveland Christian Home, which is under the general jurisdiction of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church—Disciples of Christ. Anna Thorpe is an unusual woman, and the Cleveland Christian Home, as organized, directed and even decorated by her, is very far from the conventional idea of an "orphan asylum."

Surrounded and cut off from the city's traffic by a deep grove of trees and spacious flower gardens, its creeper-clad brick walls give off a definite feeling of peace and security. The high front doorway, framed between cream-colored columns and topped by a Grecian arch, might be the entrance to a very comfortable suburban home in any American

"I like nice clothes myself." Anna's weakness, hats: she buys dozens, gives them away as fast as she buys them. No believer in uniforms, she keeps her children attractively dressed on $20 a year apiece, gifts and "make-overs."

"3 times 135 ——" Shoes are the biggest problem, each child has 3 pairs: play, school and best. Annual bill, $600 to $700. Each child has a Home "job" (to teach responsibility), none graduates without knowing how to earn a living.

Newcomers to the Home are often shy, sometimes run away ("but never far"), are comforted, not scolded, on return.

"Mom" feels children gain by settling their own differences, arbitrates when it is necessary.

many things—most of all, love."

city. The front hall, with its curving staircase and tall grandfather clock, is thickly carpeted from wall to wall, and the impression of gracious living is carried over into the dining room, where three open-faced cupboards are filled with pieces of old Staffordshire, milk glass, pewter and majolica which Mrs. Thorpe collects as a hobby (and with her own funds, of course). In the quarter century that she has been at the Home she has "raised" nearly 2000 youngsters, and only four of her knickknacks have ever been broken, although the children are constantly dusting and handling them.

Mom never gets mad about losing things this way—she simply buys something new. "I want my children to grow up with beautiful things. And how can they know beauty unless they can touch it?"

Out in back of the Home are the swimming pool, baseball diamond and basketball court, a brick barbecue pit for outdoor wienie roasts, a Never a lack of music with 8 pianos (every girl over 12 can play one), 25 guitars, other instruments. "Mom" doesn't interfere with teen-age dates (on week ends), does want to meet and approve boys who take her girls out.

For fun: swimming pool, baseball, basketball, swings for "juniors," big (and sunny) sand pile for the babies; indoors, a small stage for plays, 8 pianos, a television set donated by head of Cleveland baseball club.

Religion is important at Home, but does not dominate everyday living. Most children go to Sunday school at nearby Christian Church, may stay for services, take part in young people's activities. Mealtime grace is always sung.

Before Christmas, loads of gifts arrive. Mr. Thorpe checks them all—"useful" things are fine, but a child should get "fun" gifts at Christmas too.

"Christmas is a vulnerable time." Gifts pile up under gaily trimmed trees (there are 7), carols are sung, there's a live show with clowns and tumblers.

Relatives are invited to children's party, and however great the thrill of Christmas, greater yet is the thrill of introducing "somebody of your own."

"Children need beauty—how can they know it unless they touch it?"

playground with swings and whirligigs for the "juniors," and a big fenced-in sand pile where Mom's thirteen babies grow brown and lively in the warmer months. In the winter, social life centers around the second-floor recreation room where there are a small stage for impromptu plays and concerts and a big sixteen-inch television set donated by Bill Veeck when he was head of the Cleveland Indians baseball club. There are eight pianos scattered through the Home and every girl over twelve can play one; there are also twenty-five guitars, electric and otherwise, and various other instruments, so there is never lack of music. Mom's teen-age girls have one advantage over their friends from private homes in that they always have a place ready for a party or dance, and Mrs. Thorpe does not interfere with their weekend dating activities as long as two important rules are observed: 1—That their schoolwork does not suffer: and 2—That she has a chance to meet and approve the boys who are taking them out.

Anna Thorpe has never forgotten the first meal that she herself was served at the Cleveland Home. The building was brand-new then, and scarcely furnished: she had been invited to spend a few days there and make some suggestions about running it.

"When I went in to supper, there was a plate with some lettuce and three prunes stuffed with cottage cheese," she recalls. "I thought to myself, 'Um, they're fancy here: they serve courses.' I ate the prunes and waited for quite a while until one of the waitresses came over and said, 'Can I get you something, ma'am?' I told her, 'Yes, Madeline, you can bring me my supper now.' She looked at me kind of funny and went out to the kitchen. When she came back she was crying. She told me, 'The cook says that was your supper—it's all we have.' And then I looked around the room and realized that was all the children had too—just prunes and lettuce and cottage cheese. Well, you can imagine what my first recommendation was!"

Good solid food and plenty of it is a basic rule at the Home these days: there are very few skinny children there, and no hungry ones. They have a meat course once a day, usually at night, with two or three cooked vegetables, salad, fresh-baked bread or hot rolls, and fresh or stewed fruit for dessert. No one is ever denied seconds or even thirds. Luncheons are ample too: corn fritters with honey or jelly, spaghetti with meat sauce, or a big bowl of clam chowder with a sandwich on the side. For breakfast there are oatmeal and rolls, or scrambled eggs, or pancakes, and at every meal there is all the milk that any thirsty child can drink.

Mrs. Thorpe buys all her milk; when she first came to the Home, one of its directors used to send her out a cow now and then from a slaughterhouse he owned. His idea was that even the most aged and decrepit cow could still squeeze out a few quarts of milk for the unfortunate "orphans," and thus cut down on expenses. This did not work out because the cows were too far gone to give much milk, while their feed more than ate up the supposed saving. They also trampled a large part of the back yard into a muddy mess, producing angry comments from nearby householders. Mrs. Thorpe heard about this and quietly instigated a petition among her neighbors to have the cows banned; now their former barnyard has been converted, by the labor of her older boys, into a pretty rose garden with a flagstone walk and goldfish pool.

(Continued on Page 150)

Nursery has 13 babies now. In 25 years no fatal illness, accident

"Juniors" are 3 to 11. "Homes" hold 250,000 American children.

At 6 the only thing nicer than a doll is two dolls . . . and dancing.

"Seniors" (12–18) are busy at school. College is possible too.

Home "graduates" include nurses, doctors and engineers.

"You're my family." One boy sent Anna his Purple Heart medal. Having raised 2000 children, she now cherishes plans for a new "and larger" Home—and mostly she gets what her family needs

"Anything you want is possible if you are willing to work for it."

(Continued from Page 148) The wholesome plenty of Mrs. Thorpe's dining room is an overwhelming experience for some of her charges when they first arrive. One little girl, brought from a home where the mother had been taken to a mental institution, would not even go into it; all she had ever learned to eat was bread and black coffee, and she had to be shut in a dark closet before she would touch even that! For such pathetic cases Mrs. Thorpe has set up individual tables around the side of the dining room where timid youngsters can get used to the idea of eating all they want without anyone watching them. The other children sit at tables of six and four, with an older boy or girl at each table to pass the plates and preserve order. The babies are fed separately, in their own nursery.

Mistress, hostess and supervisor of the dining room is Anna Craig, better known as "Coffee Anna," a brisk and delightful personality who came to the Home as a young girl just three months before Mrs. Thorpe. Her touch can be seen in the flowers which decorate every table, the green-and-yellow slip covers on the chairs, the little colored stars and birds pasted to napkins and centerpieces, and the bright yellow curtains at the windows. All these things make for an atmosphere which is anything but institutional.

The Christian Home is the only one in the Cleveland area which takes babies from one day old and continues to help them until they are through college, or able to earn their own living. At present there are 135 children at the Home, of whom (Continued on Page 152)

"He's got a cold nose." Visitors (even small pups) are welcomed, sometimes with unexpected benefit. A shabby old man came to watch the children play, left the Home $45,000 in gratitude for their warm friendliness.

"Nothing can quite make up to a child the loss of a normal home to grow up in." The world outside—and all visitors from it—holds endless fascination.

"For Santa"

COPYRIGHT 1950, THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

"Merry Christmas, my dear," said St. Nick, bouncing in after rewarding his reindeer with an extra forkful of hay for their night's work. "I couldn't think of a thing to bring you except this. It must be good, because I saw it in ever so many homes."

"Thank you, Nick," laughed his wife, "but if that isn't just like a man! You're so busy toy-making that you've never noticed I've used Fels-Naptha for years and years and YEARS."

(Continued from Page 150)

24 are "seniors" from twelve to eighteen years old. All the older children are earning some money toward their education and upkeep by working in the dining room, kitchen, nursery, hospital or grounds, or by occasional jobs outside. Their earnings are deposited in a "Children's Bank" in Mrs. Thorpe's office, and they use regular bank-style printed checks to draw out funds as needed for textbooks, home-room fees, carfare and occasional articles of clothing. No one ever "graduates" from the Home without learning how to earn and bank his or her own money.

For those who want to go to college Mrs. Thorpe has developed a unique "higher-education fund" by collecting and cashing the little green sales-tax receipts issued by the state of Ohio. The tax is 3 cents on a dollar, and every time it is paid the retailer hands out a receipt; these can be redeemed at Columbus for 3 per cent of their face value, or 9/100ths of a cent on every sales dollar! Churches, fraternal organizations and individuals all over the state send these tiny contributions to the Home, and out of them Mrs. Thorpe got $4696.92 last year. She is now sending one boy through Ohio State, a girl to Baldwin-Wallace, in nearby Berea, and two other girls through nursing school out of her tax-stamp fund.

Before the tax stamps came along she used Octagon soap coupons (redeemed at 4 cents for every thousand) for the same purpose. One of her boys got a complete medical education from Octagon coupons, plus his own part-time earnings. Another Octagon graduate won the highest honors in her class at Bethany College. Altogether Mrs. Thorpe and the Home have turned out two doctors, six engineers, ten teachers, six nurses, four editors, ten designers, eleven business executives (including six women), one minister, five dietitians, ten decorators, forty-two stenographers and secretaries, twenty-five farmers, fifty-odd tradesmen and storekeepers, and several hundred housewives, more than two thirds of whom have children of their own, and one of whom married a congressman.

During the last war forty-two of her graduates were in the armed forces, and several named her as their "next of kin." In one case she received the War Department's telegram informing her that a boy who had spent fifteen of his nineteen years with her had been killed in the South Pacific fighting. Another soldier sent her the Purple Heart medal he had won—"You're the only family I have, Mom," he wrote.

A few months ago one of her boys arrived unannounced from Washington after serving two years in the Navy.

"I took a bus home as soon as I got out, Mom," he told her. "I guess it seems kind of funny to come back this way, but all I've got is my medical discharge and the clothes I have on. Do you think you could give me something to do around here until I kind of get on my feet again?"

So "Mom" put him to work outdoors until he could land a regular job.

When you have 135 children to mother, you have many times 135 problems. And despite all the love and security that Mrs. Thorpe can give, some of her flock are bound to be unhappy, bewildered and even rebellious at times. Nothing can quite make up to them for the loss of every child's birthright—a normal home to grow up in.

Anna Thorpe understands this deeply, for she herself was raised in an orphans' home of the old-fashioned institutional kind. She remembers too well the cracked eardrums that one of her playmates suffered from a matron's slap, resulting in permanent deafness. There is no real corporal punishment in her Home, though five or six times a year she finds it necessary to administer a "this hurts me more than it does you" spanking to a junior. Older children are punished, when necessary, by taking away privileges like Saturday-night movies, or a week at summer camp. There are no locks or iron gates at the Home—any child can run (or walk) away. But they always come back.

One day a city policeman brought in a ten-year-old girl who had already run away twice that week (it was her first at the Home). The child was sobbing and the policeman was white-faced and serious; they both expected she would get a licking then and there. Mrs. Thorpe put her arms around her and calmed her and then said gently, "Wash your face and hurry up, Carol, the girls are going to a movie tonight and they want you to come with them." When she looked up, the policeman had tears in his eyes too. "So that's the way you punish them here," he said.

One of Mom's toughest assignments was the twelve-year-old daughter of a well-known Cleveland gangster who was brought to the Home while her father was awaiting electrocution. This girl had been sent from one social agency to another, and from foster home to house of detention and back again, but no one could handle her.

"You're not going to keep me either," she told Mrs. Thorpe. "I'll be out of here in a couple of weeks."

"You can go right now or any time you want to," Mom said. "But before you do that won't you give us a trial? We really want to help you."

"Stop preaching," the youngster advised her. "I'll go when I'm good and ready."

Mom thought fast and had a sudden inspiration. "You don't like your name, do you?" she asked.

The girl shook her head sullenly.

"Well, why don't you change it—you can take a new one here and no one will ever know the difference," Mom urged. "I'll tell you what: I'll give you a new last name and you pick your first one—how about it?"

"I always liked Rose," said the girl, growing interested. "Would that be all right?"

It was, and with a different name, Rose became a different girl as well.

Pay a visit to Mom's Home, and the first thing you will notice is the hands of the children, reaching out to take hold of yours—or if they can't find that they will grab a coattail or a sleeve and introduce themselves without shyness. "I'm Barbara," they say, and "I'm Bobby," and then, "That's my sister," or "I've got a brother—my mother's dead, but I've got a brother." The desire to establish some family relationship is the strongest urge they have. About a third of the children have brothers and sisters at the Home, and about half have a parent or grandparent or some other relative on the outside who takes an interest in them—or should. In a few cases mothers are able to come and work at the Home as a nurse, cook or governess to be near their children. A few outside families pay up to $5 a week for board, and the Home also receives a small income (at the rate of $2 a day) for children accepted from public-welfare agencies.

But most of Mom's children come to her through the Christian Churches and Protestant-church federations of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and New York. She has just one rule for admittance: only children whose parents are definitely separated, by death or desertion or hopeless disease, are eligible. Because her Home is small and has no endowment support, she is her own "case worker," psychologist and chauffeur. The Home has a shiny new DeSoto suburban wagon now, bought from special gifts sent in during the past year, but until it arrived Mom drove her own car on errands and "pickups." Once when a doctor told her that one of her children needed goat's milk she jumped into her car and drove all night to a Pennsylvania farm where she knew the owner had a goat. She talked him into loaning the animal and returned in triumph with the goat munching the upholstery of the back seat.

She will never forget another trip she made from Michigan with a day-old baby on the front seat beside her. She had received a letter which read, in part: "Dear Mrs. Thorpe, Will you come at once to see me? I heard you speak at our church, and now I need your help." The writer was a young unmarried woman, a teacher and active church worker in a small Michigan town.

Mrs. Thorpe found her living in a boarding-house in an industrial city where she had gone after taking a year's leave of absence from her job. Her parents and friends thought she was in the East studying.

At her request Mrs. Thorpe made all the hospital arrangements, and the day after the baby was born Mom took charge of it and started for Cleveland. Along the way she stopped at a roadside fruit stand and bought a half-bushel basket to put the infant in so that it wouldn't roll off the seat. It wasn't a pretty baby, she recalls—very red-faced and very noisy—and there certainly was nothing fancy about its makeshift bed. But as she drove along keeping one eye on the basket and one on the road she found herself saying—out loud—"You're going to be a very happy baby." The baby is partly grown up now, and is very happy indeed in a comfortable private home, but the rest of the story will never be told. Mrs. Thorpe has even destroyed the original records in her office files.

When a child first enters the Home it is sent to the hospital for a day or two for observation and a thorough medical checkup. It is then assigned to one of the five departments: the nursery, junior boys, junior girls, senior boys, or senior girls. (Juniors are three to eleven, seniors twelve and over.) Each department occupies a wing of its own, with a full-time governess (or male counselor for the older boys) in charge. The seniors sleep two to a room, in double-deck bunks or twin beds; the rest sleep dormitory style. Every baby, of course, has its individual crib with a big colorful Teddy bear or rabbit or doll which is always waiting at bedtime.

At 6:30 A.M. the telephones ring throughout the house as a signal to get up and dress for breakfast. Mom does not believe in uniforms, but she does believe strongly in clean clothes every day. One defect of the Home is that its architects provided no closet space, so that all clothing is stacked in piles on boxlike shelves in the combination dressing and bath rooms. The older girls sew and make their own dresses and underwear; other clothes come in as gifts, or as "make-overs" from secondhand contributions. But everything must be fresh-looking and wearable; Mrs. Thorpe likes nice clothes herself, and she does not allow her children to appear in patched or ragged garments.

SHOES are her biggest problem, since secondhand shoes are usually useless. Her annual bill for repairs and new shoes is between $600 and $700, which is plenty, but not bad when averaged among 135 children. Every child has at least three pairs: play shoes, school shoes and "best" shoes.

From the age of five every child has some regular duty such as scrubbing out wash-basins, making beds, sweeping floors or dusting window sills in his or her department. As a rule this takes about fifteen minutes in the morning and fifteen more at night, though some children are naturally slow, and spend an hour or more. Any other work which they do for the Home is paid for at regular hourly rates.

Breakfast is at 7, and from 7:15 to 8 the 82 children who attend public schools are taking their departure. Seniors are required to check in and out with the secretary at the reception desk so that Mom has a record of their whereabouts throughout the day. She also has the job of discussing their report cards with them—usually a pleasant one, but not always. Once when she took a third-grader named Mary to task for a bad report, she got only delighted smiles in reply.

Mom rarely gets provoked, but she did this time. "Look here, young lady," she admonished. "This is a serious matter and there's no excuse for it. You've got a good head on you. I don't like you to stand there laughing when I'm scolding you."

"I'm sorry, Mom," said Mary, wiping away a part of her smile. "But nobody ever looked at my report card before. I think it's nice when you do it."

RELIGION is an important but not a dominating factor in the everyday life of the Home. Most of the children attend Sunday school at the nearby Highland Avenue Christian Church, and those who want to stay for church services and take part in the young people's activities. At home they sing (not mutter!) grace before every meal—usually a single verse of a hymn. There is no chapel or compulsory Bible reading. A fifteen-minute period is set aside every evening for devotions—this can come before or after the study period, as they choose. Last summer the prayers in the junior-girls' department were especially fervent when three of the girls in this department were taken to the City Hospital with light attacks of what some doctors thought was polio. But all of them recovered quickly without any after-effects.

In fact, during all Mrs. Thorpe's regime at the Home she has not lost a single child out of 2000 from illness or accident, a truly remarkable record. Dr. John Kelker, a prominent Cleveland physician, whose father, also a doctor, helped to build the Home, gives his time and skill free in caring for the children.

In a house with 135 birthdays to celebrate there are always plenty of parties. Mom's personal contribution on every birthday is a handsomely decorated cake with the name of the lucky youngster on top. Other gifts come from the Masonic orders in Cleveland and from the "proxy parents" in various churches who adopt individual children, write to them, and keep track of their birthdays and other special occasions. A list of upcoming birthdays is printed every two months in Your Other Family, a magazine about life at the Home, which goes out to 33,000 subscribers.

Not long ago a red-haired young lady named Margery celebrated her fourteenth birthday and in the gift packages she opened were a new wool sweater, a play suit, three pairs of nylon hose, a silk slip and panties, and a string of pearls. In the evening the dozen girls in her department bought some ice cream as their treat and helped blow out the candles on her cake, and afterward they all engaged in their favorite indoor sport—"500 rummy." This was a typical, though perhaps rather quiet, birthday party, for it came when most of the boys were away from the Home.

The grand climax of all parties, and of the whole Home year, comes at Christmastime, when every one of Mom's youngsters is literally loaded down with gifts. Throughout the big house there are no less than seven Christmas trees, with the biggest of all—a twenty-one-foot whopper in the front hall—reaching all the way to the second-floor ceil-

(Continued on Page 155)

SHOULD A YOUNG WIDOW REMARRY?

"Of course she should!" Ed and Elaine Healey have been married four years now. With the two sons of her first marriage (aged thirteen and eight) and baby Adrienne, they've accomplished a happy, close-knit family life. "I know remarriage is a success," Elaine says. Even having two mothers-in-law doesn't daunt her.

Meet the Healeys, of Santa Rosa, California, in Second Marriage

By Ruth Shapley Matthews

in How America Lives in the January LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Nothing . . . no, nothing . . . can take the place of the tough cotton yarns that form the backbone of a CLOTH window shade. Without this strong, flexible base of firmly woven fabric, no window shade material can take the punishment of constant exposure and countless thousands of rollings and unrollings without shrinking, curling or sagging out of shape. CLOTH in a window shade, plastic-coated or oil-painted, is your guarantee of long-lasting, straight-hanging beauty. CLOTH window shades installed today will keep their smart, crisp, new look for years and years after substitute window shades have been thrown away!

Feel that fabric! At your dealer's, the Joanna Western Quality Demonstrator turns window shades "inside out" . . . lets you feel the difference between CLOTH and substitute materials.

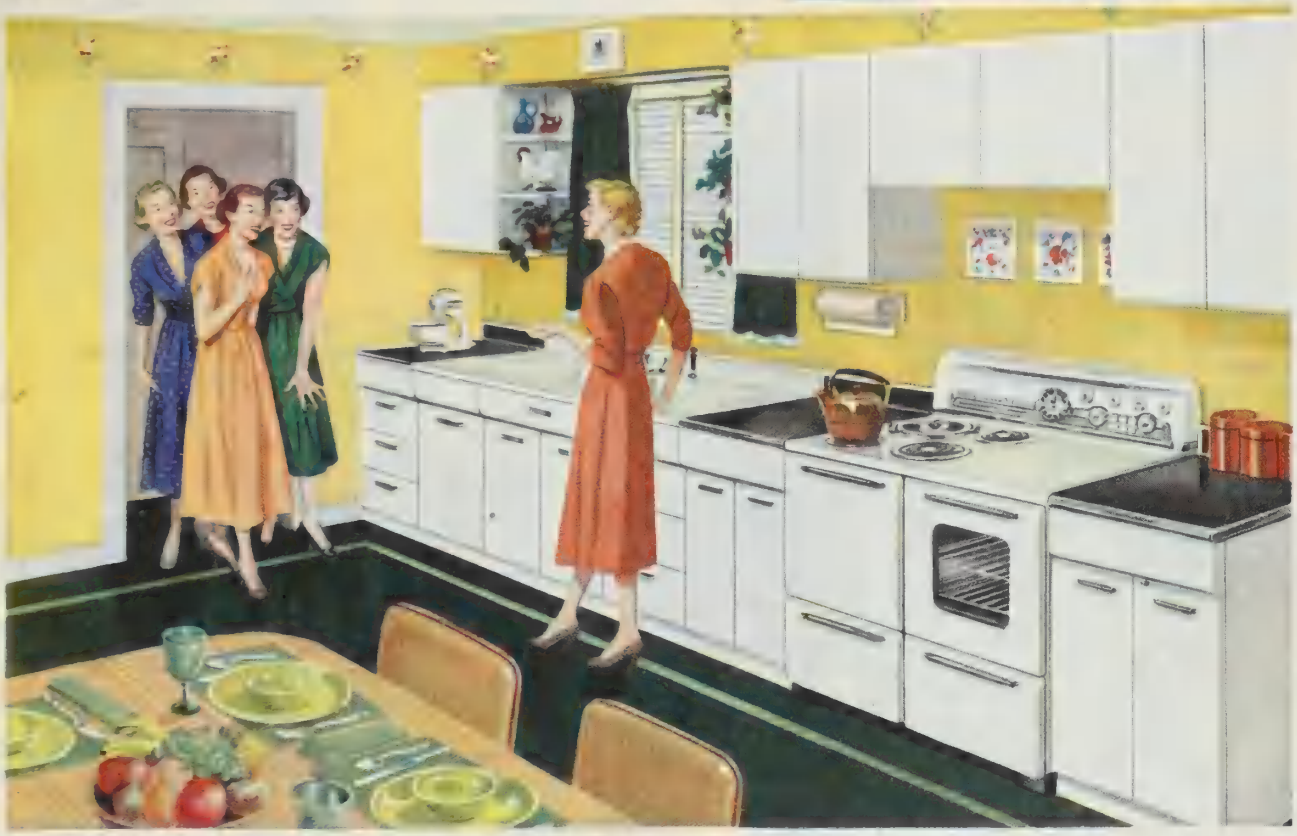
JOANNA WESTERN MILLS CO. · CHICAGO

BANISH THE "Ghost of the Past" FAST!

Keep your bathroom fresh and fragrant

Don't house this pest another day. Use Double-Action VANiSH—the toilet bowl cleaner that you can see go to work as soon as it hits the water. Its immediate bubbling action (1) cleans, as it (2) releases a pleasant fragrance that quickly freshens bathroom air. A household necessity. Buy VANiSH today.

Double-Action
VANISH KILLS TOILET ODORS AS IT CLEANS



FOR OPENING DRAINS use ELF—New, different, triple-action drain opener. It clears . . . cleans . . . deodorizes. At grocers everywhere.

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION, Dover, New Hampshire

When one word leads to another...

It's MURRAY this and MURRAY that!

MATCHED STEEL KITCHENS

AND I SAID...

My new Murray steel kitchen not only looks "high quality" . . . but feels that way, too! Drawers glide softly over brass runners. Doors are sound-insulated. Can't be noisy . . . never stick. Everything so rich and well-made!

AND SHE SAID...

Besides, it doesn't cost any more to own a beautiful Murray kitchen . . . so that's for me! Look at the rounded corners: no dresses or fingers snagged. And that baked enamel finish on cabinets, porcelain enamel on sinks is so easy to keep gleaming white!

ELECTRIC RANGES

DON'T TELL ME...

I know about those new Murray ranges. Extra-large ovens, appliance outlet (for coffee makers, mixers, and so on), and the Deep Well—all can be timed automatically.

WHY, DO YOU KNOW...

Four out of 5 Murray Electric Ranges have a big 6-quart Deep Well Cooker! Top models have compartments for cooking a whole meal at once. Easily convert it to a fourth 7-heat-intensity surface unit by simply lifting the heating unit to the top.

GAS RANGES

AND MY HUSBAND...

Well, he's enough of a cook to know a wonderful gas range when he sees one! It didn't take long to convince him to buy a Murray. As for me . . . I finally have plenty of "turkey-space" in my porcelain-finished oven!

WELL, ALL I KNOW IS...

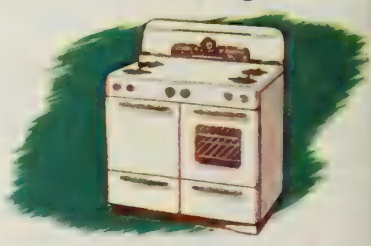
No more burner bowl seams to catch grease. The one-piece top flows right over the front edge of the range . . . no dirt-catching crevice here! For a completely style-matched kitchen it's Murray for me . . . and for you!

NO ONE MAKES KITCHENS LIKE

MURRAY

THE MURRAY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, Home Appliance Division, SCRANTON, PA.

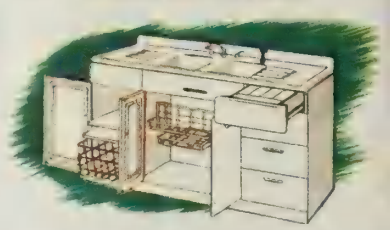
MURRAY



Electric Ranges

High-Speed Electric Ranges for completely automatic baking. Non-steam oven door (model above) always gives clear view of your cooking. All ranges have giant ovens, fully porcelain-enameled; rounded, easily-cleaned corners. A signal lights when baking, broiling, or surface units are on! Built-in fluorescent range lamp. 5 models in all.

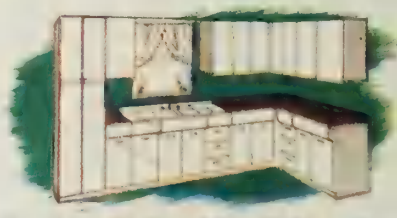
MURRAY



Gas Ranges

Streamlined Gas Ranges have one piece seamless tops. Robertshaw precision thermostat. Interval timing! Ever-white Titanium porcelain enamel—for a lifetime of service. Use any type gas. Broiler has slide-out "smokeless" pan and grid. Concealed drip trays. All ranges fully Fiberglas insulated!

MURRAY



Cabinet Sinks

Marvelous Cabinet Sinks for fingertip control of most any kitchen operation. Model above (66") features double drain boards, double basins! Five full drawers, slide-back cutlery tray! Cabinet space, shelves, utility racks, breadboard, vegetable basket. Other styles 54" and 42".

MURRAY

Modern Cabinets

Matching Wall and Base Cabinets have welded construction, silent action! Smooth rounded corners. No protruding handles on wall cabinets. Provision for fluorescent lighting! Base cabinets have wear-proof stain-resistant Vinyl tops. Recesses for toe and knee space. Adjustable shelves.

YOUR NEW MURRAY KITCHEN comes from one of the world's largest most modern plants. Over 1,500,000 highest-quality Murray-made appliances are in homes coast-to-coast!

(Continued from Page 153)

g. For a week beforehand the children are sy decorating the trees, hanging mistletoe d holly, and singing carols in front of om's bedroom door. On Christmas Eve ere is a party for everybody, including siting parents and relatives, in the audi- rium, with both Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus nding out gifts and candy, and a vaude- lle program of clowns, tumblers, acrobats d—on one memorable occasion—a live ained pig. Individual presents are dis- ibuted the next morning under the Christ- as trees in each department.

Christmas dinner is always turkey, and on at day each child who has a visitor sits ith his guest at table. No matter what else e children get for Christmas, the thrill of troducing their mother, or father, or big ster, is usually the biggest of all.

For many days before this important oc- sion loads of gifts arrive at the Home. ach of them is carefully identified, un- rapped and then rewrapped with orna- ental paper and tags by Otto, Mrs. horpe's husband, and the older boys. The ason for this occurred many years ago hen Mom watched a ten-year-old girl reak open a big bundle that had come to er marked "Merry Christmas." Inside were torn pair of boy's blue jeans and a ragged oat which had obviously seen hard usage or years before they were passed along in uch a thoughtless manner. The youngster urst into tears, which Mom soon wiped way with an armful of the "extra" gifts she lways has handy.

"Did you ever see a child crying under a Christmas tree?" she asked, in telling me his incident. "It's something you wouldn't vant to see again. And—crossing my fin- gers—we've never had it happen here but nce."

Anna Thorpe was born 55 years ago at Middlesboro, Kentucky. Her father was a Northern Civil War veteran—he had been a very young drummer boy—and her mother was a Southern girl he had met in Chat- anooga after the war. "She ran away from home and married him just to spite her family," Mom says. "I guess that's where I got my fighting spirit." By an odd chance both her parents were orphans, just as she was, and as her present husband was. Her father's parents died of cholera while trek- king west in a covered wagon; their bodies lie in a small pioneers' cemetery at Sandusky, Ohio. Her maternal grandfather was of high- born French and Scottish descent, a doctor with a degree from the Sorbonne in Paris; he died in early middle age from arsenic which got into his system through a cut finger while treating a patient.

Anna's father, James Noble, was an in- teresting and slightly mysterious personage to her. His occupation was shaping orna- mental plaster frescoes to decorate the walls and ceilings of Southern mansions and hotels. He traveled a great deal, but when he was home he took her on fishing trips and let her lie on a blanket beside him while he puffed his pipe and dangled a line in some placid Southern stream. He died of heart disease when she was eight years old, and her mother soon followed.

ANNA and her younger brother were sent to the Soldiers and Sailors Home at Xenia, Ohio, a large institution intended solely for the destitute offspring of veterans. The children lived in stone cottages, 26 to a cottage, with one bathtub to go around, and straw ticks to sleep on. Every six months they carried the ticks to the barn and filled them themselves—when they brought them back to their beds they would jump up and down on them all afternoon to try to make a little hollow place in the center to lie on. But they were as hard as boards for the first few weeks they were used.

Anna and her 500 fellow orphans wore dark denim uniforms, with heavy muslin underwear beneath and black cotton stock- ings; they attended school and chapel on the grounds, and led regimented lives under semimilitary discipline. (By state law the superintendent of the Home was an ex- Army officer.) At Christmas they were allowed two presents each—an article of clothing and one "useful" object which they could select themselves. For her first Christ- mas Anna chose a "telescope," an old- fashioned kind of traveling bag which folds up when not in use, with the idea of running away as soon as she got it. But when it came, she lost her nerve and stayed.

From the time she was old enough to read and think about things, she was fiercely de- termined to do something for other children. Her first plan was to be a children's doctor, which of course meant college. But when she was "graduated" at seventeen, the staff asked her to stay on at the home and help organize a library. She worked at this for two years, saving some money, and then one day walked into the Xenia bank and asked for a loan to go to college.

The cashier was too startled to say any- thing, but the bank president overheard her and asked her to come to his office. "Just why do you think we should make you a loan?" he asked. "Why, that's what banks are for, aren't they?" demanded Anna. The president told her to come back to a board of directors' meeting and state her case. The directors solemnly loaned her $500—without security. She didn't learn until years later that the president himself had endorsed her note.

During her summers at Ohio State she taught in the mountaineers' school at Berea, Kentucky, and decided that she couldn't

I told him he lied; he told me I lied. I spit in his face; he spit in my face. I slapped him in the face; he slapped me in the face. I kicked him; he kicked me. I tripped him up; he tripped me up. I struck him and knocked him down; he got up and knocked me down. I then got mad. . . . We were just agoing to fight when the saloonkeeper got between us.

—OLIVER H. SMITH:
Early Indiana Trials and Sketches.

wait to be a doctor. She wanted to get to work right away. So she took a full-time job at the Berea school. The summer when she was twenty-three she came back to Xenia for a reunion and was introduced to Col. Frank Garver, a Spanish-American War vet- eran and new member of the home's board of directors. Colonel Garver was a bachelor, from Strasburg, Ohio, where his family for generations operated a country store—"Everything from a Pin to a Plowshare"—that has since become nationally famous. Although twenty-eight years older than Anna, he fell very much in love with her, and during the next Christmas week they were married. ("Christmas," says Anna, "is al- ways my most vulnerable time.")

Soon afterward Colonel Garver was ap- pointed superintendent of the Xenia home and made Anna his assistant, with full charge of the children and their affairs. She was only twenty-three then, perhaps the youngest person who ever held such a job. The first thing she did was to throw out the old straw ticks and order 500 brand-new cotton-stuffed mattresses. Next she abolished corporal punishment by the matrons—"If a child needs spanking, bring him to me," she directed. Some of the older employees, who remembered Anna herself as a tow- haired little girl, were not inclined to heed this order. One day she walked into the dining room just in time to see a matron give a boy a resounding box on the ears.

"I knew I shouldn't do it, but I just couldn't help myself," she recalls. "Young as I was, I just drew back and gave that matron a box across her ears. Of course she quit her job at the home, and some of the others left too. But I was a hero to the chil- dren from then on."

She also proved an effective lobbyist. Need- ing $150,000 for a new school building, she went to Columbus herself to talk to a com- mittee of legislators. Many others were there with similar pleas, and all had graphs and charts and statistics to support their cases. Anna suddenly realized that she had brought nothing except her own statement that her children needed a school. Hearing the man just ahead of her argue that he needed a building "to get children in off the streets," Anna found her cue. When she stood up she said she didn't need money to get children off the streets, but to "keep them from ever going there." She got the appropriation.

She had been at Xenia six years when she was invited to look over the newly built Cleveland Christian Home and make rec- ommendations for running it. The Home had been started in 1903 by the Rev. Henry Timme, a poor Cleveland minister who took occasional orphans into his own home and raised them. After his death his own three children came to live at the Home and his widow, "Mother Timme," worked there for many years as a cook and specialist in doughnuts. In 1925, after several years of campaigning and fund raising among the churches, the present 75-room building was erected at a cost of $200,000.

Anna found the place well equipped phys- ically, but lacking in organization and plans. On the second day of her visit she was talk- ing with the temporary matron when a boy came walking through the front door with a watermelon under his arm.

"You tell him to take that back," the other woman directed Anna. "I never said he could have a watermelon."

"I didn't either," said Anna. "And I can't tell him to take it back. You're in charge here."

"Oh, no, I'm not," said the matron, tossing the keys on her desk. "You are." And she packed her bag, called a taxicab and drove away. Anna picked up the keys, and has held them ever since.

RUNNING a home, or a Home, is not all a matter of giving love and security to chil- dren. There is also the hard problem of mak- ing both ends meet financially. It costs about $140,000 to run the Cleveland Christian Home, or a little more than $1000 a year per child. And there is, literally, no guaranteed source of income. Every cent that goes out for food and shoes and salaries has to come from donations—the present endowment of less than $4000 is too small to count on a 1½-per-cent-interest basis.

It cost Anna $3500 to plant the hundreds of trees and shrubs which make the Home an oasis of shade and beauty in a noisy, traffic-ridden section of Cleveland. She got the work done, first by begging a famous landscape architect to draw up the plans on speculation, and then by begging the funds from a well-to-do Christian Church in Canton, Ohio. Each of her problems has been met the same way. During her first fifteen years at the Home she was on the road at least half the time, driving from meeting to meeting, church to church, and state to state. She traveled 50,000 miles a year, pleading, cajoling, exploding, telling everyone who would listen that her children must be cared for. Sometimes she would take two or three of them along to help tell the story; always when she returned the older ones were waiting for her, and if it was very late, there would be two or three girls rolled up in their blankets in front of her bedroom door.

Eventually she put together a network of 800 "Home Representatives" (one for each church) and 200 "Front-Line Churches" (each of which contributes $350 a year or more) to do the bulk of this work for her. She still makes many trips, but she spends more time with her children.

One of her best weapons is the colorful and highly readable Your Other Family, which has been built up from a circulation of 350 to 33,000 under the professional editor- ship of Mrs. E. W. McAdam, who also edits Music Magazine, in Cleveland. Filled with stories and pictures of the children, as well as their own poems, letters and other writ- ings, this is far more attractive than most publicity appeals.

Most of Mrs. Thorpe's contributions come from low-income families, in $1 and $5 bills. Very rarely indeed is there a really large Stuck with a mess of crusty pans?

BRILLO

gives TWICE the SHINE in HALF the TIME!

New "Scorchy Pan" Tests prove Brillo shines crusty pans better and faster than all other types of cleansers tested! Scientific shine-meter records show Brillo actually gives aluminums twice the shine in half the time!

A square, metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap just whisks off greasy, scorchy crust! And the "jeweler's polish" in Brillo soap does the brightest, speediest shine job yet! No scraping! No scrub- bing! And Brillo guarantees re- sults. If Brillo fails to clean a utensil, you get a new one—free!

★ RED box—soap-filled pads
★ GREEN box—pads and cake soap

There's jeweler's polish in BRILLO

Don't those baker's sweet rolls look simply wonderful?

They taste as good as they look! Because modern bakers use the same high quality ingredients you would use; bake fresh daily with the same care you would take.

Sweet rolls are good and nourishing, too. There's milk in them. And flour. And sugar. You get protein, calcium and lots of other essential elements when you eat a sweet roll.

So why make every breakfast hard work to prepare? Instead, just start the coffee, fix the fruit . . . and bring out a plate of sweet rolls!

Get some today—at your bake-shop, your grocer's or from the baker who calls at your door. And be sure to order sweet rolls when you eat in restaurants.

For extra goodness . . . warm sweet rolls before serving.

Buy some SWEET ROLLS today...

See how good they are!

Bakers of America

© 1950, American Bakers Association, Chicago

gift. The largest she ever got, and the most unexpected, came from a shabbily dressed old man who used to walk in eight miles from his home in suburban Berea every Saturday to shop near the Home. The reason he walked was to save a 5-cent carfare. One hot afternoon he wandered into the shady grounds and sat down on a bench, wiping his forehead. The children clustered around him, as they do any visitor, and Mrs. Thorpe sent one of them in to get a glass of water. "Come back any time," she told him.

After that he made the Home a regular stopping place on his carfare-saving walks, and when he died he left it his entire estate—$45,000. Mom put that money in her building fund, along with other substantial gifts, and after twenty-five years of saving she now has $250,000 to start a much-needed addition to the Home next spring.

During the past year she has had to turn away 640 children, including more than 100 babies. She doesn't like to do that.

Mom's personal life is so completely merged into that of the Home that there is almost nothing to say about it. She has never had any children of her own. Colonel Garver, her first husband, moved to Cleveland when she did, and died in 1934. In 1940 she married Otto Thorpe, a skillful mechanic and lover of children, who had grown up with her at Xenia, and is now chief maintenance man at the Cleveland Home. Every summer Otto takes the older boys to his own camp on Lake Campbell, in the Michigan woods, where they swim and raise vegetables for the Home and learn trades and handicrafts.

The Thorpes' personal quarters are two tiny rooms on the second floor of the Home, with barely enough space for a bed a dresser in one, and two chairs, a table, de and some European water colors in the othe Mrs. Thorpe's salary as superintendent $300 a month and her husband's is $20 About half of hers goes right back into t Home—not long ago, for instance, s treated herself to a new set of office furnitu and gray metal filing cases. "I got tired looking at the old green ones," she says. F this she laid out nearly $300 of her ov money. Her only weakness is hats; she bu eight or ten of them every year, and almo as fast as she gets them gives them aw to friends who admire them.

Otto spends his money on the camp, whi has eleven buildings, all largely devoted Home purposes. He also puts $700 a ye into life insurance, which represents the or savings they both have. About every thr or four years they take a long vacation gether—Mom likes to travel and she h motored through England, France, G many, Switzerland, Italy, Mexico and H waii.

Sometime, she says, after the Home been enlarged to take in all the children w need to come there, the Thorpes are goi to have at least one real room of their ov She has always liked and bought good boo and she has many boxes of them stored aw What she would like is enough space some bookshelves and a wide window fac out into the back yard.

"Why the back yard?" I asked her, a her answer came with a smile that lit up round, pleasant face.

"So that I can watch the children pl ing," she said.

LOVE AT SECOND SIGHT

(Continued from Page 57)

when he made his will. You must remember that Anglo-Bombays were a falling issue then, whereas gilt-edged ——"

"I know all about gilt-edged," Dorothea observed crisply. "It's Anglo-Bombays that I've come to talk about. What are they standing at now?"

"Twelve and a half," I said reluctantly.

"And what were they standing at when father died?"

"About five, I think."

"It was four and a quarter," Dorothea corrected me. She was always distressingly accurate about figures.

"Well, four and a quarter, then," I agreed. "And during the following year when they passed their final dividend they slumped to two. For that year Rose and Janet only had an income of three hundred pounds a year each, compared with your fifteen hundred."

"Less tax," said Dorothea. "But what's their income now?"

"About three thousand pounds," I answered. "And also less tax."

"Compared with my fifteen hundred?"

"Yes."

"Is that what father intended?"

I explained wearily to Dorothea that I didn't know what her father intended. All I knew was what he had actually done. What he had done was to arrange that Dorothea had a fixed and certain income while her sisters might have nothing and might have twice as much as she had. I had little doubt in my own mind that if the new oil field which had sent Anglo-Bombays soaring had been discovered a year before his death instead of a year after, he would have worded his will quite differently. But I saw no point in mentioning that to Dorothea. He had worded it in such a way as to leave me powerless to make any adjustment.

Dorothea listened to me quite patiently. "Well," she said at the end, "you really do your stuff very nicely, Charlie. Just like a guide showing sight-seers round some rather uninteresting ruins. But wasn't there something else in the will you haven't mentioned?"

I gazed at her. "No, I don't think so."

"Wasn't there to be some kind of rearrangement if I got married?"

That knocked me completely off my balance for a moment. The clause was there, of course. Share and share alike between three sisters if Dorothea got married. But all the confirmed and incorrigible spinste Dorothea seemed to me to be the most sp sterish, and I simply hadn't considered possibility.

"Dorothea, you're not ——" I began.

"Never mind what I'm going to do," answered rather tartly. "I just want know about the will. If my figures are c rect, I make it that my income this y would be twenty-eight hundred and fi pounds if I were married."

I checked the figures and had to agree t they were correct.

"Well, that wouldn't make it worth risk," she went on blandly. "But if Ang Bombays went up to eighteen, say, and p another twenty per cent more, then my come as a married woman would be for five hundred pounds, wouldn't it?"

Again I agreed that her figures were c rect and she began to put on her gloves.

"Well then, that's settled," she sa "When Anglo-Bombays go up to eighteen get married."

"But, Dorothea, people don't get m ried for reasons like that!"

"Why not? It's a much more sensible r son than the one people generally do get m ried for."

"But supposing you got married a Anglo-Bombays slumped again. You could go back to your fixed income, you know."

"Of course I know. I'm not a fool, Ch lie. But I don't think Anglo-Bombays going to slump again."

"Perhaps not. But aren't you quite co fortable on your fifteen hundred pounds year?"

"Quite fairly comfortable, Charlie. Bu want to buy my house and I can't do that my present income with all the taxes."

"You could go to a building society, Do thea. It wouldn't be nearly as risky."

"I like risks," she ended quietly. "A besides, it would make Rose and Janet furious. I know it's horrid of me to talk li that. But you don't know how nasty they been to me all my life; nasty about mone nasty because I didn't have a husband. Wh I might even do it if Anglo-Bombays or went up to seventeen!"

We were at the door by this time and I held out my hand to say good-by. As she took it she looked up at me in a very queer way.

"Don't you think that I'd make quite a nice wife, Charlie?" she asked.

I assured her that she would make a very nice wife; but I did feel compelled to add that she had left it rather late in life and that some husbands had tiresome habits as well as expensive tastes.

But even that did not seem to deter her. She was smiling quietly to herself as she walked down the stairs.

I had always liked Dorothea much better than either Janet or Rose. There was a certain strain of meanness in the whole family, but I think Dorothea would have grown up into a normal, openhearted young woman if she hadn't been snubbed and sneered at so much by her elder sisters. And she wasn't nearly so rapacious as those two. They had sat in my office only three years earlier and made a most determined attempt to muscle in on Dorothea's gilt-edged. That, of course, was the first year after Uncle Hamish's death, when Anglo-Bombays had passed their final dividend. They had been quite ready then to swear that their father was of unsound mind when he made the will. The only thing that stopped their going to these lengths to set the will aside was the discovery of the new oil field and the sudden unexpected boom in Anglo-Bombays.

Another thing I disliked about Rose and Janet was their snobbishness. Our mutual grandfather was of very humble origin: a crofter, in fact. Like other crofters of his time, he had a large family, and the sons went out into the world to fend for themselves. My father went to South America while Uncle Hamish went East and there laid the foundation of his fortune by a lucky speculation in Anglo-Bombays when nobody knew if they were worth anything or not.

It was Rose and Janet who made him buy a large country place when he came home, and thereafter they behaved as though they had been landed gentry for generations. They wouldn't look at anyone whom they thought beneath them socially; and having at last secured husbands who were reasonably well connected, they spent the rest of their time bickering as to whether the fourth cousin of a marquess was superior to the third cousin of an earl. The only time they stopped bickering was when they joined forces to try to muscle in on Dorothea's gilt-edged. Prestige might be important to them, but money was more important still.

DOROTHEA, on the other hand, was a simple creature at heart, quite proud of her lowly origin; and she was also a superb gardener, which is generally a sign of undisclosed spiritual assets. What worried me after this interview, however, was not her simplicity, but her tenacity and determination. I could still remember an occasion when she was nine years old and my young brother had foolishly dared her to climb a certain tree. It was an outrageous, impossible tree; and I, arriving five seconds too late, had watched helplessly from the ground, sweating at every pore, imploring her to stop, while she went right to the top and down again. Such singleness of purpose in a woman is terrifying, and I may say that my alarm now would have been greater still if I had been a single man. But even though I was spared that anxiety, I couldn't help meditating on the strange way in which destiny was lying in wait for some other unsuspecting male if Anglo-Bombays happened to go to over 17 or 18.

Fortunately for my peace of mind, Anglo-Bombays had a setback about this time. They slithered back to under twelve, and it wasn't till six months later that they reached 17¼ for the first time.

On that morning Dorothea appeared in my office and began to take off her gloves. "Have you seen the stock prices this morning, Charlie?" she asked.

"Yes," I admitted. "Consols are down an eighth again."

"Never mind about consols!" she went on briskly. "Anglo-Bombays are over seventeen and I'm going to get married."

I played with my pen for a few seconds. "Well, congratulations!" I said at last. "Who is he, Dorothea?"

DOROTHEA shrugged her shoulders. "I don't know," she answered. "And I don't think it matters much." Then she gave me one of her sharp, shrewd looks. "I think I am right in saying that all I have to do in order to get my share of the Anglo-Bombays is to become legally married?"

"And all that that implies!" I added quickly.

"But I don't think that it does imply anything more. I don't have to live with him or anything like that."

"Well, Dorothea, as no doubt you realize, marriage ——"

"Now don't fiddle-faddle, Charlie. All I want to know is whether I am correct in what I say or whether I am not."

"I'm afraid you are perfectly correct," I admitted.

"Very well, then, as my solicitor it's your duty to find me a husband, Charlie. Someone who will marry me quite legally and then never see me again."

I needed time to concoct a suitable answer to this and began to fumble with my pen again.

Dorothea then went on impatiently, "Now don't pretend, Charlie, that solicitors haven't done this kind of thing before. They did it during the war so that women could become British subjects and be saved from the Nazis."

"That's true enough, Dorothea, but ——"

"It's also done, I understand, by certain women who don't wish to be deported."

"They aren't very desirable women!"

"I never said they were, Charlie. The point is that it's legal and that a solicitor has to do it. The only thing that really remains to be decided is how much I ought to pay the man. Now I thought fifty pounds would be about the right amount."

At this point I at last managed to weigh in with my views on the matter. I agreed that such things had been done and were still being done. I admitted that it was possible to get the man to sign a declaration that he would never see the woman he married after the ceremony, or molest her in any way. But such a declaration was very little protection to her. He might not keep his promise. He might blackmail her for the rest of her life, and Rose and Janet might dispute the validity of such a marriage, though as far as I could see it would be just valid enough for the purposes of the will. Finally I told her that if she persisted in this odd and dangerous idea, she would have to do two things: go to another solicitor, and pay the man enough to keep him sweet and quiet.

Dorothea was quite unabashed when I had finished. "Perhaps fifty pounds is too little," she admitted. "Do you think a hundred would be too much?"

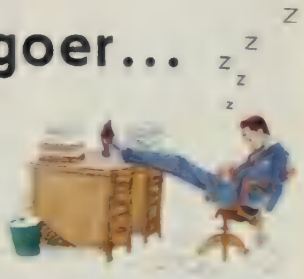
"My dear Dorothea, I think a thousand would probably be insufficient, but as I have told you, I am not interested in the proposition."

"Do you really mean that, Charlie?" Dorothea was already putting on her gloves.

"Yes, I mean it."

"But you admit there are hundreds of solicitors in London who would do it for me?"

"Hundreds and hundreds, Dorothea, and they would charge you hundreds too."



THE DEVIL TO PAY

This is an old phrase in English, which has been known since 1400. The "devil" is a seam in a ship's hull, either on or below the water line. The complete phrase seems to be "Here's the devil to pay and there's no pitch hot." The word pay means to smear a seam with hot tar or pitch. It was once a custom to careen a vessel so that as the tide went out the underwater seams would be exposed. Of course the pitch would never be hot and the tide would not wait, so there was the devil to pay and no pitch hot.

BREAD helps make a go-getter...

out of a let-it-goer...

HERE'S WHY: FLOUR + MILK + SUGAR + SHORTENING + YEAST & SALT + VITAMINS = ENRICHED BREAD

Add it up! Bread isn't just one good food that's good to eat—it's many-good-foods-in-one.

And all those good foods in it—foods that are rich in protein, calcium, iron and other essential elements—make bread a wonderful source of the energy it takes to get ahead in this world!

So, make bread a part of breakfast every day in the year. Put your toaster on the table and enjoy hot, crisp, buttered toast.

Remember! Penny for penny, enriched bread (the kind baker bakes) provides more of the things the body needs—more generously—than any other food you eat at every meal. Bread is your best food buy!

Bakers of America

©1950, American Bakers Association, Chicago

Eat more BREAD... your best food buy

For holiday or everyday

...for festive feast or daily dining, there's nothing provides that certain something, that Elegant touch to the table, like Ripe Olives.

Perky in appetizers... a tempting treat on your relish dish... a taste-triumph in your turkey dressing.

And downright delectable any time you set out the Olive Bowl.

Ripe Olives from California

Write for FREE booklet of Elegant Ripe Olive Recipes:
Olive Advisory Board, Room 1205
16 Beale Street, San Francisco 5, California

MAKE SYRUP... ONLY 9¢ A PINT MAPLEINE

USE KITCHEN Bouquet

TO MAKE GRAVY EXTRA RICH· BROWN·DELICIOUS

It's easy to make your gravy extra-rich, extra-brown, extra-delicious every time. Just stir in Kitchen Bouquet! Ah! What rich, brown color and how it brings out that true meat taste! Adds no artificial flavor. Good cooks have used Kitchen Bouquet for over 70 years.

COSTS SO LITTLE —ADDS SO MUCH!

"I think it's very wrong of you, Charlie. You're a capable lawyer and a tactful one. You shouldn't drive me to going to one of these dubious people."

"I'm not driving you to anything, Dorothea. You're driving yourself, and in my opinion you're a very dangerous driver."

We were now doing our end piece by the door. Dorothea held out her hand with that queer smile of hers.

"Well, I'll give you a fortnight to think it over, Charlie," she ended. "After that I'll go up to London. In the meantime, if you find some nice, hard-working, reliable man who wants to buy his house, for instance, I'll go up to five hundred pounds for him. I'm not mean like Rose and Janet."

I am not going to pretend that my conscience is quite clear over the whole matter; but it would have been quite clear if fate hadn't stepped in. I couldn't prevent Dorothea's going to some shady solicitor, but I could refuse to have anything to do with it myself, and I fully intended to. But then only a week later I had to go up to London myself and ran into Algie Winthrop in St. James's Street.

Algie and I had been at the same college at the university, and although I wasn't in his smart set, I had been very fond of him. He never did a stroke of work, of course. But then if you are descended from a long line of beaus, dandies, spendthrifts and playboys, you can't be expected to take to work in the simple, natural way that the duck takes to water. Algie's university career ended very properly in his being sent down, and his subsequent progress was everything that might be expected. He married two chorus girls and ran through three fortunes. That kind of life is great fun when you are young, but it isn't so good when you begin to get old. And when I saw Algie's shambling figure in St. James's Street and noticed the decay as well as the distinction in his appearance, I realized that in RAF language the poor old boy had had it.

However, that did not come out immediately. We shook hands like two long-lost friends.

"Algie! Why, it must be almost ten years since we met!"

"More than that, Charlie old boy. How nice to see you! How's everything?"

"Fine, fine. What are you doing here? I thought you lived in France now."

"Just over for a short visit, old boy."

"Well, can you lunch with me? I was just going down to my club now."

"No, no, you have lunch with me, old boy."

"I suggested it first, Algie. And my club's nearer than yours."

I didn't know then, of course, that Algie no longer had a club. It was when we had sat down to lunch that things began to come out. We had just ordered what we wanted and I was leaning across, beaming at him.

"This is like old times, Algie. Now tell me really. How's everything? How are you?"

"Top of the world, old boy," he answered mechanically. Then something went wrong with the works and his face lengthened. "Matter of fact, I'm in a bit of a jam."

"Not for the first time, Algie, is it?"

"No, no." He smiled faintly. "But this is rather a bad jam."

"Money, Algie?"

"Yes, a check—three checks, to be exact, old boy. What's worse, they say it's obtaining money by false pretenses."

"Oh!"

"I've always paid my debts, Charlie . . . in the end. I don't think they ought to call it false pretenses when a check bounces."

"One check, Algie?"

"Well, three checks."

"They're not going to prosecute, are they?"

"Unless I raise the money by Friday, that's just what they are going to do."

"How much is it?"

"About seven hundred pounds. Nothing big."

"H'm! And can you raise the money, Algie?"

"Not a hope."

I learned a good deal more about Algie as the lunch progressed. His one remaining asset was a small villa in the South of France which his Aunt Charlotte had left him. There was also a monthly remittance paid him in francs by Aunt Charlotte's trustees. That was so small that he couldn't even afford a servant, and he couldn't possibly convert either the remittance or the villa into pounds in the present state of exchange complications. He had been saving up for three years for this visit to England and had relied on a certain horse to pay his fare back to France again. The horse had failed him, and one thing had followed another until the checks began to bounce. In fact, it was one of the oldest stories in the world. And the future, in so far as Algie was concerned, looked extraordinarily bleak.

I ordered two large glasses of vintage port after lunch. I did it simply to cheer poor Algie up. What I didn't realize was the effect the port was going to have on me myself. The effect it did have was to bring out all my suppressed philanthropic tendencies and make me want to do the old boy a good turn. That explains how my tongue got several paces ahead of my normal good judgment.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

It's Better to be Sorry

By Blanda Bradbury

It's better one should love,
although unwisely.
When the heart is swept and clean and bare,
Only a mousy creature called
Self-pity
Seeks asylum there.

It's better to be sorry than be lonely.
So, before the darkness can begin,
Spread the supper, trim the lamp whose light
Invites the robber in.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"You're not married at the moment, are you, Algie?" I asked suddenly.

"No," he said rather vaguely. "I don't think so."

"Well, you must be certain about it. We don't want to make a mistake over a thing like that."

"But I am certain, old boy. Marjorie divorced me and I divorced Paula. So I'm certainly not married."

"Very well, then, Algie. I believe we could raise a thousand pounds if you got married again."

Algie stared at me and finally shook his head. "Very decent of you to think of it, old boy," he said. "But really I'd rather go to prison. More restful, you know."

"But you wouldn't have to live with her, Algie."

"What!"

"In fact, you'd have to sign a declaration to the effect that you'd never see her again after the marriage ceremony."

"I'd do that all right, old boy. Wish I'd thought of it with both Marjorie and Paula. . . . But what in the world are you talking about, Charlie?"

"Just that I have a client, a very respectable lady client, who has reasons, good financial reasons, for wishing to be married."

"Without having a husband?"

"Exactly."

"And she'd pay a thousand pounds for me to marry her?"

"Five hundred was what she actually said, Algie. But I think we could get her up to a thousand. . . . Have another glass of port?"

"Thanks, old boy, I will."

That is how it all came about. And of course by the time I had sobered down again it was too late. Algie and I had already given notice of the wedding at the registry office of the district in which he was living.

I had a good deal of trouble over the extra five hundred pounds with Dorothea, and more still with my own conscience over a good many things. However, everything went more or less according to plan. I went surety for Algie's debts until the money was handed over, and I had no difficulty in getting him to sign the required declaration.

It was only a month later that the ceremony took place in a red-brick registrar's office. I was rather torn in my mind whether I ought to be a witness or not. On the one hand, it might make me an accessory both before and after the fact. On the other, I thought I could argue that, as I couldn't stop Dorothea's taking this unusual step, it was right and proper for me as her trustee to see that the proceedings were in every way legal. So I went. To be quite honest, wild horses wouldn't have kept me away.

Needless to say, neither Rose nor Janet was there, and I did not sign the register myself. We pulled in a man and a woman from the street for that purpose and rewarded them with five shillings each for their pains. One of them had a defective tear duct, which did not enliven the proceedings. Otherwise everything went very well. Dorothea wore a tailor-made and a blue toque and Algie was quite distinguished in a well-cut but aged gray suit. The registrar himself did better still and had on a morning coat and pin-stripe trousers. He was a bright, officious little man, and when there was a slight hiatus at the end of the ceremony, he rubbed his hands briskly and exclaimed, "Well, well. That's that. And now, I think, this is the moment when the bridegroom kisses the bride."

Algie, of course, did it superbly. You could always trust Algie on an occasion like that. Dorothea, for the matter of that, played it very well too. She looked almost as though she were grateful, and I found myself wondering whether it was the first time in her life that she had been kissed by a man.

After that there was a good deal of unnecessary handshaking and finally the happy pair drove off in the hired Daimler while the two witnesses waved feebly from the pavement. There was no rice, no confetti and no shoes, and I had no idea what the bride and bridegroom found to say to each other in the car. I do know that Dorothea drove him to the station, and, I believe, actually saw him on to the train on his way to France. Dorothea never left anything to chance. As for myself, I walked briskly along to my club and had two large glasses of sherry in quick succession. The sherry there was as good as the port, and after I had fortified myself with it there was only one little thing that still worried me. There was just one rather important bit of information about Algie which I had withheld.

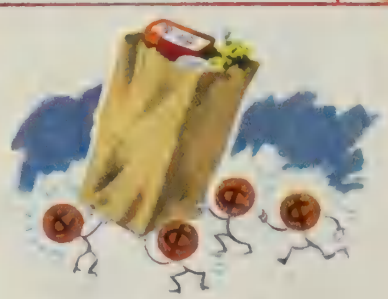
The next thing was to break the news to Rose and Janet. I preferred to do this by letter, and enclosed a copy of the marriage certificate as well as a copy of the will. The reply also came by letter—solicitor's letter—and the fight was on. I had persuaded Dorothea to go to Bournemouth for a time so as to get her out of the way, but the other solicitors soon found out where she was and pointed out that there wasn't any sign of a husband living with her. What had I got to say to that? I replied that I was unaware of any statute, bylaw or regulation which obliged husbands and wives to live together continuously; that the point at issue was whether the marriage was legal or not; and that unless they could find some flaw in it, I proposed to proceed with the redistribution of the estate funds in accordance with the terms of the will.

The correspondence then increased rapidly both in volume and in violence. I knew that if the opposing solicitors really thought they had a case they would go to law at once. I was relieved when they didn't, and some six weeks later we had reached that point in legal wrangling when they were pretending that they had something important up their

(Continued on Page 160)

"I think your price policy is wonderful"

• This is the time of year when thousands of families give extra cheers for A&P's Low Price Policy. For holiday feasting usually calls for extra buying, and it's nice to know that you can make extra savings at A&P, where prices are low every day. You see, storewide low prices on hundreds of items every day save you more on your total food bill. And thousands of families are proving it—more of them are shopping at A&P Super Markets than ever before!



Count on your A&P to have everything for your holiday feasting... from succulent turkeys to candies, fruitcakes and nuts.

Decide now to eat better, and save more than ever, by making A&P your headquarters for food buying. See how storewide low prices on hundreds of items every day can save you more than a few items priced low for a few days.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING THE EASY WAY!

You can do all your shopping for holiday meals (and every meal!) the easy, thrifty, one-stop A&P way. You'll find everything you want at A&P... from soup to nuts... under one roof and at low prices!

SMALL PROFITS MEAN TIDY SAVINGS FOR YOU!

When you shop at your A&P, only about one cent of your dollar is A&P's profit! Naturally, that tiny profit means nice savings for you! More and more folks are shopping at A&P, where this low-profit policy helps them get more good food for their money.

SEE THE LOW PRICE ON EVERY ITEM!

Keeping track of pennies is important holidays and every day. And, thanks to our "Accurate Pricing" policy, it's simple when you shop at A&P. Here the low price is plainly marked on every single item as well as on the shelf! See what you save!

Customers' Corner

Busy as we are at this season of the year, we're never too busy for polite, helpful service. If you have any complaints or suggestions about the service we give you, we'll be grateful to you for sending them to us. Please write:

Customer Relations Department
A&P Food Stores
Graybar Building, New York 17, N. Y.

SUPER MARKETS

Use damp ScotTowels to wipe meats before cooking. No cloths to launder!

NEW ScotTowels
- so strong when wet
YOU CAN USE THEM LIKE A CLOTH!

STRONG WHEN WET! So easy to keep fixtures shiny, with ScotTowels! They work hard with polishes, cleansers, for all kinds of chores . . . don't fall apart when wet!

SO SOFT, ABSORBENT! Children, grownups find fabric-soft ScotTowels grand for drying hands and faces. Highly absorbent, new ScotTowels drink up moisture fast.

IDEAL WORK-SAVERS! Clean melons, grapefruit, vegetables on fresh ScotTowels. Then throw away both scraps and towels together—get rid of messy clean-ups quickly, easily.

SOFT-TUFF process keeps them soft, absorbent!

150 ScotTowels to a roll.
Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.

(Continued from Page 158)

sleeves and I was tolerably certain that they hadn't. The next step normally would have been for them to propose some rather shady deal out of court which would save their clients' faces and justify the large fees they were charging them.

As it happened, however, we never got to that stage. Without any warning Dorothea suddenly appeared in my office one morning and began to take off her gloves. I noticed that she was looking unusually brisk and bright-eyed, but didn't at the moment suspect the reason. I said—rather guardedly—that I was glad to see her, and then when we had sat down I went on.

"I thought you were staying another three weeks in Bournemouth, Dorothea?"

"I know. I intended to," she replied. "But I had to come back to see my garden, Charlie. Things happen in a garden, you know, in the spring."

"Yes, I suppose they do. Well, I don't think it matters. There won't be any legal complications now if you do come back."

"Everything all right?"

"I think so. The solicitors are still rumbling, but there's nothing there behind the rumble."

Dorothea smiled contentedly. "As a matter of fact," she went on, "I'm not thinking of coming back just yet."

"You're not?"

"No, I'm taking a little holiday, Charlie. Going abroad, in fact."

"Well, that will be nice for you."

"Very nice, I think. I'm proposing to join my husband—Lord Algernon Winthrop."

The exclamation that now escaped my lips sounded to me extraordinarily like a groan. "Oh! So you've found that out!" I said.

"Yes, I've found it out, Charlie."

"Well, it doesn't matter," I went on quickly. "And, of course, it doesn't make any difference to the agreement you made."

"What agreement, Charlie dear?"

"Why, that you were never going to see each other again."

"BUT I never made any such agreement. He may have promised never to see me, but I certainly never promised anything of the sort. And I needn't keep him to his promise, need I?"

"Dorothea, you can't intend to do this!"

"But of course I do, Charlie." Dorothea gave a little happy giggle. "A real lord for a husband! Not just a distant cousin of one! You couldn't expect me to miss an opportunity like that."

"And supposing Algie just tells you to go to blazes?"

"I don't think he will. He's much too nice-mannered."

"He's a very wicked and dangerous Dorothea."

"Is he! Really, as a trustee, Char don't think you ought to have married a man like that."

"Dorothea, please, please, please!"

"And I don't think that he is wick dangerous. I think he's rather tired and somebody to look after him. I don't b he's ever been properly looked after in a life."

I MADE a fight for it even in this p hopeless situation. I pointed out that the trouble in this troublous world from women thinking that men needed ing after. Dorothea agreed that there something in my view, but insisted that did need looking after when they beg get old. And they needed some money she added.

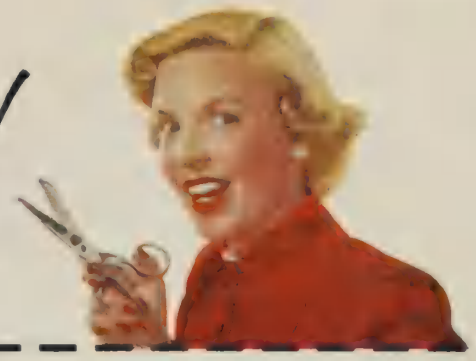
I then tried the personal approach. was my oldest friend. What was he to think of me if I let him in for some which he had never intended? To Dorothea replied that she had a sweet n although she was my cousin; that sh quite a good cook; and that her hous central heating as well as a charming ga Finally I played my last little card needn't think, I said, that I was going t her Algie's address, because nothing i whole world would drag that from m this she replied that I needn't agitate m She already had the address—and her vations on the Blue Train.

By this time she had got on her again and we were doing our end piece b door. There I told her that I had thought that she could behave in this u brazen fashion. To this she answered she had come to the conclusion that b women got more out of life than the unb sort. She then shook my hand, promis give Algie my fondest love, and went s down the stairs.

I should like to describe Dorothea's a at the Villa Fermot; but I wasn't there can't do it. There are, however, a num strange facts which I can vouch for, either personal observation or a carefu ing of the evidence. These are:

That Algie was alone and running a perature of 102° when Dorothea arriv the villa. She nursed him back to heal

That only three months later they came back to live in Dorothea's hous are, for their age, one of the happiest c I know.



That Dorothea's garden is lovelier ever.

And that Rose and Janet are still gn their teeth. THE

"Remember, dear, slice it thin and give everybody plenty of mashed potatoes."

Christmas shopping? Look at these!

See these wonderful gifts—and dozens more—at your nearest Pyrex Ware counter! Pyrex Ware is an all-year joy for everyone who cooks!

Just out! New PYREX Hostess Set!

Here in time for Christmas . . . the new family-size edition of the popular casserole and ramekin set. A beautiful, modern, covered casserole (1½-quart size) plus four individual serving dishes (7-ounce size) in gay red or sunny yellow.

Set of 1½-quart covered casserole and 4 matching individual dishes. Gift-boxed. $2.95

New Pyrex Casserole
1-qt. size 79¢
1½-qt. size 89¢
2-qt. size $1.00

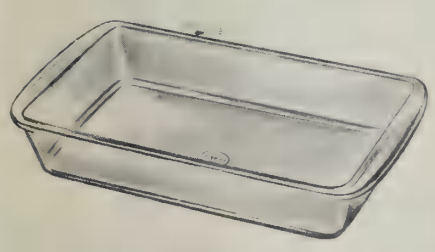
Improved design, with pie-plate cover.

Pyrex Oven-and-Refrigerator Set—$2.95

Four dishes, with covers, for baking, serving, for storing leftovers.

Pyrex Bowl Set—$1.39

Three clear glass bowls—1-qt., 1½-qt., 2½-qt. sizes.



Pyrex Hostess Casserole—$2.25

Generous 2½-qt. size. With cover. Red or yellow.

Pyrex Flameware Percolator
4-cup size $2.45
6-cup size $2.95
9-cup size $3.45

Watch your coffee brew to perfect strength!

New Pyrex Utility Dish
1-qt. size 69¢
2-qt. size 89¢
3-qt. size $1.00

Dozens of uses. Wide, easy-to-grasp handles.

Pyrex Flameware Double Boiler—$3.45

1½-qt. size. You can see the water through the glass.

Pyrex Oven Roaster—$1.39

3-qt. size. Fine for roasting the Sunday chicken.

Pyrex Color Bowl Set—$2.95

Four bowls in cheery colors for every mixing, baking, and serving use.

PYREX FLAMEWARE for top-of-stove cooking

PYREX OVENWARE for baking and roasting

PYREX
If it's Pyrex Ware the trade-mark is on it WARE

A Product of
CORNING GLASS WORKS

"Corning," "Pyrex," and "Double-Tough" are trade-marks in the U. S. of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

Conversation Piece

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

A CHRISTMAS dinner doesn't make a holiday season. We begin getting in the mood for parties way ahead of the big day, and by the time Christmas week rolls around we're rarin' to go, but we don't want our ambitions to outstrip our energies. So here comes a plan for a dinner party that should leave the hostess as gay as a cricket because it will put so little strain on her—which is as it should be. The holiday season is a busy one, and while we're in a mood to be convivial and entertain our friends, we don't want to knock ourselves out doing it.

The main dish will be tomato-and-mushroom rarebit. This is sometimes called "woodchuck," but to me that means a decidedly unpleasant rodent (Continued on Page 165)

Guests enjoy helping with the final assembly of this festive meal—everything that takes time to prepare has been done well in advance.

Holiday rarebit on rounds of rich pastry, handsome chef's salad tossed at the last minute—fun to prepare, and more fun to eat.

STUART

They say a picture is worth a thousand words. That's the reason we put a luscious picture here—so all you ladies (perhaps gents, too) could take a really good look. What do you think? Isn't it downright astonishing that a cake of such delicate texture, such tempting deliciousness can now be made with unbelievable ease?

What do you have to do? You merely add milk to either one of the two new Pillsbury Cake Mixes—White or Chocolate Fudge. Go to your grocer's and get either one—or both. We promise you a cake every bit as attention-getting, as family-thrilling as the one in the picture. See what we mean. Just see.

Just add milk—

Milk is all you add—no eggs, flavoring, or extras of any kind required. These are complete mixes.

Remember—
You and Ann Pillsbury
can make a great team

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

WHITE AND CHOCOLATE FUDGE

Nourishing MEAT Yardstick of Protein Foods

Good Picks in Pork

that help you make the most of America's vital meat supply

Here's timely news about meat — Pork is more plentiful. And when you take full advantage of this season's fine pork crop now reaching your market, you help to make the most of America's vital meat supply.

Now's a good time to get acquainted with the wide variety of cuts your meat-man has to offer—especially those that help make your food budget go its furthest.

Discover the thrifty shoulder butt roast—almost solid meat—for a lot of servings. Pick meaty pork hocks, spareribs, pork steaks or first-cut chops for homey midweek meals.

Then there's the smoky fragrance of a half ham, or a picnic, the lean-streaked goodness of bacon, crisply fried salt pork, sizzling sausage links or patties.

And remember, pork is highly digestible food—one of the finest sources of essential B vitamins, complete body-building protein and food iron.

Ask your meat-man to recommend his best buys in pork each time you shop.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association

MEAT Serves the Nation make the most of every pound

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE · Headquarters, Chicago · Members throughout the U. S.

(Continued from Page 162)

with which we have a great deal of trouble on the farm, and I don't like to give the name to anything as delicious as this dish. For good measure, since this is Christmas and we should all be extra generous, I'll include a recipe for crab Mornay which can be substituted for the rarebit or filed away for use at a future party. Both of these dishes can be prepared entirely or partly in a chafing dish, with guests participating in the cooking or just watching the process while they enjoy the aromas that arise and whip up terrific appetites. And of course they can be prepared in the kitchen in a double boiler—after all, what is a chafing dish but a glorified double boiler? When the rarebit—or the crab Mornay—is served, there should be something to spoon it onto; and instead of the usual toast we'll have large rounds of piecrust which are scandalously good and ditto rich, but this is not a heavy meal and we can indulge ourselves to that extent.

The other big production will be chef's salad, and what could be a better accompaniment? A big bowl of crisp salad greens, thinly sliced red radishes, slivers of chicken or leftover turkey, and slivers of smoked tongue or ham, all tossed together with French dressing. Beside the salad bowl there will be a small bowl of sour cream to be put at the side or on top of each serving of salad. The bread will be garlic Melba toast, served crisp and hot.

For dessert: cherries, grapefruit, pears.

Ice-cold fruit will solve the dessert problem—it almost always will for me because my sweet tooth isn't too insistent and I love fruit as a finale to a good meal. Pie cherries, stewed pears soaked in the cherry juice, candied ginger and sections of grapefruit are involved in the fruit platter, and I'll give you more details later.

These recipes will serve six or eight people.

TOMATO-AND-MUSHROOM RAREBIT

Empty contents of 1 No. 2½ can best quality tomatoes into a saucepan. Add 4 tablespoons finely chopped onion, 1½ tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, ¼ teaspoon dry mustard, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon sugar, ⅛ teaspoon red pepper, and the liquid from 2 small cans button mushrooms. Cook over high heat 5 minutes and mash with a wire potato masher. The tomatoes shouldn't be puréed, but they should be broken up into very small pieces.

In a chafing dish or double boiler melt ¼ pound butter or margarine, blend in 6 tablespoons flour, add tomatoes and cook, stirring most of the time, until mixture begins to thicken. To save time, be sure that the water in lower pan of double boiler or chafing dish is boiling before upper pan is placed over it. Now add 1 pound sharp-tasting American cheese cut into small pieces or coarsely grated and continue to cook and stir until cheese has melted. At the last add the 2 cans of drained mushrooms, cook a little longer to heat mushrooms and the rarebit is ready to serve.

This whole process can be done behind scenes or on the set. However, if you plan to cook the rarebit with audience participation or at least with audience, I suggest that you have the thickened tomatoes in the chafing dish before you begin. This much of the job can be finished early in the day with no harm done, and thus save a lot of time and mess. Serve on rounds of piecrust.

CRAB MORNAY

In a chafing dish or double boiler melt 6 tablespoons butter or margarine and blend in 6 tablespoons flour. Drain liquid from 1 or 2 small cans button mushrooms into a measuring cup and add enough chicken broth or veal stock to make 1½ cups. You can use canned or homemade broth or you can make it with bouillon cubes or powder. Add this to the flour and butter with 1½ cups cream or undiluted evaporated milk, 1 small onion, finely chopped, 3 tablespoons chopped pimiento or green pepper, ⅓ pound grated Gruyère cheese, ¼ pound grated Parmesan cheese and 1 tablespoon mono sodium glutamate. Cook, stirring constantly, until sauce is thick and cheese has melted. Add salt and black and red pepper to taste. At the last add drained mushrooms and 2 seven-ounce cans crab meat. Fresh or frozen crab meat can be used instead of canned. Serve on rounds of piecrust.

CREAM-CHEESE PIECRUST

Sift together 2 cups flour, a small pinch baking powder and 1 scant teaspoon salt. Add 9 ounces cream cheese, ½ cup butter or margarine, and ½ cup vegetable shortening or lard. Cut with knives until thoroughly blended, wrap in aluminum foil or wax paper and store overnight in refrigerator. Roll on a lightly floured board to a little more than ⅛" thickness and cut into fairly large rounds, about 4" in diameter. The first time I made these, I inverted a soup cup on the dough and cut around it with a sharp-pointed knife. Then I discovered that I had some small copper finger bowls with the right dimensions and a sharp edge. One of these made a perfect cutter—and as a last resort I could have cut a cardboard disk and used that as a pattern. I like the rounds to be large, but if you don't agree just use your largest cooky cutter and make more of them. Put the disks on ungreased cooky sheets, prick with a fork, and bake in a hot, 450° F., oven until delicately browned, watching closely after 10 minutes. You don't need to bake these at the last minute, but be sure to give them a little time in a low, 200° F., oven or on a hot tray before serving.

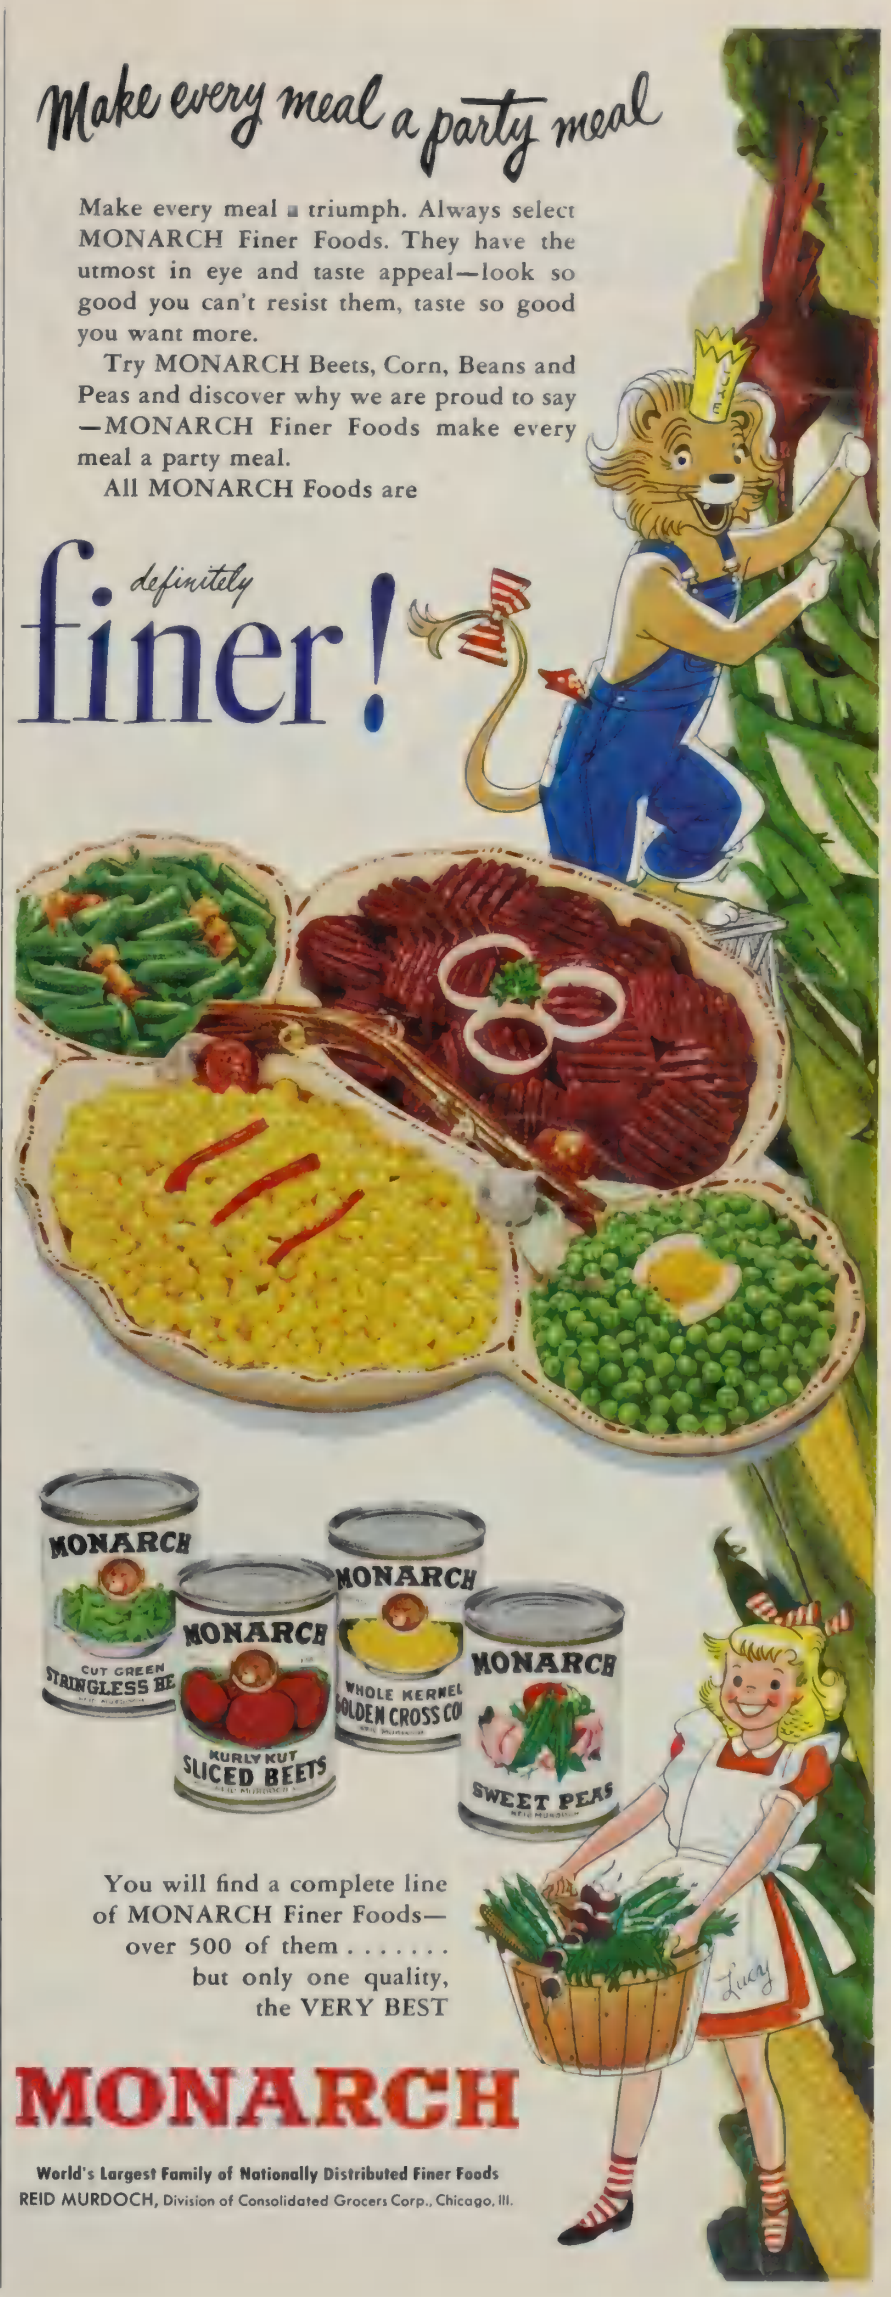
Recently I used the tomato rarebit, without mushrooms, as a hot hors d'oeuvre for a dinner party. I put a small bowl of the rarebit in the center of a large copper casserole, surrounded it with small cream-cheese-piecrust disks about an inch in diameter and kept the whole thing hot over one of those pottery warmers in which candles supply the heat. Success? Well—six people ate all of them, and I had made forty disks.

CHEF'S SALAD

A chef's salad can be a very hearty dish, with strips of several kinds of meat and cheese mixed with whatever greens and vegetables you use. It makes a wonderful main dish for lunch, especially in the summer. But for this menu I think our salad should be only fairly hearty. For the greens I like Boston lettuce and water cress best, but any good salad greens will do. If you use iceberg lettuce, I think it's a good idea to shred it rather coarsely for this salad. Make a chapon by rubbing a piece of dry bread crust well with garlic, put it in the salad bowl and add the greens, which should be well drained. (Put them in a double thickness of cheesecloth, secure the four corners in your hand to make a bag and swing it around to remove as much moisture as possible.)

Cut cold cooked chicken or turkey, preferably white meat, into slender strips to make about 1½ cups. (If your turkey has gone the way of all turkeys and you don't want to bother with a whole chicken, perhaps you can get a package of frozen chicken breasts in your grocery store. I say "perhaps" because I don't know how generally available they are, but I can get them in the small towns near our farm—a pretty good index.) Cut cooked smoked tongue or ham into slender strips to make 1½ cups. Slice red radishes into very thin disks to make 1 cup.

To 1 cup sour cream add 1 teaspoon sugar and 1 tablespoon grated onion and stir. Pour



Make every meal a party meal

Make every meal a triumph. Always select MONARCH Finer Foods. They have the utmost in eye and taste appeal—look so good you can't resist them, taste so good you want more.

Try MONARCH Beets, Corn, Beans and Peas and discover why we are proud to say —MONARCH Finer Foods make every meal a party meal.

All MONARCH Foods are definitely finer!

You will find a complete line of MONARCH Finer Foods— over 500 of them . . . . . but only one quality, the VERY BEST

MONARCH

World's Largest Family of Nationally Distributed Finer Foods

REID MURDOCH, Division of Consolidated Grocers Corp., Chicago, Ill.

salad oil over greens and toss well. Add vinegar in usual proportions for French dressing—⅓ vinegar to ⅔ oil—and salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste, and toss again. Remove chapon and mix the radishes and meat with the greens, reserving some of the chicken and tongue strips for the top. Serve sour cream in a separate bowl and let people help themselves to it.

GARLIC MELBA TOAST

Remove crust from thinly sliced bread and cut slices into three-cornered or oblong pieces. Toast on both sides. Use packaged Melba toast if you don't want to make it yourself. Rub top side of toast with a clove of garlic. The rough surface of the toast acts as a grater, so go lightly if you don't want a strong garlic flavor. Spread with butter or margarine and heat in a moderate, 325° F., oven before serving. The toast can be made ready for the last heating in the oven at any time during the day

COMPOTE OF CHERRIES, GRAPEFRUIT AND PEARS

The day before, drain the juice from 2 No. 2 cans red sour cherries and in a separate dish drain juice from 1 No. 2½ can Bartlett pears. Of course home-canned pears and cherries can be used instead of store ones. Put pears, cut side up, in a flat-bottomed refrigerator dish and pour cherry juice over them. Set in refrigerator and occasionally turn pears so that they will be a lovely red all over. Some cherry juice is bright red and some has a purplish cast, but it's all pretty and you will find that the pears absorb the color not just on the surface but all the way through. During the afternoon of the party day, melt ⅔ glass red raspberry jelly and add this to the drained cherries with 4 tablespoons candied ginger cut into slender strips. Cut peel from 3 large grapefruit and slice them into sections. When you are ready to arrange your fruit platter, make a mound of cherries in the center and surround it with the grapefruit slices. Around the grapefruit make a border of pears, cut side down, and put a long sliver of candied ginger between the pear halves. If you like, sprinkle some sherry over all the fruit.

As a by-product of this dessert you will have some cherry and pear juice left over. This, with any fruit that may be left, will make a nice gelatin dessert the next day.

Service. Let's assume that you are going to complete the preparation of the food in the living room or wherever you plan to serve and that the main dish will be tomato-and-mushroom rarebit. Have the thickened tomato sauce already in the chafing dish and bring it in with a bowl of diced or grated cheese and another of mushrooms. It takes only a few minutes to complete the cooking of the rarebit. On another tray you might have the salad bowl of greens surrounded by four dishes containing the radishes, the two meats and the sour cream. When the rarebit is ready, someone could mix the salad while you make one quick trip to the kitchen for the piecrust rounds and Melba toast, which will be waiting in a warm oven—and voilà! A cooking party with no fuss or bother, and I think everyone might enjoy the food more for having had a small share in its preparation. If the main dish is to be crab Mornay, have the sauce ready for the addition of the crab meat and the mushrooms before it is brought in.

If you plan to complete all preparations in the kitchen, the pattern is simple. The rarebit or crab Mornay can wait for some time in a double boiler over low heat. So, except for the mixing of the salad, no last-minute scurrying around in the kitchen is necessary.

I hope I've lived up to my promise about little strain on the hostess, and I know I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL

(Continued from Page 62)

list, lots of lovely substitutes are. You'll find those out, and in the meantime let's go.

CAVIAR APPETIZER

Skin small hothouse tomatoes. You do this by pouring boiling water over them, leave them 2 or 3 minutes and the skin comes off like a charm. Cut a slice off the top of each tomato, scoop out the center about halfway down. Chill. Fill with ice-cold caviar to which you've added lemon juice and a little grated onion just before serving. Garnish with cress and serve with Melba toast. If caviar is out, what's wrong with crab meat in mayonnaise, or lobster, diced and dressed with Russian dressing?

You know how. You all know how to stuff and roast a turkey. Here's one stuffing I consider sheer elegance, and this is the receipt:

WILD-RICE STUFFING

Wash 1 pound wild rice and cook in boiling salted water until tender. Meanwhile sauté 2 peeled onions, chopped, 1 pound mushrooms, sliced, and ½ pound bulk pork sausage, breaking sausage up with a fork as it cooks. Drain the rice but do not rinse it. Add sausage mixture and mix well. Add 2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon thyme, and 1 teaspoon marjoram. Mix well again and taste. It might need more salt. This quantity will stuff one large turkey.

But chestnuts anyway. You can't leave chestnuts out, not at Christmas. One nice thing about chestnuts is that they will do most anything you ask of them and do it well. Try this and prove it for yourself:

MASHED SWEET POTATOES WITH CHESTNUTS

Cook 2 pounds yams or sweet potatoes, in their skins, in boiling salted water until tender. While potatoes are cooking, wash ¾ pound chestnuts and make a slit in the side of each. Boil about 20 minutes or a little longer in water to cover. Drain and take off the shells and the brown underskin. Mash with 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. There should be about 2 cups. Mash the sweet potatoes. Put them through a ricer first. And be dead sure there aren't any lumps—not one teensy, weensy lump even. Watch it. Mix with the chestnuts. Add ¼ cup light brown sugar, a little salt and ½ cup hot milk. Whip all together. And taste it to see how the seasonings are. That's a good rule. Serve with pieces of butter or margarine melting on the top.

One way or another. It has to be onions. I can't imagine a Christmas turkey without onions. To me that would be as unthinkable as a picnic without a sandwich. Onions—Christmas dinner; they go together, don't you see? Well, in order to have onions and another vegetable without having too much to eat, we changed their role from the usual one of boiled or creamed and combined them with the beans. Here is a little hint of a receipt that's good at any time:

GREEN BEANS AND ONIONS

Cook 1–1½ pounds small white onions in boiling salted water until tender. Also cook 2 packages frozen cut string beans, doing what they tell you on the package. Or 2 pounds fresh string beans, cut into diagonal pieces, in boiling salted water until tender. Or use canned green beans. Drain both the onions and the beans, and let the onions drain a specially long time. Dress them with butter or margarine, salt and pepper. That will do for them. Only one word: see that onions and beans are heated up in the butter or margarine. You don't want them cold—not on Christmas.

RELISHES

Cranberry Relish: Put 1 pound raw cranberries through a food chopper, using the parser of the two knives. Mix with 1½ cups sugar and half of a 6-ounce can frozen orange-juice concentrate—you use it straight from the can, undiluted. Cover and allow to stand in the refrigerator for two days before serving. The concentrated juice gives this a delicious flavor.

Christmas Pickles: Slice 4 dill pickles crosswise. Drain and slice 1 can of pimiento. Heat to boiling ⅔ cup vinegar, ⅓ cup water and 1 cup sugar. Pour over the pickles and pimiento. Cover and let stand one week before serving. Foresight? I'll say.

Roquefort-Stuffed Olives: Get some bottles of pitted stuffed olives; take out the pimiento (it's unwanted here) and stuff the olives with fresh Roquefort or blue cheese. Mix and work it up to a smoothness too. Stuffs easier.

Celery Curls and Ripe Olives: The perennials—and we'd miss them if someone forgot to provide them.

Those important last things. After the serious business of the day is over, it's well to relax for a little while and contemplate the thought of dessert. You might get up and play train with the kiddies, or shovel a little snow, maybe, if it's a drastic case. Anyway, take it easy, for you are going to get a dessert, and don't think your eyes deceive you—those beautiful white balls are not tennis balls, they are ice-cream snowballs scooped out of vanilla or pistachio ice cream, rolled in shredded coconut and chilled until you're ready. They hanker to be eaten with a wonder-working sauce called Tutti-Frutti. Always seemed a silly name to me, but someone thought it up sometime and it stuck, and so we have with us right this very minute ——

TUTTI-FRUTTI SAUCE

Cut ¼ pound dates into small pieces. Add ½-pint jar maraschino cherries—juice and all—and ½ pint canned white figs (cutting cherries and figs into small pieces first). Let stand overnight or for several hours. Add a pinch of salt and ¼ pound almonds, blanched, halved and toasted. Boil ½ cup sugar and ½ cup water five minutes. Add to the fruit and chill. This may be made several days before Christmas. Makes about 3 cups. And it's better for "settin'" a spell.

One more for luck. Because everybody wants cookies and still more cookies right now, here are two that are new and sure-fire, and more than one receipt of same would seem to be indicated, as the M.D.'s say. But that's up to you and as chief cooky maker, as no doubt you are, you'll do your own figuring and not leave it to a wild guesser like me. Anyway, here's the last of the receipts of the day, and I hope they hit the spot, from toddler to gramp, and I'm sure they will.

ORANGE-ALMOND MACAROONS

Mix ½ cup granulated sugar and ½ cup confectioners' sugar, a little at a time, with 1 cup almond paste. Add ¼ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Mix in thoroughly 1 unbeaten egg white and then 1 more. Stir in 2½ teaspoons grated orange rind. Drop by spoonfuls on ungreased brown paper laid on cooky sheets. Bake in slow oven, 325° F., about 20 minutes until a light beige in color (like a new saddle, if you ride). When cool, wet underside of paper by placing on damp cloth and peel off cookies. Store them in a covered tin can or covered crock so that they will remain chewy. Makes 4 dozen small macaroons. These do not travel well in coat pockets.

APRICOT BUTTONS

Rinse ⅓ cup dried apricots with cold water. Cover with water and cook until very tender. Mash and purée through a coarse sieve and add ⅓ cup sugar. Cook slowly until thick, stirring constantly. Cool. Cream ½ cup butter or margarine and ⅓ cup sugar together thoroughly. Stir in the yolk of 1 egg and ½ teaspoon vanilla. Sift 1 cup flour with ½ teaspoon salt and mix into creamed mixture. Shape into 3 dozen small balls. Dip the balls in 1 unbeaten egg white, then roll in chopped nuts. Place about 2" apart on lightly greased baking sheets. Make a deep dent in the center of each ball. Bake in a slow oven, 300° F., about 30 minutes. Remove with a spatula to wire rack to cool. Fill the centers, while still warm, with cooled apricot mixture. You may keep these—if you can—in tin or glass, well covered and between wax paper. I leave the parking place to you. But they don't belong in grandma's button bag.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Tree in the Cloud

By May Sarton

The black boy with a sore
Lives in Africa next door
And his patient blinding grief
Eats the roots of our belief;
While in lands remote from him,
Naked as the Seraphim,
Children have no shoes to go
To school across the bitter snow.
Hunger knows there is no peace
In China, Italy or Greece;
Hunger is the prison we
Are using to lock up the free.

But wherever we are bound,
Warmly clothed and fed and sound,
We are followed by a fire.
Burning cloud of man's desire;
In the cloud there stands a tree
Rooted in all misery.
We are followed everywhere
And when we sleep the tree is there,
And when we wake the small leaves stir
And tremble in the winds of fear,
And yet we do not look or listen
Where the cloud and the tree glisten.

But he who shares all human grief
Will find the roots of his belief,
And where he steps like Wenceslas
The snow is warmed for those who pass.
While the tree grows and blazes there,
A burning wonder in the air.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The ideal day. The real Christmas Day should be white. If it should snow on that day, wouldn't it be wonderful? To wake up early Christmas morning, knowing the turkey was stuffed and ready, everything done, the fires laid in the grates and the candles waiting to beckon from the windows to all who pass. Wake up and suddenly hear a sleigh, with horse and bells, all complete, go trotting by. And, looking out the window, there it is. Snowed all night, still snowing, heavily, gravely, sedately, no wind, no raucous scraping of shovels, no break in the magnificent cape that has folded the world in its mantle of peace on earth, of good will to men. Yes, it's a wonderful world when it snows. For that is a mantle that hides the scars and heals the wounds and lends an ineffable beauty to a badly beaten up old harridan we call the earth.

Yes, that would be something and maybe it will be that way this year. Let's hope, anyway.

Don't forget the sausage and hot buckwheats and the thinnest ham ever, broiled, and pots of strong, fragrant coffee—all for Christmas breakfast. And, as this has made me so hungry I can't stand it another minute, I am on my way, staying only long enough to say it once again from my heart, from me to you—a Merry Christmas. A very merry one.

THE END

HOLIDAY SETTINGS made easy!

Here's how to beautify holiday meals (as well as every-day family meals) and save money, time and work: buy the big, economical, new Family Pkgs. of Roylies Lace Paper Doylies —actually cost less than laundering linen! Servings look lovely. Get Family Pkgs. of 45 to 120 Roylies: 5", 6", 8", 10", 12" round, and oblong Place Mats. At 5 & 10's, supermarkets, housefurnishing, naborhood, dept. stores.

Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Brooklyn, 1
Trade Mark "Roylies" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

EXQUISITE • MONEY-SAVING ROYLIES
Lace Paper Doylies

ROASTWELL PATENTED GRAVYWELL
SELF-BASTING • • • TENDERIZES

ROASTING PERFECTION
AT LEADING STORES EVERYWHERE OR WRITE
FLETCHER ENAMEL CO. DUNBAR, W. VA.

HONOR AMONG COOKS by MARY B. SPAHR, M. D.
From soup to nuts, a cookbook full of zing! Mouth-watering recipes—Fetching sketches—Crimson cover—Spiral binding—Wonderful Gift!—Royalties to American Friends Service Committee to help feed world's hungry children.
■■ prepaid CURRANT HOUSE, Ithaca, N. Y.

ROASTMEAT SEASONING
REFILL FOR Griffith SPICE SET
POSTPAID 25¢
THE GRIFFITH LABORATORIES
1415 W. 37th ST., CHICAGO 9, ILL.

Giant Size Towels For 1000 Household Uses EXCELLO
Laundry Fresh
KITCHEN TOWELS
LOOK FOR THIS LABEL
EXCELLO Laundry Fresh KITCHEN TOWELS
Look for Excello Plastic Table Covers, Plastic Yard Goods packages, and Dish Towels at leading stores.

KNITTING YARNS
Spun in our own mill
Write for FREE SAMPLE CARD for over 40 years
CLIVEDEN YARNS
713 Arch St. Phila. 6, Pa.

WRIGHT'S
AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING SILVER CLEANER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Amazing New Airko
MOISTURE-PROOF SHAKERS!

ORIGINAL
39c pr.

DELUXE
$1.00 pr.

AIRKO MFG. CO., CLERMONT, FLORIDA

Each Christmas brings back memories of all past Christmases: the spicy smell of the tree; the packages wrapped and waiting; the solid, tangible happiness of love and friendship in the house.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

THE first real snow is a special enchantment. It begins so gently and quietly, just a casual butterfly of a flake, and then the yard gets a silvery tone and the trees look suddenly very black and wet. The sky is flat and all distance diminishes to a blur.

Now we discover that one galosh has no zipper since Jonquil took it off last August, and that there are only three mittens in the closet since Maeve made off with one. And where did I put the old Mackinaws?

Finally I get wrapped up and go down to the pond and watch the snow sliding softly into the black, still water. The pond was vocal with frogs all summer and now it is silent, and I wonder where the tall blue heron who fished so delicately in the upper shallows is.

Two red setters go with me and race around the edge of the water, waving their plumed tails happily. They fly after rabbit tracks, then dash back to give me a snowy greeting. Daphne has grown so much. But she is still a baby at heart and keeps on sitting on my lap by letting the surplus fall over!

The cockers like winter too. The older dogs take a new lease on life and frisk like puppies, and the puppies play pouncing games with the falling snow. Curiously enough, the hot summer seems to be harder on the older dogs, and when we get through August without sickness I look for no more trouble.

Making the Christmas fruitcake is fun, and now that we can buy the fruits all chopped up, it is much faster than it used to be when we sliced and cut up things for hours. We mix it in the dishpan—no other pan is large enough—and then I go into a flutter over whether it is done or not, for fruitcake is a secretive thing and may begin to draw away from the sides of the pan one minute and turn blackish the next.

Jill turns out Christmas cookies as fast as she can. We freeze some batches to have on hand. I like best the crisp, very thin cookies that make a nice crunching sound when eaten.

The turkey is stuffed and frozen in the farm freezer, and the only problem there is where to thaw it without Esmé's help. I like a plain, old-fashioned stuffing for turkey; we roast the bird the day before Christmas.

As usual, Christmas arrives much faster than I thought. This year I really did mean to get all the packages wrapped ahead of time, but Christmas week finds me hunting up the presents I bought for special people during the year. I never, never find them all, but it is rather fun to find them later on under the quilts in the old pine chest or behind the books on the bookshelves.

The problem of the maple bed has finally been solved in time for Christmas. It is an old four-poster, once a rope bed, and like most of those old beds, it was designed for short people. It was only sixty-four inches long and most guests had to sleep slantwise in it to accommodate their whole selves. Our neighbor Steve eyed it thoughtfully after he had spent one night in it. He had put his feet right outside, he said, and it worked fairly well. But why not just lengthen the side rails?

It seemed simple. So two men came and spent half a day trying to get it apart, for it had been bolted together years ago and the bolts fastened with spikes which had rusted.

When they brought the bed back and set it up, it was long all right, and the only trouble was the spring would no longer fit. So I thought one out in the storage house would, and asked the nice men to bring it in, take the other one out.

The spring would not curve itself around our steep pre-Revolutionary stairs, so we had to unnail the door at the foot, the old coffin door (built for the early

(Continued on Page 170)

Lovely Mrs. James E. Adams SAYS:

"Stanley Products save me much time and work"...

Mrs. James E. Adams, STANLEY Party Hostess, with two of her beautiful children, Gerald, five, and Janice, two, in her attractive home, 12709 Mark Twain Street, Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. Adams, popular wife of a well-known Detroit banker, mother of three young children and active in a number of church and civic organizations, is so enthusiastic about STANLEY Products that she frequently entertains groups of friends at her own STANLEY Hostess Parties. "I want others to know as I do," says Mrs. Adams, "how superior STANLEY Products are in saving the busy woman time and effort in practically every one of her housekeeping tasks. Besides, it's such fun and so convenient to invite in your STANLEY Dealer and shop with your guests for these products in the comfort of your own living room."

Stanley Quality Plus Products Are Brought To You By Stanley Dealers At Fun-Filled "In-The-Home" Parties ← Like This

More than 10,000 hospitable women invite groups of friends into their homes each day and act as Hostesses at STANLEY Parties. At these parties, STANLEY Dealers demonstrate STANLEY's time and work-saving products under actual use conditions. All guests get welcome gifts, Hostesses are rewarded with valuable extra "Dividend Gifts," too. Why don't you shop at a STANLEY Party, or better still, be Hostess at your own STANLEY Party soon?

Originators of the Famous Stanley Hostess Party Plan

STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS, Inc.

WESTFIELD, MASS.

Factories in Easthampton, Massachusetts, and London, Ontario

STANLEY HOSTESS PARTIES EASY TO ARRANGE

To arrange for your own STANLEY Hostess Party . . . or to get any information about STANLEY . . . phone or write your STANLEY Dealer, your nearest STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS Branch Office, or write direct to STANLEY's Home Office in Westfield, Massachusetts.

STANLEY LEADS with more than 150 QUALITY PLUS Products to save women time, work, money: (1) Household cleaning preparations (2) Brushes, mops, dusters, etc. (3) Many practical items to improve personal grooming.

STANHOME
A STANLEY HOME PRODUCT

"I took 30 lessons to learn to play this thing and all HE does is get his suit SANITONE dry cleaned!"

SUCCESS and good grooming go hand in hand . . . that's why millions have switched to the one dry cleaning that keeps clothes looking like-new longer.

It's called Sanitone. Out goes even rubbed-in grime so colors and patterns come back to life! Stubborn spots vanish! No stale cleaning odors! Original texture restored! Better press lasts longer!

Look for Your Sanitone Dry Cleaner in Your Classified Phone Directory

Emery Industries, Inc. Cincinnati 2, Ohio

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Treatment NOW—

near as your purse or pocket!

New DeVilbiss Pocket Atomizer Just The Thing For Cold or Hay Fever Sufferers! Why suffer while you're on the job . . . at school . . . on plane or train? The new, handy DeVilbiss Pocket Atomizer slips right into your purse or pocket. It's leak-proof, sanitary, inconspicuous. And, remember—you may recover quicker if you can keep up the regular applications your doctor has recommended. Ask for the DeVilbiss Pocket Atomizer No. 33 at your nearest drug counter. Only $1.50. The DeVilbiss Company, Toledo 1, Ohio and Windsor, Ont., Canada.

DeVILBISS ATOMIZERS

THE NAME YOU KNOW BEST IN ATOMIZERS, NEBULIZERS, VAPORIZERS

(Continued from Page 168)

owners to get coffins down when they had to). The men got the springs exchanged and then discovered the other one would not fit at all, even though they had measured it.

Jill had been away during this and came in as I was nailing the coffin door again. She opined she might put an extra piece of wood inside the rails and nail it on, so the original spring would fit. So the men switched springs again and thankfully departed.

We all went upstairs and rearranged the room. It has a slanting ceiling and is not a big room and has never really looked right with the big maple high chest and one pine blanket chest and the big bed. We moved the bed alongside the slanting wall. The big chest was moved to three different places. The room looked much better, but Olive said it wasn't practical to have the bed there, how could you ever make it? And Jill said it would give her claustrophobia if she ever slept with her nose against that wall. If anyone got up in the night, he might fracture his skull on the ceiling. So we moved the bed again.

Of all the things you wear, your expression is the most important. —ANON.

Company was due on Saturday that week, and Friday Olive had finished a petticoat for the bed by sewing madly all day. The bed took a last small revenge by being longer than she thought so the petticoat was a shade too short, but that was a minor matter.

We lugged home Olive's own cherished washstand on a lend-lease until we could find one, dug up a lamp from the attic and tore around for a white shade and of course couldn't find the right size.

Looking back, I am not at all surprised that just fixing those bedrails led to all this, for that is about the way things happen to us. Now when we get rugs to match the wallpaper, we won't need anything but new curtains!

An old house offers this kind of activity and keeps housekeeping from ever being dull.

My best present this year is Aladdin, who is a very small, very lively, exceedingly gay Abyssinian kitten. This is a rare breed of cat and I had never met one until Aladdin arrived with his basket, his toys, his nursing bottle and a pink doll blanket. He has a small pointed face with big ears and his color is a blend of dark and soft orange.

Esmé still treats him with calm dignity, but he doesn't pay much heed to her, for he is so fascinated by the dogs. He is fearless as a tiger and thinks nothing of leaping at them. He especially loves Sister and likes to pounce on her and bat at her ears. The dogs like him, for they have met few cats that would let them come up and really examine them. His favorite sport is riding on the typewriter carriage when I am writing letters, and then jamming the keys by a swift downward leap.

It seems a pity that Abyssinians are scarce. This kitten is so intelligent, charming and individual that I keep wishing I could share him. He is not at all like the independent, proud Siamese. He purrs like a steam-engine when he is picked up, and when he speaks he has a very delicate, bell-like little voice. He loves to play with water and his dish is upset frequently as he paddles in it. Some Abyssinians wash their food, but he is too hungry to bother — he is an earnest and enthusiastic eater.

The signs in the country were that we might have a hard, long winter. Last winter was so mild and open that possibly Nature may decide to balance it with a few blizzards. If we can keep a path open to the woodpile, we manage very well. The children always hope for a really cold Christmas so they can go skating on the pond.

I think Christmas Eve is my favorite time. The tree is trimmed and smells so spicy and cool. The candles burn in the windows with a clear light. The feverish wrapping is over and the presents are piled neatly under the tree. We can pinch and weigh, but nobody can peek until the morning. We sit around the fire and pop corn and eat Christmas cookies and drink hot chocolate and listen to the old Christmas carols.

As the voices of the home-coming children rise and fall against the background of Silent Night and Good King Wenceslaus, it is thinking time for me. I remember my mother, and how she loved giving gifts; sharing was her greatest delight. And father, who pretended he didn't care about presents, but sneaked around hunting his for days beforehand. And I remember the trips coming home from college with my heart absolutely bursting. Milwaukee—Fond Du Lac—Oshkosh; the train conductor made music with the words. And snow on the little town, snow on the old car, snow on mamma's black seal coat and on the rosy face of my best beau.

I remember the early Christmases at Stillmeadow, when the children were always being stuffed into bunny suits or unstuffed, and Don's wee mittens were invariably sodden with snow and the puppies were always scrambling around among the toys.

The snowy night outside is so beautiful and the feeling of love and friendship is just as strong this Christmas as it has always been. Christmas is a reaffirmation of the good and the true and the lovely in life, and the Christ child seems to be really born again in our hearts.

And so I look out on the silence of the snow and the still beauty of the stars and repeat my favorite words once more—God rest you merry, gentlemen.

PART-TIME JOB

(Continued from Page 60)

"Stimson. Candy Stimson. And it's not short for anything, either—I was named Candy because that was what mother craved inordinately the whole time she was carrying ——" Miss Stimson placed a hand over her mouth and stopped abruptly, but above the hand her eyes were unembarrassed, even amused.

"What is your typing speed?" He had her there, apparently.

"I'm not definitely sure," she said hesitantly. "I haven't exactly been thinking about it lately, you know? Because we've been involved in so many other things. But if you will give me something to copy, I'll copy it and you can see for yourself whether you think I'll do."

She looked at him so trustingly that he was somehow reminded of a baby bird. Unfledged, he thought, and corrected it tentatively to fledgling. In fact, she looked at him so trustingly that even the sure knowledge that if he hired her Vera would get that look around her mouth could not stop him. Nucleus be hanged! He would hire this child just in common humanity, if she could type at all. What he was looking for, after all was merely someone to answer the telephone from nine to twelve, five days a week, while he was out beating the bushes for business; someone who could handle his small correspondence, send out his bills when there were bills to send out—it was obviously an ideal job for this kid, and meanwhile he could be instructing her painlessly in proper office behavior. So that when the time came for her to apply for another job, she would be able to land it. So that she wouldn't be so touchingly, so pathetically naïve. Why, that little white dress was not the thing to wear to impress an employer! And she wasn't even wearing stockings—or was she?

"What would you like me to copy?" she asked, while he was still considering that.

"Why—uh—suppose you just go over there and type whatever comes into your head. Your name and address, or the thing about the quick fox and the lazy dog. To give me an idea."

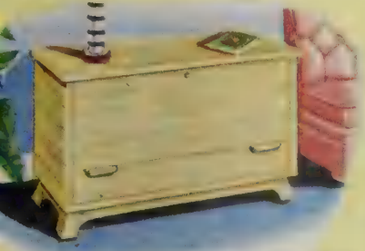
(Continued on Page 173)

Your daughter's hope chest today is the cradle of her happiness Tomorrow

Christmas Gift SPECIAL

No. 2247—Modern styling at its very best. This stunning Limed Oak chest combines clean design and practical utility. Patented self-rising Lane tray. Similar design in Walnut.

$49.95



Prices slightly higher in the West and Canada.

No. 2515—Striking modern, functional design in increasingly popular Silver Grey Walnut. Includes Lane's self-rising removable tray. $59.95.

No. 2525—American Walnut chest decorated on ends of front and top with border of New Guinea wood. Includes self-rising Lane tray. $49.95.

No 2452—"Miss America" chest in four different finishes: shown in Limed Oak—also in Walnut, Cordovan Mahogany or Silver Grey Walnut. Full length drawer in base. $69.95.

No. 2221—Beautifully finished 18th Century Mahogany Hepplewhite design, with full length drawer in base. $79.95.

For sale at furniture and department stores

Every now and then that daughter of yours slips away to the privacy of her dreams and lives a few precious moments in the future. Whether her real-life future will be filled with genuine and lasting happiness, as you want it to be, depends on how carefully you mold and shape her dreams today.

This Christmas help her start planning the right kind of future by giving her a lovely Lane Cedar Hope Chest. In the sweet, protective fragrance of its aromatic red cedar, she can ever so lovingly tuck away those treasures that today are only dreams—but tomorrow become beautiful reality.

Lane is the world's only cedar hope chest actually pressure-tested for aroma-tightness . . . and every Lane is backed by a moth protection guarantee underwritten by one of the world's largest insurance companies. There's a style and finish for any room in the home to harmonize with any type of furniture. THE LANE COMPANY, INC., DEPT. B, ALTAVISTA, VA. In Canada: Knechtels, Ltd., Hanover, Ontario.

Copyright 1950—The Lane Company, Inc.

LANE

Cedar HOPE CHEST

THE PRACTICAL LOVE-GIFT

That Heavenly Feeling

Those Heavenly Bibb Sheets

. . . TODAY'S SMARTEST BUY

So soft, so smooth, so snowy white, these long-wearing Bibb muslin Sheets become more beautiful and more luxurious with each laundering. They are today's smartest buy in sheets.

LADY BALTIMORE, TYPE 140—The heavenly texture of this lovely muslin sheet is combined with extra strength in every square inch for amazing long wear—teeny-weeny cost per year of service.

KENNESAW, TYPE 128—Made of fine selected cotton, expertly blended, spun and woven. A beautiful, long-wearing muslin sheet of outstanding value for the thriftiest budgets.

74 years leadership in textile craftsmanship attests the superb quality of Bibb Sheets. Whether you prefer the finest combed percales or budget-saving muslins, it will pay you to insist upon Bibb Sheets.

BIBB The First Name in TEXTILES

The Loveliest Gift of All

For discriminating women, Bibb Combed Percale Sheets, beautifully wrapped in Du Pont Polythene, make the loveliest of gifts. America's finest combed percale sheets at practical prices.

Bibb Sheets

WITH THAT HEAVENLY FEELING

BIBB MANUFACTURING COMPANY ▪ MACON, GEORGIA ▪ NEW YORK • CHICAGO • PHILADELPHIA • AKRON

(Continued from Page 170)

She walked to the typewriter desk, and in an instant her small brown hands were moving capably over the keys. The bell pinged at impossibly short intervals, the carriage flew back as briskly as if the machine, actually on its last legs, were a modern electric job. She was good. Poor little thing—three jobs! She shouldn't be working; she should be out in the sunshine, picking flowers, playing tennis, happy, carefree, enjoying the springtime of youth. What on earth were her parents thinking of? But perhaps she was an orphan ——

"Do you want me to keep on and on?" she asked in a small voice. She sat with her hands folded politely in her lap, looking up at him, waiting for him to tell her what she should do.

"May I see?"

She slid the paper out of the machine and handed it to him. He read. "I am Candy Stimson. I come from a long line of impeccable typists. My sister types better and more quickly than I do, and has more endurance, too, but perhaps less enthusiasm, because dancing is the love of her life. Mother is terrific—she positively never uses an eraser, and I do not mean to imply that she hits one letter over another either. She is a novelist, and has simply had years of experience with typewriters. However, she cannot yet change a ribbon. Nonetheless, the person who is fortunate enough to have mother in his office, even for short periods of time, is indeed a lucky man. As far as that goes, Gram typewrites like a wiz, but that is hardly worth mentioning because we are not, currently, on speaking terms with Gram, and she will therefore not be of any help in this crisis." There were no mistakes.

"Very good," David said in a mystified voice. "Now, as I told you on the phone, this is a part-time job. The hours are from nine in the morning until noon, which gives us a fifteen-hour week. If you feel you want the job, I don't see why this shouldn't work out, Miss Stimson. That is, if a dollar an hour will be satisfactory?"

"Oh, yes," she said sunnily. "Marvelous, really. It will sort of keep us out of the gutter until the tomatoes get ripe. What I mean is, a farm is a perfectly wonderful place to be while mother is between books, which is to a writer what being at liberty is to an actor ——"

"Uh ——" said David.

"—— and on a farm, you can live on almost nothing—but the catch is that word 'almost.' By the time we paid for the tomatoes—Bonnie Best, they are, and wonderful, and a florist grows them, and they come each one in its own little pot, and you buy three thousand stakes as well ——"

"Three thousand steaks?" asked her new employer dazedly. She nodded.

"You can see that a project like that is extremely rough on the cash on hand. Oh, well—I'll be in here pretty regularly at the beginning, anyway, I imagine ——" She broke off and looked at him thoughtfully. "What would you like me to call you?" she inquired.

"Call me?" What was there about this child which made him sound like an echo in the valley?

"Would you like me to call you by your telephone number, which is the way you signed the advertisement in the paper, or should I say just plain Room Two-seventeen, Harkness Building?"

David flushed. "I'm having my name put on the door," he began apologetically. "The man ought to be here today sometime. You see, I'm just starting in business here ——"

"Oh, I see! And you'd like me to wait, and be surprised?"

"No!" David exploded. He stood up and slapped his palms down on the desk, which, because of his height, had the effect of making him look as if he were about to engage in a game of leapfrog. "I am David Brown," he informed her. "I am eastern sales manager for the Fabulex Oil Burner, Sales and Service. You may have heard of the Fabulex? It is"—his voice took on an appropriately reverent tone—"the Oil Burner Which Will Revolutionize the Industry."

"Which is revolutionizing the industry," Candy corrected him, speaking in a thoughtful undertone. "Today, I mean, you know—not tomorrow, or next week." She rose and walked over to him. "How do you do, Mr. Brown?" He found himself, ridiculously, shaking hands with her.

"Calluses!" he exclaimed, and turned the small paw over. Either it was unusually brown, or his own hands were too white. "Golf?" he inquired.

"Tomatoes," said Miss Stimson, dismissing the subject. "And come the revolution in the oil-burner industry, Mr. Brown, you will probably need not a part-time typist but a full-time secretary, at a considerable increase in pay?"

"Come the revolution, all sorts of changes will be made," he told her, and was honestly surprised at how gloomy he sounded.

When he had established this branch of Fabulex, and the money was beginning to come in regularly, Vera would come east and marry him. She had said so. A wonderful housekeeper, a wonderful little manager, Vera. He was certainly a lucky man! He sighed, and dropped Candy's hand.

"And what is this you've been saying about being in here pretty regularly at the beginning?" he inquired, thinking that if she had done anything right in this first interview he could not at the moment recall what it was. Gosh, she had a lot to learn! "What I am looking for is some reliable person who will be in here every day, on time, too, and no nonsense. Let's get that clear at the start! I don't understand ——"

Nothing fails like worldly success. My study of twenty-one civilizations has convinced me that cultures are healthy only when they are creative. The civilization that solves its problems and rests on its oars has a sad future if it does not respond to the next challenge with a different answer. —ARNOLD J. TOYNBEE.

"Well," she broke in firmly, "after all—fifteen dollars a week is very nice, and it is going to be the salvation of the Stimsons, but you must admit, Mr. Brown, that it is hardly world-shaking. I mean, people aren't going to revise their whole lives for fifteen dollars a week. I mean, we have a pretty sizable project started right now, with the chickens and three thousand staked tomatoes, and the way I figure this thing out is that when it is practical for me to come in and hold the fort here. I'll certainly do it. And when there is hand hoeing around the tomatoes that simply has to be done, or something of the sort—after all, Mr. Brown, my mother is a writer, and should not be expected to stand out in the broiling sun hoeing weeds in a tomato patch—why, she will come in and take your messages and cope, and that is why I put down the bit about mother on my typing sample ——"

"Uh ——" said David.

"—— and perhaps, although this I do not promise you, perhaps Cynthia—she is my sister, the dancer, and one of the most beautiful girls in the world, only at the moment she is in charge of our chickens—perhaps she will sometimes come in to pinch-hit ——"

"Dear heaven," said David.

The child moved toward the door, and she did have stockings on—seamless nylons. "And thank you," she said feelingly, "for your kindness, and for being so understanding. You will never regret it. You have helped us," she went on, with a touching young dignity, "when we truly did not know which way to turn. I promise you faithfully, Mr. Brown, we Stimsons will never forget it."

Candy appeared on the dot of nine the following morning, and David handed her the list of names he had worked up, and the letter about Fabulex which was, he hoped, going to start the phone ringing in chords with excited inquiries about this easy, clean and superbly economical method of heating homes and office buildings.

"I have a few calls to make," he told her, exaggerating only slightly, as he did have one call to make: he had to get his hair cut. "If I am not back by noon, snap the lock, Miss Stimson, and go your merry way. Leave the list and the letters on my desk. I'll take care of them. And don't worry if you do not get through the list. What you don't do today, you do tomorrow."

She was reading his letter. "You may call me Candy, if you want to," she murmured absently. She tapped the sheet of paper. "This. Do you want me to use my imagination on it a little bit, or do it the way it's written?"

He steeled himself against the hopefulness in her voice. "The way it's written," he said firmly. "To the last comma." He fled.

By exerting his will power to the utmost, he managed to stay away from the office until twelve-ten. She was gone. The door was locked. He unlocked it and went in, to find the letters, completely finished, in a neat stack upon his desk. Even Vera would have to admit that this girl was a fiend for work. He sighed, and began signing his name.

Things went on in this impersonal and businesslike fashion for three days. Candy was indeed a glutton for work, but there was, he thought that third day, something odd about the way she moved, the way she held herself. Rather like a mechanical doll. As she was preparing to go home, he mentioned it.

"Did you ever," she asked—not indignantly, but wearily, and as one seeking information—"tie up three thousand tomato plants?"

"I don't see any point in it," he said. "After all, this is a free country."

"Ha, twice," said Candy with the first trace of bitterness he had noticed in her. "You city slickers, so far from the sources of production that a remark like that seems humorous to you ——" She stopped, and caught her breath. "I'm sorry, David." She flung out her hands in a brief, imploring gesture. "I'm really sorry. I have a backache, like the people on the radio."

It was the first time she had called him by his given name. He had never realized before what a musical name it was. But she declined his invitation to lunch on the grounds that she had pressing business at home.

"At least let me drive you home."

The poor little thing, hardly able to move because of an aching back! Obviously the thing to do was to take the afternoon off and give her a hand. He could justify this procedure readily enough because in return for putting in a couple of hours on her tomatoes, he'd have his typist in far better condition for the next morning's office work. Probably do in a couple of hours of healthful outdoor exercise what it would take the girl the better part of a day too. And a May afternoon like this—people weren't thinking of changing over on their heating plants today. They were just heartily glad to be done with them for a while. July, now, or August, with the days shortening up, the astute David told himself, hit 'em then, and the sales are a pushover.

"You drive me home at your own risk," warned Candy, easing herself gingerly to her feet. "You are a kind person, David, and you've been dreamy to me. So, although it is contrary to my usual policy, I'll give you fair warning. This is what will happen: mother will come out to the car, and charmingly—for she is a charming person—invite you to stay for lunch. Mistake number two: you will stay. You will look at our heating plant, a little number which must have come over on the Mayflower, realizing only belatedly that we could not possibly afford a Fabulex—even a Fabulex Standard—for about ten years. Then—and I think we are up to mistake number four—you will allow yourself to be shown around the farm." She walked rather aimlessly over to the window and stood, staring out. Then she turned back. "David, you are from Cincinnati?"

"Cleveland."

"It's the same thing. You don't know beans about a farm. It is a place where a

(Continued on Page 175)

SAFEST VAPORIZER Ever Made!

The FIRST and ONLY

10 to 24 HOUR* VAPORIZERS that Triple as Humidifiers and Deodorizers!

Split-second steam action helps give almost instant relief from stuffy misery of nose and chest colds . . . Absolutely safe! Water in "remote reservoir" can't become boiling hot . . . Automatically shuts off when water evaporates. "Insawall" cool base. Detachable Vapo-cup for vaporizing medicaments. AC only.

At better druggists and electric appliance dealers. $5.95

DeLuxe Model: Ceramic, satin-finish aluminum, plastic base..... $6.95

*Furnished with 48½-oz. jar for 10-hour vaporization. Use 1-gal. Mason-type jar for 24-hour continuous vaporization.

If your dealer doesn't have one, write us.

Electresteem

BABY CHEF JR. BOTTLE WARMER

America's finest! "Insawall" construction keeps side walls cool. Boils baby's egg. Automatic shut off. AC only. $1.99

ELECTRIC STEAM RADIATOR CORP.
1 ELECTRIC AVENUE PARIS, KENTUCKY

Fibs Tampons have rounded ends...the only Tampon "Quilted" for comfort... "Quilted" for safety... Next time try Fibs*

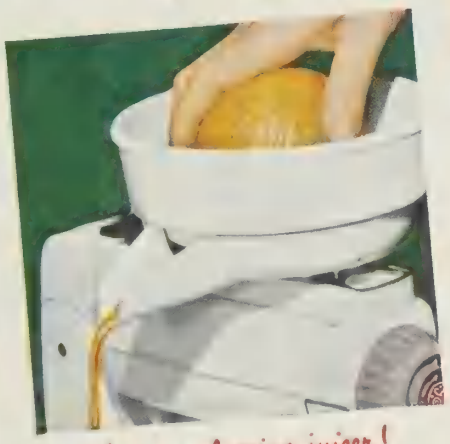
(internal sanitary protection)

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

General Electric Triple-Whip Mixer

You get 3 powerful beaters . . .
a built-in light
. . . and the best juicer ever!

$39.95



Built-in light!

You'll just love the special light that's built right in the General Electric Triple-Whip Mixer. It shines directly down into bowl so you can clearly see what you're mixing. (A four-quart and a two-quart bowl come with each mixer.)

3 beaters..and so easy to clean!

To give you faster, more thorough mixing, you get three powerful beaters. They're so easy to clean, too. No center shaft, no hard-to-reach corners get in your way. And beaters are designed to beat completely from center to side of bowls.

New, nonclogging juicer!

You'll bless the wonderful new juicer that comes with the 1950 General Electric Triple-Whip Mixer. Even when you juice over a dozen oranges, there's no clogging —thanks to the automatic strainer! General Electric Co., Bridgeport 2, Conn.

New, improved speed selector!

It's out in front where it's so easy to read and to set to the just-right speed. You get constant power—and lots of it, even at low speeds, even when mixing the heaviest batter. And as a portable, it weighs a mere 4 pounds!

See your G-E dealer. $39.95
Price subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 173)

isis is always just around the corner. And ie tricky thing about it is that you, innont and unaware, will feel that we have ompletely overlooked some obvious angle, iat nothing is this hard'—oh, no! I honestly ean, don't take me home. Let me go in the sual way, by bus."

In just such heart-rending accents, Br'er abbit besought Br'er Fox not to toss him ito the brier patch.

It happened as Candy had predicted. He ccepted Mrs. Stimson's luncheon invitation. he heating plant was held together in spots ith baling wire. The hot-water tank had rips of metal clamped over the places where had started to leak. He met Cynthia, who as packing eggs in crates in the room off the urnace room and was startled to find a girl f such classic beauty, and with the same icky upswing of lashes he had noticed on Candy, too, packing eggs in a farmhouse ellar.

After a delicious lunch, he was shown the hickens—nothing unusual there—and the hree thousand staked tomato plants. They tood in straight rows, thirty straight rows; ne hundred plants, Candy said, to a row. hey looked like the illustration in his old anglewood Tales of the warriors springing p full-armed after Jason had sown the ragon's teeth. At least, the stakes did. The lants were little green blobs huddling pologetically at the base of each stake.

"Who put in all the sticks?" David asked.

"Bill. Bill Soames." Cynthia, standing beside him in a brown-and-yellow dirndl sort of hing and looking as if she were only waiting for her cue to come onstage, answered him. Candy, in a T shirt and faded blue shorts, had already begun work. Crouched beside a shrinking plant, she was tenderly straightening it, coaxing it, tying it. "Bill," Cynthia went on, "has been simply wonderful. A giant of strength to us."

It did not take a giant of strength, David thought, to tie up a tomato. Bill might better spend all that energy elsewhere. Anyone could see that Candy was making a lot of work out of what should be a fairly simple operation.

"Let me give you a hand," he said, bending beside her. "Now, why don't you ——"

Five hours later, he was able to stand up with almost no trouble at all. Just a sharp push with the heels of his hands against his back, on either side of the spinal column, a little above the waist—there was nothing to it.

And Cynthia said enthusiastically, "He's as good as Bill, don't you think, Candy? I wouldn't have believed one man could have accomplished so much in a single afternoon."

Candy said, "No. I do not think he is as good as Bill, and neither do you, Cynthia Stimson." Candy looked pale and tired and there was a smudge on her nose. She said, "Go home, boss. You've been took, like I warned you." She walked with him to the car, and unexpectedly produced a bulky object in a used brown paper bag and handed it to him. "Here. It's a heating pad. After a good hot bath, you plug it in and put it where you ache worst. Oh, David!" Her voice broke. "Your kind heart does you credit, but, honestly, my admiration for your judgment knows bounds!"

Vera wrote that his letters did not say much. She also said that she and Raymond Eaves had entered the duplicate-bridge tournament at the town hall, that they had come in tops for the first session, and that he must wish them luck: they had nine sessions of tough going ahead of them. He wrote back that he certainly wished them luck, but that he was surprised she was Ray's partner, because he remembered she had said she couldn't stand Raymond Eaves.

And May became June and tottered upon the brink of July, and the people of Middleville, to a man, were satisfied with the heating plants they had.

David was going out to the farm pretty regularly by this time. There was always something to do there, which made it strikingly different from Fabulex Sales and Service. He met Bill Soames and worked beside that burly youth among the tomatoes, which by now were burgeoning.

Vera wrote a rather acid letter saying that he was entirely mistaken about her feeling in connection with Raymond Eaves, who had just bought a new yellow convertible. She gave the scores of the bridge sessions to date, and some—in fact, quite a number—of the hands in full detail. David saved the letter to read when he could stay awake. One thing about picking staked tomatoes that is really tough is that they are picked as soon as a faint pink blush appears on the blossom end. This is the end farthest from the eye. You practically stand on your head before each plant, to decide whether or not it is time to pick any of the fruit on it, and the little gadget David had dreamed up, rather like the mirror the dentist uses when he is looking at that molar, was no good at all.

But these were pretty impressive tomatoes. They were bringing a nice fat twenty dollars a bushel at wholesale, and although David would have said only a few months earlier that no tomato was worth that much, he felt somewhat differently about the matter now. He felt somewhat differently about a lot of matters. He was a great deal browner and stronger than he had ever been in his life as, clad simply in sneakers and a battered pair of slacks, he strove to keep up with the redoubtable Soames in the various jobs about the Stimson farm. There was little anyone could tell him now about pinching off the sucker growth from a tomato plant, about mulching the ground at the base of each one to inhibit weed growth, about removing the deadly horned green tomato worm—deadly, that is, to tomatoes. He agreed with Bill that it was as good as golf, if you didn't care what you said. And he had put on weight. Mrs. Stimson not only cooked wonderful lunches, but she had a way of appearing, along about the middle of the afternoon, with a faraway look in her eyes, a pitcher of iced tea and a homemade angel cake. Cynthia said the faraway look meant that mom was getting her grappling hooks into another plot, but the angel cake was delicious.

The Fabulex business was dashing ahead with all the proverbial speed of molasses in January, but that was all right, too, because nobody really wanted to make a change-over in his heating plant in the beginning of July, and David, if you took the long view, was doing the right thing by taking it easy, getting to know the people and be known by them, but Vera, although usually a highly intelligent girl, could not be made to understand this. Vera had written an unfathomable letter about sending a boy to do a man's job. Reading Vera's letters, these days, was something less than unalloyed pleasure, he thought, and then grinned, reflecting that Candy would have said, "alloyed pleasure."

As for Candy, she shared with Vera—and it was the single thing she did share with Vera—a concern for the way the Fabulex business was going.

"Look," she said, toward the end of July, "I mean, don't hesitate. We are much better off now, you know, with the tomato checks beginning to come in, and with all the help you two angel idiots—and I refer here to you and Bill—have been giving us, and if you feel that you'd be well advised to save this fifteen bucks a week you're paying me, the least I can do, David, is to come in here for free. I've wanted to say this for ages, but I haven't been able to"—she gave a funny, crooked little smile—"to afford it."

He felt a lump coming in his throat. "Be yourself," he said sternly. "I have to keep up a front, don't I? And for fifteen dollars—forget it."

"Well, look, David. You've skinned outrageously on making your personal follow-up calls. And after all the letters we sent out too! Forget the farm"—she was pounding one small fist into the other palm, and scowling fiercely at him, and the only way he kept from putting his arms around her was by keeping his hands in his pockets—"and put the energy you've been devoting to hoeing, and pruning trees in the orchard, and chopping wood, and everything—put that to work for Fabulex. Please? Pretty please?"

Nothing had ever appealed to him less. "Yeah? And what happens to the alfalfa?"

There were eight acres of alfalfa about ready for the second cutting and he and Bill, talking it over, had decided that the thing to do was to have a farmer with a baler come in and bale it. Then Mrs. Stimson could sell it at her convenience, and get a good price for it, whenever she needed the money. The bales, which ran around seventy-five pounds apiece, they would load, he and Bill, on the flat wagon, and store in the barn, they had figured. They had been looking forward to

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

OUR children await Christmas presents like politicians getting in election returns: there's the Uncle Fred precinct and the Aunt Ruth district still to come in.

Politeness creed for the average child: With a quick eye and without seeming to choose, carefully select the largest.

Quaint foods that women dote on,
Husbands invariably bloat on.

A man always chokes the bat on a bouquet of flowers.

Our favorite families always open their presents Christmas morning.

Like the Christmas tree, we should show our best sides.

Most girls go to college to father their nests.

Notice in local paper: "Due to conditions beyond my control . . . wife learning to drive . . . I am no longer responsible for the actions of my car. License No. ——"

Horrified daughter: "Mother, don't call me sensible! Have you ever seen sensible shoes?"

Probably many a teacher wishes that little boys could go to sleep in the winter and hibernate upon the exploits of their summer vacation.

Every woman knows it isn't what you do in a house that shows, but what you don't do.

Daughter thinks for herself: "You didn't tell me which kind of soda to get and the grocer had three: washing, drinking, baking; but I remembered you were at the stove, so I brought baking."

Most dogs are watchdogs—when mother is at the kitchen stove.

The opportunist posts his sign:
JUSTICE OF THE PEACE
MARRIAGES
REAL ESTATE

Being in the proximity of adolescent daughters expecting to hear from the boy of the moment is as hazardous as being in the company of swarming bees, but eventually you may share the harvest of honey.

As rare as the color black in a child's picture.

"HERB-OX" MAKES THIS HEARTY DISH

High in flavor Low in cost!

BRAISED LAMB SHANKS — Dredge 6 lamb shanks with seasoned flour. Brown in 2 tablespoons fat. Place in baking dish. Rinse out frying pan with 1 cup HERB-OX Bouillon; pour over meat. Cover and bake in a slow oven (300° F.) for 2 hours.

Send for The Money-Saver — recipe and menu booklet showing how HERB-OX flavors up lower cost meats and main dishes, makes delicious soup and gravy base. The Pure Food Co., Inc., Mamaroneck, N. Y. Dept. (LHJ-12). Canadian Agent, C-A Sales Co. Ltd., Montreal.

Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUBES

Rooms Smell Nice Quick with VAPAIR
ROOM DEODORANT
Bomb or Wick

VAPAIR BOMB — For instant killing of odors. Just press the button VAPAIR WICK — For continuous killing of odors. Just pull wick
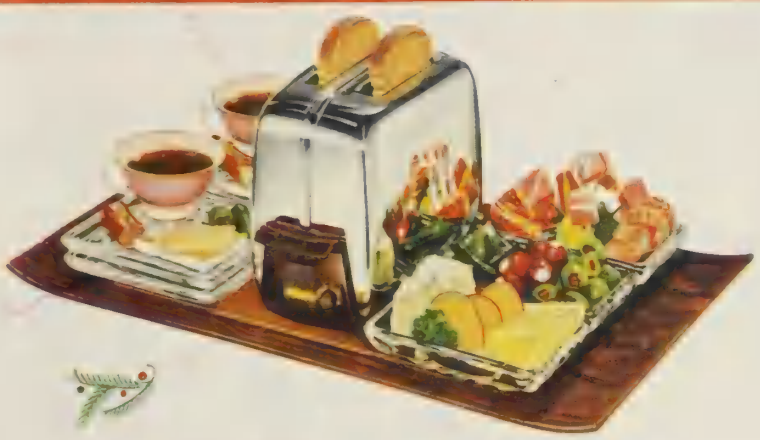
Now Two Sizes
A CLEAN HOME PRODUCT
$1.59 98¢
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
69¢



Kahn's
American Beauty
SLICED Bacon

with the old fashioned, unforgettable flavor. Genuine Hickory Smoked—sweet and mild . . . Transparent wrappers show the entire slices.

THE E. KAHN'S SONS CO., CINCINNATI, O.
American Beauty Hams, Shortening and Fine Meat Products Since 1882

Toastmaster Gifts

FOR THE ONE WHO MARRIED, MOTHERED, OR JUST MEANS MUCH TO YOU!

SHE'LL HAVE PARTIES that almost give themselves with the "Toastmaster" "Hospitality"* Set. Hand-rubbed walnut tray invites self-service, frees the hostess for fun. Four handmade crystal party plates and three matching relish dishes make the simplest snacks exciting. Includes the famous "Toastmaster"* Toaster.

A REAL PARTY-PROMOTER—the "Toastmaster" Waffle Service. Handsome walnut tray has loads of extra uses. So, too, have the batter bowl and syrup pitcher in sprout-green Franciscan Ware. Graceful chromium ladle measures out one waffle—to a drop! Includes the "Toastmaster" Waffle Baker with "Siltect"* non-stick grids.

FOR SNACKS THAT HIT THE SPOT with youngsters after school, oldsters after the show—there's nothing like the new "Toastmaster" "Toast 'n Jam"* Set. A breakfast-brightener, too. Handsome walnut tray, gay colored jars and toast plate of fine Franciscan Ware, and the beautiful "Toastmaster" Toaster.

AMERICA'S MOST-WANTED TOASTER is the one that'll be found in your own. Pops up perfect toast every time—light, dark, or in-between. Completely automatic, safe to clean, has extra-thick chrome finish for enduring beauty. There are "Toastmaster" Toasters still serving faithfully after 20 years!

TOASTMASTER

Automatic Electric Appliances make heart-warming gifts!

this harvest. It would probably have nearly killed David a few months earlier. Now he rubbed his hands together triumphantly and waited for Candy's answer to that one.

"All right," she said at last. "You show me even two signed sales orders, and I'll graciously permit you to break your back in the alfalfa field." She shook her head, but she smiled at him at the same time.

He felt like an outcast, like the one who has not been invited to the party. He had his car washed, and he went forth, gleaming and spotless, in a white shirt and a necktie and pressed pants and polished shoes—Middlevillage would have thought he was putting on airs if he had worn a jacket, in July—and he talked to people like the cashier of the First National, and Mr. Schultze, who owned an entire business block across from the old post office.

He told them about the Fabulex Standard, which was merely terrific, and about the Fabulex Super, which was out of this world. The cashier of the First National thought a merely terrific one would do him nicely, and Mr. Schultze was a doddering old fool who could not make up his mind, so he had to go on and talk to dozens of other people including the man at the farmers' co-op, and it turned out he had a brother-in-law who was an architect. And one interview led to another.

And all the time he had the picture, somewhere back of his eyeballs, of Candy and Cynthia in T shirts and shorts, and Bill, a bronzed Pan stripped to the waist, with his muscles rippling in the breeze, having a perfectly magnificent time together. In the picture were all the ripe and luscious gold and green of the farm, the demanding heat of its sun, the refreshing cool of its shade. It broke his heart. The Candy who came in every day from nine to twelve and typed his letters and answered his telephone, and sternly refused to allow him to darken her farm until he got that second sales order, was a different order of being from the laughing child who drove a rented tractor across a stubbly hayfield. He felt like an outcast.

("Just operating on averages, if you keep on making calls, you'll make sales," said Candy.)

Maybe it was the thought of the alfalfa which turned the trick. It had been cut, and it was to be baled that afternoon. It had soaked up July sunshine for two amber days, and it was ready to be harvested. And still Candy had not weakened.

"We'll manage without you, David," she said. "We'll manage somehow. I'm not just being a skunk, David. This is your business! Do you think I want to come along and ruin your life?"

THERE would be Candy and Bill, the two of them. Cynthia, for some reason, had made it clear from the outset that she was not, thank you, going to involve herself in alfalfa. No toothache had ever hurt as much as the thought of Candy and Bill out there in that hayfield.

Nobody, he thought, aching dully, ever looked less like a professor of romance languages than Bill Soames. He had gone to a lot of trouble to find out about Bill and had discovered that Bill taught in a university in New York City and spent his vacations on the farm next to the one Mrs. Stimson had so impetuously bought. He found out a great deal about Bill. The trouble was, it was all good. And there were other troubles. Did Bill have his eye on Cynthia, or on Candy? And what did Candy really feel about Bill?

For this and other exciting answers, tune in tomorrow, same time, same station, he thought sourly, going out to see Mr. Schultze for the seventeenth time. The old fool, he thought, going through the motions of making his seventeenth pitch for dear old Fabulex. The alfalfa lying in the field ——

"Listen," snarled Mr. Schultze. "If you can spare me the time to listen to me! Give me one of them contracts. We'll try the super, once!"

Tenderly holding the signed contract of that great public benefactor, that mastermind, Mr. E. Z. Schultze, David floated back to the office, reaching there dangerously close to the noon hour. In fact, he thought at first that she had gone, and had for some reason left the place standing open. And then he heard a pathetic little sniff, and found Candy standing behind the door crying her eyes out.

"Baby!" said David tenderly. She held a small registered package out to him and went right on with what she was doing. He took it and placed it on the desk. "For heaven's sake, what has happened to you?"

"JUST merely everything," wept Candy softly. "Just merely everything, is all. Mother has sold her book, and of course that means she's got to start to write it now ——"

Prudently, he closed the door. "It means what?"

"She sold an outline and a first chapter," sobbed Candy, and her voice went up in the air and out of control, and for a minute she couldn't even speak, but just wept heartbrokenly, and when he would have taken her in his arms she looked up at him out of drowned eyes and shook her head. "That is only the first part," she said. "Cynthia's job has come through. They start rehearsals next week ——"

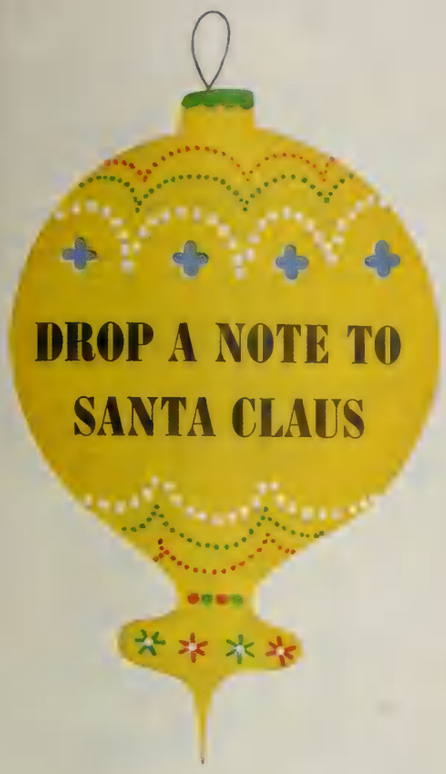
Hysterical reaction, thought David. Poor, overstrained, overanxious little child! "Why, this is wonderful news," he said, speaking in an encouraging voice.

"Oh, it is just simply dandy," Candy wailed. "What it means is, Cynthia's going to New York, and mother is going to—to Hollywood, and I—I—I am going to Gram's in Rhode Island, and the farm will be going to the dogs, because nobody cares about it any more, and after all we've done ——" She had been fighting back her sobs as long as she could, and here she lapsed into incoherence. He only understood bits of what she said because she was in his arms now, with her voice muffled against his shoulder. "All those chickens, doing their best," wept Candy. And again, "Even if the tomatoes aren't worth as much as they were earlier, they're still"—she stopped, accepted his handkerchief, wiped her eyes, and ended in something more like her usual voice—"still very good tomatoes, and a whole lot better than a great many tomatoes I could mention!"

"You bet they are!" soothed David. "What does Bill think of all this?"

"Oh, of course he's enchanted! Why wouldn't he be? He and Cynthia will both be in New York! Oh, it's just wonderful for everybody," Candy went on. "Except us. Your girl called up here, this morning, and said a lot of perfectly horrible things at me over the telephone, and mentioned that she had returned your ring yesterday—I think that's it that I gave you when you came in, David, and I'm so terribly sorry for you—and I'll be leaving for Rhode Island at practically any instant now ——"

"Shut up, angel," David said masterfully. He shifted his weight, flexed his new muscles, tried unsuccessfully to hold back the broad grin that began to cover his face. A change was coming over him: all the blood in his veins was changing to champagne. There was no other way to explain the fizzy feeling of exhilaration which possessed him. "Of course you're not going to do anything of the sort at all," he told her. "Go to Rhode Island!" His scornful voice all but abolished the entire state. "You're going to stay right here and——"



Candy's breath was still coming in those heartbreaking little sobs, but she looked up at him when he stopped speaking, and tilted her head.

"Part time?" she asked.

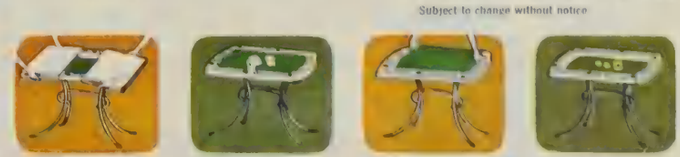
He kissed the tears which sparkled on those fabulous eyelashes. "Full time, baby," said David. "Until death us do part."

THE END

Cheer up: God is where He was. —RUSSIAN PROVERB.

Coloramic in Hollywood style, about $99.95 with four chairs. Bronze or silver gray legs. Limed oak, chartreuse, gray or green wood-grain Daystromite top. Chairs in red, green, yellow, chartreuse or gray Stardust.*

And ask for Coloramic—a Christmas gift for the whole family—to keep them dining merrily every day! Sleek-lined, sturdy steel legs and frames are sheathed with colorful, satin-smooth plastic that resists cracking, fading and peeling. The Wonder Top shrugs off scratches, stains, scars, heat—yes, even lighted cigarettes! And every bright inch is washable—from the rich upholstery to the Wonder Top! Best of all, Coloramic's at home even in formal décor—yet it's priced for modest purses!



Playdine comes in 2 different sizes, about $124.50 and $144.50* with four chairs. Triple-plated chrome legs. Daystromite top in gray pearl. Chairs in a gay array of colors and patterns.*

Put Playdine on your list, too!

Everyone will love this table with a triple personality! For meals it's a graceful dining table with a handsome Wonder Top. But that's not all! The durable top slides smoothly aside in a jiffy—and you have a versatile game table with two convenient playing levels, both covered with rich, green felt. Safe, secure places for glasses, chips and ash trays, too!

* Prices slightly higher in West, South and Canada
Subject to change without notice

SLIDES OPEN EASILY! | TOP SURFACE FOR CARDS! | TOP SURFACE LIFTS OUT! | LOWER SURFACE FOR DICE!

-it's DAYSTROM furniture!

RECEIVED THE FASHION ACADEMY GOLD MEDAL FOR 1950

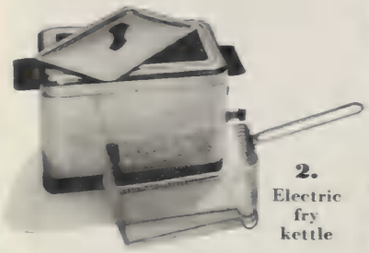
THE TABLES WITH THE WONDER TOP

At furniture and department stores in United States and Canada

Daystrom Corporation, Olean, N. Y.; Daystrom-Balboa Corporation, Fullerton, Calif.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME

1. Combination clock-radio



One reason homemaking is always a new adventure, I think, is that something exciting is forever just around the corner. New colors to try, new dishes to invent, new places to move the furniture to, and old friends to sit by the fire with! And wonderful new inventions to make living easy and gay. The JOURNAL staff keeps a handbook in the Journal Home Kitchen where especially good suggestions for homemakers are filed, and these, I know, any woman would love to add to her list of things to have or things to give.

TIME MARCHES ON

There is a new electric repeater clock that marks the days pleasantly. You set it once, and then the faithful friend rings every morning thereafter. What's more, a shut-off lever hushes the alarm on mornings when you sleep late.

Or if you feel, as I do, that every day begins too soon, you may have a selector clock and wake up to music from a radio which can be plugged into this marvelous clock. It can be set to turn on programs for selected fifteen-minute periods all day long. You can wash or vacuum or mind the baby and still have your favorite programs without madly dashing back and forth.

Another variation is a radio with a clock built in (1) which can tune you in on the Breakfast Club and turn off by itself at the end of the hour. What's more, some have extra outlets—put one in the kitchen and use the clock arrangement to make your coffee maker perform with hot steaming coffee when you get back from the movies.

2. Electric fry kettle

3. Griddle set

COOKING IS FUN

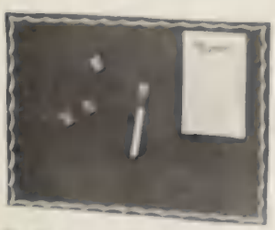
In fact, it would be fun even if you still had to rub two sticks together to make a fire. But oh, the lovely aids to perfection that you can add to your menu making now!

I am saving up for an electric fry kettle (2), a home-sized deep fryer with a temperature control so that you can have perfect French-fried onions or potatoes or chicken. As for fried clams—you can have them just golden and crispy and tender. Think of fritters done to a turn when the children get home from skating. Deep-fat frying is such an anxious job, but not with this electrically run fryer.

A griddle set (3) would be fine for crêpes Suzette or pancakes or clam cakes; it has five pieces. The griddle is aluminum, has indicator to show the right heat for cakes or chops or whatever. A stainless-steel bowl, a ladle and a turner complete the set. It's all so pretty, too, you can serve right from the griddle.

I wish I'd had a doughnut maker when I was making doughnuts by the tons for the children. The new doughnut maker (4) is lightweight plastic and operates like a little press. No more rolling and cutting and having a soft one fall off the spatula. You simply push the plunger and the doughnuts drop out!

And maybe if I had a garlic crusher (5), I wouldn't have garlic up to my eyebrows. I don't really mind—I love garlic—but this gadget squeezes drops of juice from the bulb, and there you are!



4. Doughnut maker

5. Garlic crusher

6. Electric hot tray

7. Magnetic bulletin board

A LEFT-HANDED COMPLIMENT

Left-handed irons, can openers, saucepans, shears, and for the man of the house—or the little woman—golf clubs! All for the left-handed.

DROP IN ANYTIME

That's easy to say, and easy to mean, too, if you have a chafing dish. Mamma had one and then they went out of fashion and now they're here again, and my very favorite of all cooking things. Give me a chafing dish on a desert island and I will cook most happily. Cook with it at the table, and try anything from scrambled eggs with chili to buttered fresh lobster meat.

Then an electric hot tray (6) to keep things warm will make hospitality come naturally to your house, and for guests arriving who-knows-when by auto, this is a wonderful help. For eating in bed when you have grippe, this warm friend is the answer to tray meals. A larger version is the table, very suave and, like the tray, it never overheats, stays just right.

Individual copper pans to cook and serve in are luxurious and reasonable. I use them for shirred eggs, ham slices or individual servings of creamed shrimp. They add glamour, and also save dishwashing. Pan to table is a good rule.

A magnetic bulletin board (7) is fine for recipes while you cook—I keep my corn-bread recipe always on mine. It will also hold notes, calorie charts or bills.

YOU CAN FIX IT YOURSELF

A big help is a magnetic bar for tools, which holds small tools right over the work bench or table. The magnet really grabs the tools and holds tight when you put them near it.

And a screw driver with a battery light in the red plastic handle (8) is a godsend. You simply turn a knob in the end of the handle and the slot in the screw is lighted. The screw driver has two blades, an extra battery and comes in a zippered case.

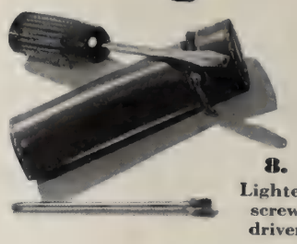
A home repair kit would be useful for both the handy housewife and her husband. It has hammer, pliers, screw driver, measuring tape, screws and nails.

Another type is pocket-size (9) with a jack knife as the basis, and includes a hammer, file, screw driver and can opener.

It's hard to believe, but a flashlight that shines around a corner (10) is really possible. Curved Lucite ends bend the beams around corners and curves. No more fumbling in the dark with this type of flashlight.

HOW DOES YOUR GARDEN GROW?

If you have green-thumb gardening gloves made of cream-colored latex-treated fabric, your gardening will be a joy. The gloves are washable, have cuffs to protect your arms, and fit loosely for comfort.



When you gather flowers, you will like the new garden shears. They have good cutlery-steel blades, and, after snipping through the stem, a device holds the cut flower until you are ready to drop it.

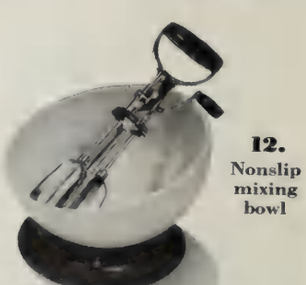
While it is yet winter, gardeners may water their house plants with a watering pot that has a built-in pump (11). A plunger on the handle pumps water up the spout so you can water the ivy on the mantel or the wall-bracketed philodendron with ease.

COME INTO THE KITCHEN

You'll enjoy mixing with a bowl with a suction base (12) so it will not slip, no matter what you do. The bowl can be either glass or stainless steel, whichever you like.

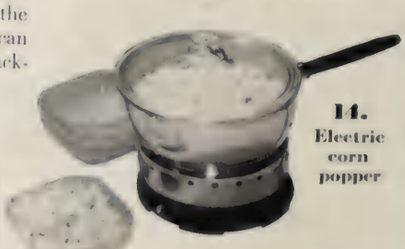
(Continued on Page 180)

8. Lighted screw driver



9. Pocket repair kit

10. Light that bends



11. To water hard-to-reach plants

12. Nonslip mixing bowl

13. Electric knife sharpener

14. Electric corn popper

"CUT-RITE" REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

...waxed all the way through

You'll get compliments on Monday when you serve the rest of Sunday's roast and vegetables . . . if you wrap what's left in Cut-Rite. Waxed-through Cut-Rite helps to keep out flavor-stealing air—you can be sure of saving that fine, fresh flavor for other delicious meals!

...folds, twists without splitting

Cheese or grapefruit, cucumber or melon! They won't dry out and lose their flavor! Just wrap them in extra-heavy Cut-Rite! Save space, too. Small things, Cut-Rite protected, can be tucked in icebox corners. Cut-Rite is wonderfully pliable, doesn't tear or split even when you twist it.

... cutting edge – tears easily

Not a speck of waste to Cut-Rite! That famous cutting edge tears evenly . . . always! Keep it within easy reach on your kitchen shelf for saving expensive food, for making fresher-keeping sandwiches. Today—most women choose it . . . love to use it. A Scott Paper Product.

If you want to be sure-wrap it in Cut-Rite

"Any time" is the right time to visit magic Mexico. There are so many things to see and do the year 'round. And Mexico's famous Spring-like climate lends itself perfectly to brimful enjoyment, relaxation and romantic adventure.

But to arrange your trip to Mexico in December will be a never-to-be-forgotten experience. For then you will find yourself right in the middle of the "Posada" season, the traditional nine-day festivities during which you can dance to the music of famous rumba bands, listen to the songs of colorful troubadours and mariachi and join in the smashing of gay Piñatas, chock-full of delightful surprises.

So make your reservations now. See your Travel Agent or . . .

air mail this coupon TODAY

Dirección General de Turismo
Avenida Juárez 89, México D. F.

Please send me information on Mexico. I'm especially interested in:

□ Mexico City □ A Quiet Rest □ Just Fun □ Fishing □ Archeology □ Native Scenes □ Beaches □ Sports

Name .....

Address .....

(Continued from Page 178)

A dull knife is worse than a dull person. An electric knife sharpener (13) replaces the old man who used to come around with his little wagon. A motor-driven wheel, with a guide to hold the knife at the right angle, makes your knives as sharp as a new tax bill.

An electric coffee grinder was my last-year's Christmas present, and better than a mink coat, I think. Cost less too. Freshly ground coffee when you push the switch is a treat. In the JOURNAL Workshop the coffee is ground just fine enough for the electric coffee maker, and these are two of the finest of all new inventions. The coffee maker keeps the coffee hot after it is made, and works entirely on its own through the whole process. You do have to draw water from the faucet and dump in the coffee, but that's all.

MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING

That's what mamma used to say. And so many new things do cost very little! Teen-agers will love the aprons on soft-drink bottles (and mother will love not having dozens of glasses to wash). They look lovely, and they even have little pockets for the straws!

We pop corn all winter long in a rusty old popper, but the electric corn popper (14) is inexpensive and pops beautifully. You can just plug it in any outlet. (Colorful unbreakable popcorn bowls add a lot to the crunching joy. Red, turquoise, citron and green are the colors.)

Matched sets of paper place mats and napkins, coasters and guest towels save the washing that company usually involves. We use the paper napkins for company dinners now, for they are so lovely in color and design.

A nice new idea is a monogrammed burnished brass door key, which would save frantic sorting of keys to find the right one. I always open a door by hit-and-miss, but this would be Open sesame for anyone!

A blunt-end stirring spoon keeps food from sticking in the corners of the pan.

A pin bin, which holds pins, needles or bobby pins magnetically in a plastic case, is a very lovely device, and it has a bobby-pin spreader on the lid.

A Howdy Doody toy chest helps the children keep their rooms neat. It is inexpensive and gay: a wood-framed box decorated with plasticized wallpaper. It is 29" wide and 14" deep. Matching clothes chests and screens are also available.

Any or all of these exciting new inventions add up to Christmas or any-day-of-the-year pleasant living in the very best place in the world—home.

MAGGIE'S CHRISTMAS TREE

(Continued from Page 40)

from Mathiew once, but he'd tried it only once! Mathiew had tossed him a rude answer. Joe growled back at him, and Mathiew had walloped the daylights out of him. That was eleven years ago, but Mathiew remembered with delight every punch in that fight. Rumor had it that Joe kept a gun handy ever since to kill Mathiew if he set foot on the Ryan ranch, and that made Mathiew laugh again. He was well rid of Joe!

He turned off the country road onto his own land, and now he felt the north wind striking him full in the chest. He liked the feel of it chilling the sweat on his shirt, cooling his hard-worked body. Wind was one of the things Mathiew liked especially. He liked the smooth feel of his mules; the touch of good, taut wire on his fences; the shine on his plow blade; the balance of a hammer; the thick cushions of meat on his cattle, and the rough skin of Temple oranges.

Wind like this was not only good to feel, but it might bring rain, and that was something else that he liked. To Mathiew a drop of rain was a good thing, and a rainstorm was wealth. He needed it too.

Be punctual, and inasmuch as none are punctual, learn to be patient also.
—PERSIAN PROVERB.

He passed his big barn and stopped at the tool shed. There he hung the canvas sack in its place, and popped the great spool of barbed wire over its proper spindle. Then he turned to the house, hungry and wanting dinner.

The lights in the living room seemed strange. Oil lamps have a light, soft glow, and sometimes a flickering when the wicks need trimming. The living room, however, was still too dim for that, and the flickering was too apparent. He couldn't understand until he looked in the window, and then something old and angry stirred in him.

The oil lamps were not lighted. The big living room, with its homemade furniture and calico curtains, was lighted by only the candles that burned on a Christmas tree in the far corner of his own living room!

The tree, being a scrub pine, didn't have much shape to it, but it was decorated with so much colored paper, so many strings of red chokeberries, pictures cut out of old magazines, and candles that the shape wasn't too important.

Mary Ann, his big-boned wife, slumped in the wooden armchair. While the baby nursed at her china-white breast, she watched the other children with a dreamy smile on her face. Her long yellow hair, caught together with a pink ribbon behind her neck, made her seem younger than she was.

Maggie, who was going to be five next month, squatted at the foot of the tree, and her eyes, mouth and mind were wide open with awe. Mathiew knew she was the cause of it all. She'd been talking a lot about candles, trees and reindeer lately. Did she think she could defy his orders?

Georgie, a muscled tub of a boy not yet three years old, was trying furiously to play with the burning candles, and only the constant interference of Witchgrass kept him from them.

Witchgrass looked like an ancient, ebony-colored dwarf. As long as Mathiew had known him, Witchgrass had been an old, old man, and his frail back had always had that strange curve. No one knew how old he was, but right then he looked like an ill-formed child. He danced grotesquely around after Georgie, telling some story that excited him as much as it did the children, and his high-pitched voice and chattering laughter came to Mathiew even stronger than the voice of the wind.

Obviously Mary Ann had joined the plotting against him, and when that occurred to him it made him angrier. They must have planned to get that tree for days! Not telling him . . . whispering behind doors . . . waiting for him to go before they talked! They knew how he felt about Christmas, and yet they had purposely planned to tear away the truth as he knew it!

When he opened the door and closed it behind him, the flames on the candles danced dangerously and happily, and four frightened faces turned to watch him.

"Hello, Mathiew." Mary Ann tried to make her voice casual. "Please don't be angry about the Christmas tree."

He wasn't the kind of man to speak quickly, and for a long moment the only noise was wind scurrying under the door, and the tiny whispers of guttering candles.

Then Witchgrass broke the quiet. "Gotta rack o' pork . . . gotta hungry man! . . . Gotta serve it up!" and he hunched off toward the kitchen.

"What's Witchgrass doin' in the house?" Mathiew asked, and the soft thunder of his voice filled the room.

"Emma wanted to have Christmas with her children; I let her go."

"You, nursin' the baby in front of that dirty little ol' man?"

"He's over a hundred, Mathiew! What difference?"

(Continued on Page 182)

"Your floors are a sight, Jane!" Aunt Sally scolded. "Those shabby spots are warning signs of real wear. Your floors will be ruined if you don't do something soon!"

"But what can I do?" Jane cried. "Look how the kids scuff them up; my floors take more punishment than anything else in the house. No wonder they're getting worn!"

"Now don't fret, Jane," Aunt Sally soothed. "It's not too late to save them—just use real wax. There's nothing like it to protect floors, because it's the wax that takes the wear."

Jane's proud of her floors now, gleaming with genuine Johnson's Wax. And with Johnson's Wax care, her floors will stay lovely year after year, never need costly refinishing!

Jane heeded the warning signs just in time to save her floors!

It's faster, easier with a Johnson's Wax Electric Polisher! You can rent one almost everywhere—available in 50,000 stores. Or you can buy one for $4.50.

Floors keep a like-new look with a gleaming coat of genuine wax!

If you want your floors to stay lovely throughout the years, use genuine Johnson's Wax!

Nothing protects and beautifies floors like a genuine Johnson's Wax finish. The daily punishment of scuffing feet won't mar it. Dirt and water don't penetrate to discolor the floor underneath. Thanks to the hard, protective wax film, wood floors never need costly refinishing...linoleum lasts 6 to 10 times longer!

Genuine wax takes a little more time to use than self polishing waxes, but you need apply it far less often, because the gleaming finish lasts and lasts.

Genuine Johnson's Wax comes in two forms—Paste and Liquid. Paste is more economical, because highly concentrated. Liquid is easier to use, and contains an efficient cleaning ingredient. Both are the real thing—genuine wax. See what Johnson's Wax can do for your floors!

For lasting beauty and protection insist on genuine

Johnson's WAX

(Paste or Liquid)

For advice on any floor care problem, write to Consumer Service Dept., S. C. Johnson & Son, Inc., Racine, Wis.

"Johnson's" is a registered trademark. © S. C. JOHNSON & SON, INC., Racine, Wis., 1950.

FUN TO MAKE...
Pretty to look at...

AND, Plenty of Good Cookie Eatin' for the Family!

This 10-inch-square Cookie House is a grand holiday baking idea for the entire family. The kids will love it... and even Dad can use his "know how" to help make it a wonderful centerpiece or holiday decoration.

QUICKER THAN YOU THINK—You just cut the dough to fit the pattern shapes, then bake and use sugar and molasses for "mortar" in assembling. (TOP SECRET: The special blend of Durkee spices gives this recipe a wonderful flavor, and an appetizing aroma.)

How to get this pattern-recipe!

Just send a grocery sales slip for the purchase of a can of Durkee Spice (or the name "Durkee" from any Durkee food package) to DURKEE FAMOUS FOODS, P. O. Box 93, Trenton, N.J., plus 5¢ to cover cost of mailing and handling.

© 1950 The Glidden Company

(Continued from Page 180)

He let it go. "Who brought that tree in here?"

Maggie was turning pale, and her lips were a shade bluer than before he came in, but her lower jaw was sticking out farther and farther. "Witchgrass brought it in!" Her piping voice was filled with defiance. "He brought it in to mamma and me and Georgie and Baby. He said you couldn't do nothin' about it 'cause Christmas Eve was magical!"

Maggie was the strangest thing in Mathiew's life. She was like a secret thought her mother had spoken by accident. So full of words he sometimes couldn't understand that she embarrassed him. Like everyone, Maggie showed fear of his strength, but her little acorn of a nose seemed to be always turned away from him, even when he tried to cuddle her the way other fathers hugged and patted their little girls.

He hadn't given up yet, but he had decided on one thing. Maggie was a little girl and he was the father. They'd live like he said, not like Maggie planned, and he stepped toward her tree.

"Don't you touch our tree!" she screamed. She was standing in front of him, only thirty-nine inches tall, staring ferociously up at his six feet four inches of body.

He tried to step around her, but she rushed to head him off. She was yelling at him again, her child voice high with fright and anxiety.

"Santy Claus is comin' tonight! If you touch our tree, he'll put a haunt on you! Witchgrass said so!"

"Nobody's comin' tonight, Maggie," he said firmly. "Least of all Santy Claus."

Maggie couldn't answer that. Christmas seemed like something that came as surely as a hurricane, or plowing time, or sunshine. It was silly to say, "I don't believe in it," but she couldn't tell him now. Her mind and tongue were jammed with fury.

"Mathiew!" Mary Ann was talking so strangely that it made him listen. As she talked she carefully watched the baby who still suckled so noisily at her breast. She couldn't make herself look at her husband and see into this dark corner of his spirit. "I've given you the things you married me for: my strength . . . my knack with a house . . . my company. Now I'm askin' you for something!" Her voice was rising. "Let the children have Christmas!"

He looked down at his little girl and his jaw was set bitterly. "You're only a little wench, Maggie," he began. "But you're gonna grow up knowin' the truth—knowin' that mighty few folk ever heard of Santy Claus, knowin' that Christmas is an idee for rich folks, knowin' that merchants keep it goin' just so as to keep sellin'! That's all there is to it."

MAGGIE was shaking with the power of her own argument, but her words couldn't form.

"We're lucky," Mathiew went on. "We got money for food, and for clothes. We got money for ranchin'. But we got no money to fool ourselves with. Money comes blood-hard!" He took the chimney off the lamp on the table, and striking a match on the seat of his heavy denim pants, he lighted the wick, and put the chimney back.

Somewhere upstairs the wind slammed a door, and the crashing noise broke the deadlock between Maggie's mind and mouth.

"Santy Claus's got money!"

"He ain't either," Mathiew said firmly. "It's my money!"

He had worked his way as far as the table, and now, as he started once again for the tree, he tried not to be rough when he pushed Maggie aside. He had to, however, because she fought him so hard.

In 1883 it fell to the lot of William Evarts, the great jurist, to conduct a visiting English nobleman on a sight-seeing tour. When they reached the Natural Bridge, in Virginia, Lord Coleridge wanted to know whether there was any truth in the story that George Washington once threw a silver dollar over the bridge from the ground below.

"It's quite probable," Evarts affirmed. "You must remember that a dollar went farther in those days than it does now. And besides, Washington was no novice. You remember that he once threw a sovereign across the Atlantic Ocean!"

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

As he pinched out the candles one by one Maggie gave up her fight, and the tears rushed down her face. Mathiew was simply too big for even Maggie. Strong enough to walk up to a full-grown steer and throw it, he was the last terrifying word of family authority. To them he was the giant in Jack and the Bean Stalk. He was Atlas holding the sky on his shoulders. He was Goliath.

"Santy Claus may be a little fella," Maggie sobbed. "But he kin knock you down and take the money out of your pockets. He's much, much stronger'n you are!"

"He's a delivery boy fer rich people, Maggie," he said. "Why, his deers ain't bigger'n dogs! He'd better not give me any sass!"

"He's stronger'n you are, just the same!" Maggie screamed.

HE was just pinching out one of the last few candles when Mary Ann spoke to him as she had never dared speak to him before.

"Let that tree alone!"

He stopped and turned around. She was standing, and her breast was covered again by her dress. The baby lay in her arms, drunk with her rich milk and his own sleep.

"You're the poorest-raised kid I ever heard of! Growin' up hatin' Christmas 'cause you didn't have any! You were raised like a gopher! But our kids are goin' to have Christmas!" She paused only to get her breath. "Maggie and Georgie and me are gonna sit here and look at that tree! An' we're gonna sing songs too!"

"Tonight's like any other night." His voice was a deep drum roll. "Tomorrow mornin' will come to us like every other. The sun won't be black 'cause we didn't spend our money for gewgaws, and didn't tell each other silly yarns. The ground won't turn to salt 'cause we're richer'n our neighbors that throw money away!"

"Children!" Her call rang with anger. "Get your jackets! We're goin' to the Ryans' for Christmas!"

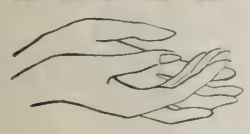
His temper roared within him. "Nobody's goin' to the Ryans'!"

But the children scurried here and there looking for their coats. Mary Ann was facing him with the sleeping baby in her arms, and the fury on her face was strong enough to match his own.

"Yes, we are, Mathiew!" she said through white teeth. "The Ryans keep Christmas. They have kids. They have a tree—and they'll share it."

The thought of his family going to Joe Ryan's was a kind of insanity. "You're not goin' to the Ryans'!" He shouted and the lamp rattled gently on the table. "You're not goin' now or ever!"

"You can't run a family with nothin' but strength!" she was saying.



His anger was a raging, savage animal that fought the harness he kept it in, and it made his great voice tremble. "We're gonna live with the truth! We're not gonna waste our lives and time on this!"

Although Maggie's Christmas tree reached to the ceiling, it came up in his hands like a broom. There were only two steps to the door, a second to open it, and he hurled the tree, paper ribbons and pictures, chokeberries and candles, clear over the porch and into the wind. Then he slammed the door and turned around.

He stood close to Mary Ann now, and he held back his huge hand from the slap he wanted to give. He knew how dangerous his hands were, and the words that were forming in his throat were ugly sounds.

When she spoke to him her eyes were as steady as if she were firing a rifle. "You can win for the minute," she said. "But your muscles are nothin' in a long run. Love is the 'gee' and the 'haw' that keeps a family goin' like you want it to."

DRY SKIN?

Try this different lotion. A famous Canadian formula that swiftly soothes and softens. Provides beneficial oils and medically proved protective ingredients to help prevent redness, roughness, dryness. Extra rich and concentrated. One drop serves both hands.

At cosmetic counters—25¢, 50¢ and $1.00 a bottle

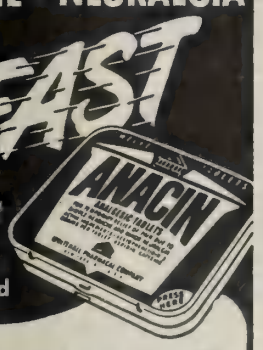
Campana
Italian Balm

Don't be HALF-SAFE

by VALDA SHERMAN

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you mature. Now, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a new type of perspiration containing milky substances which will — if they reach your dress — cause ugly stains and clinging odor.

You'll face this problem throughout womanhood. It's not enough merely to stop the odor of this perspiration. You must now use a deodorant that stops the perspiration itself before it reaches — and ruins — your clothes.



As doctors know, not all deodorants stop both perspiration and odor. But Arrid does! It's been proved that the new cream deodorant Arrid stops underarm perspiration 1 to 3 days safely—keeps underarms dry and sweet.

Remember this, too. Arrid's antiseptic action kills odor on contact — prevents formation of odor up to 48 hours and keeps you "shower-bath" fresh. And it's safe for skin —safe for fabrics.

So, don't be half-safe. Don't risk your happiness with half-safe deodorants. Be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Arrid with Creamogen will not dry out, and it's so pleasant and easy to apply. Get Arrid today—only 39¢ plus tax.

RELIEVES PAIN OF HEADACHE · NEURALGIA NEURITIS

FAST

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend

Anacin® relieves headache, neuralgia, neuritis pain fast because Anacin is like a doctor's prescription—that is, Anacin contains not just one, but a combination of medically proven, active ingredients in easy-to-take tablet form. Thousands have been introduced to Anacin through their own dentist or physicians. If you have never used Anacin, try these tablets yourself for incredibly fast, long-lasting relief from pain. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

For complete removal of superfluous hair use ZiP Epilator

ZiP—IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT

Safe for face, arms, legs. Good stores, or send $1.10 to Jordeau Inc., South Orange, N. J.

"I never hit you nor any of the kids yet," he roared. "But don't never let me catch you or them goin' to the Ryans'!"

She was going to say something, but in an instant the expression on her face changed and she screamed with terror. For a moment he didn't understand, and then he saw the glow on the walls. As he spun around to face the window and the door, a dozen thoughts ran through his head.

Fire! Where from? Who started it? How? Where was it?

He threw open the door and every question was answered. The brilliant yellow flames curled up over the porch from the burning Christmas tree. In his fury he had forgotten to pinch out those last few candles. The wind had blown the tree back against the porch, and now the flood of fire was pouring across the good pine floor.

Two long strides carried him over the porch, down the steps and into the yard.

"Water!" he yelled back to her. "Get it from the well! Call Witchgrass! Use every bucket and pan you can get!"

Her words came to him through the smoke that billowed over the porch. "Get it yourself!" she called, and he couldn't believe what she'd said.

"What?" he yelled, and his question sounded stupid even as he asked it.

She came hurrying out through the smoke, with the baby carefully covered in her arms, and hustling Georgie and Maggie ahead of her. The children scrambled down the steps and stood for a second watching the climbing fire with interest and wonder.

"You're goin' to have to start all over again!" she was saying. "Start all over and start alone! This fire burns nothing of ours!"

Now she was herding the children away into the darkness. He started after them furiously, but the wind pounced on the fire and he saw the flames jump across the porch.

"Come back here!" he yelled, and his voice boomed above the crackling of the fire.

"We're goin' to the Ryans' for Christmas!" He heard the words and he saw the fire eating at his house. Ideas whirled through his mind, confusing him, but there wasn't time to sort them and examine them. He'd get his family later.

The wind urged the hungry flame into the wood, and he knew there was no time for carrying water. Breaking the flooring of the porch by smashing his heavy-booted feet against it was the first attack. Then there were only his hands to tear away the flaming, broken boards.

As he smashed at the charring porch, the wind drove the fire deeper into the fresh wood, and he smelled the sharp odor of his own singeing hair. Sweat ran down into his eyes and over his hot face. He swore viciously and went on frantically tearing out the burning wood, trying desperately to catch up with the ever-widening circle of fire. It was only when he was almost exhausted that he realized the fire was winning easily. Goaded by the wind, it had grown to twice its size in spite of his work, and now it had a furnace in its heart that no live flesh could smother.

He staggered away, backing into the yard, his hands and arms trying to shade his sore face, his lungs sucking and blowing at the cool night air. He saw the tower of fire now growing from his front walls, the top of it weaving back and forth with the gusts of wind, and at the very bottom of it the charcoal body of Maggie's Christmas tree.

This was Christmas! The fire, the destruction, his disaster were only part of the waste and the madness!

Now the cypress shingles of his roof were catching, and he watched with new dread as they curled and broke off. Like hell birds trailing plumes of fire they circled beautifully in the Christmas night wind, soared briefly and floated down . . . down . . . down . . . toward the roof of his barn!

He thought of the barn itself and the thousand-and-one things in it. Three hundred dollars' worth of feed . . . harness . . . saddles . . . the manure spreader . . . rope . . . tools . . . a hundred and fifty dollars' worth of fertilizer . . . and a team of mules worth every nickel of four hundred dollars! He

When you give a KitchenAid Food Preparer, your gift bespeaks not only your thoughtfulness but your good taste. The KitchenAid Food Preparer is no ordinary food mixer. No machine for similar kitchen tasks has the KitchenAid Planetary Action, the natural mixing action with stationary bowl, which makes the preparation of excellent foods a matter of routine, and avoids failure on even the most delicate and exacting recipes.

No need to turn or retard the bowl by hand—no need to assist mixing with knife or spoon—and only one beater to clean. Simply follow the "permanent" mixing guide which you can easily read from in front, the "working" end of the mixer, for excellent results—every time!

Bowl is of Pyrex. A wide list of useful attachments covers every food preparation need—no expensive power boosters required.

Goodness Knows no finer touch than truly fresh, truly flavorful coffee . . . the kind you serve when you use a KitchenAid Electric Coffee Mill. Ground fresh for each serving, coffee retains all the true, rich-bodied flavor that distinguishes real coffee goodness. It's yours at the touch of a switch with KitchenAid.

KitchenAid
The Finest Made
TRADE MARK
KitchenAid Division • THE HOBART MFG. CO. Hobart TROY, OHIO
World's Largest Manufacturer of Food and Kitchen Machines

raced around the corner of his burning house, his mind trying to single out the best attack that might save the barn. He saw a little bush of fire already growing exquisitely on the barn roof. He heard the wild kicking and half screams of the mules. They'd get out by themselves. Mules were smart. He'd race up through the loft . . . maybe get to the roof in time to stamp out the seedlings of fire.

He hauled open the big door and started to run down the narrow passageway behind the stalls. The ladder was only ten or fifteen feet ahead of him in the dark when he saw the first mule coming at him. There wasn't much to see. There was just enough orange reflection of light so that he saw the bulk of the animal, and a few details like the ears laid back and the flash of its big, dirty teeth.

He knew for an instant that he was in trouble. The mules had already pulled their halter chains free, and, frantic with the smell of smoke and the sight of the nearby fire, they were thundering toward him. Sarah, cussed and smart, was probably the mule he saw. She was always the first to do anything.

He bellowed at her, but her fear of smoke and fire was even greater than her fear of Mathiew. Her foreleg crashed against his chest, and as he went down another blow caught him on his temple. He bounced back to his feet, feeling stunned and sick. The second mule was hysterically following the leader and, floundering wildly for the open door, he collided with Mathiew.

How long he lay there Mathiew would never find out, because Witchgrass never talked in terms of a clock. All Witchgrass ever said was that he'd looked for him "quite a spell" before he'd found him, and then he saw him because the burning roof of the barn lighted up the inside like a hotel. Mathiew only knew that suddenly there was the feeling of cold water on his face, the sound of words and the touch of hands.

"Please! Please! Oh, Mr. Matt! Please, git on yore feet and git out of here! Yore whole world's afire! Wake up, Mr. Matt! I cain't lift you! Oh, Mr. Matt!"

Mathiew fought his way up through the aching darkness and opened his eyes. He saw the bright fire above him, but he couldn't move. He tried to speak, but he only groaned.

Witchgrass redoubled his efforts and his talk. "Thank You, Lawd! He's livin'! Now git to crawlin', Mr. Matt! Crawl fo' yore life! Lawd, if he only have one muscle show him how to use it!"

A beam gave way in the great ceiling, a shower of sparks fell and a hundred tiny fires started in the straw around them.

Matt lurched to his feet, stumbled and fell back to his knees. Witchgrass grabbed him by the hair and led him like a dog alon passageway to the back yard. When reached the door, Mathiew hitched hi back onto his feet. This time, althou weaved drunkenly, he tottered forward they stood in the middle of his barnyar stared around them at the nightmare o

His home and his barn were leapin ange walls that careened in the wind. B spreading light he could see cattle huddl the far corner of his nearest pasture. He the sparks falling around them even as f the lake, and he saw the blood leaking over his chest and stomach from a w someplace on his head.

A geyser of yellow flame exploded thr the children's upstairs bedroom, an thought of their things that were burnin lumpy cotton mattress . . . a closet filled patched overalls . . . and within him he h Mary Ann's voice again, saying, "This burns nothing of ours!"

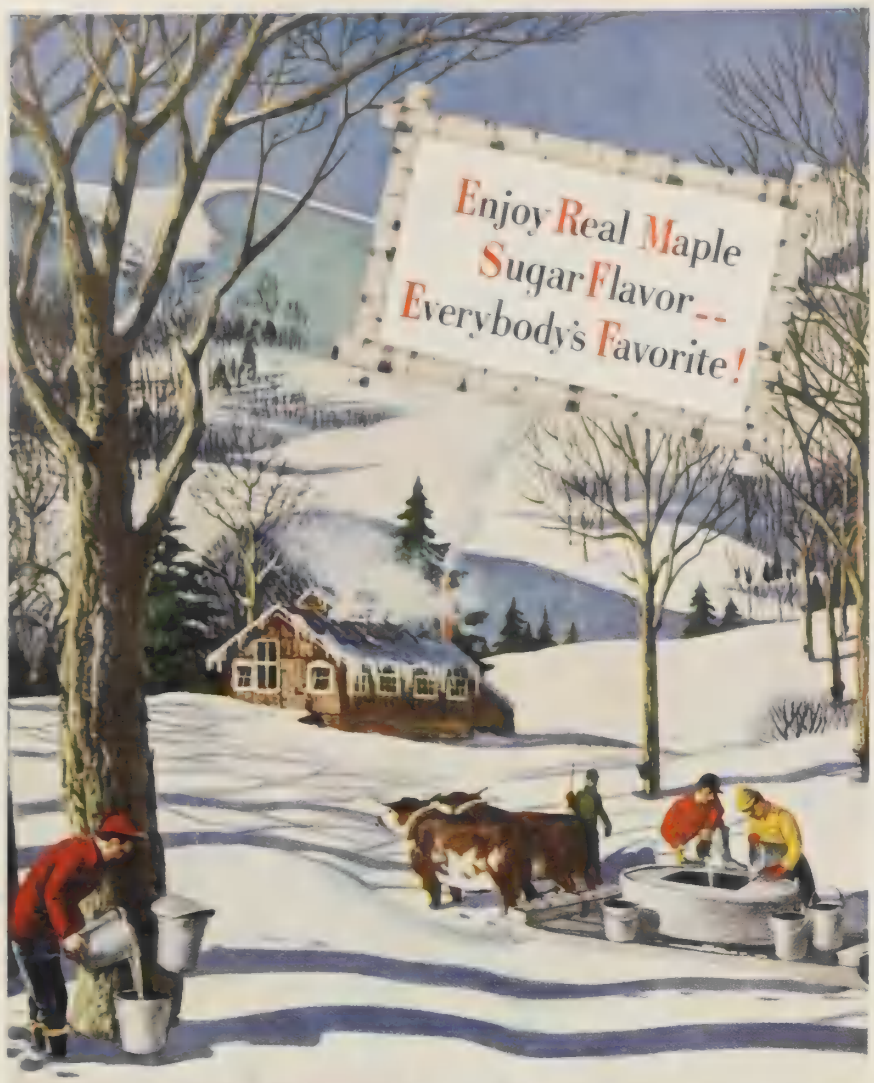
Slowly and dumbly he made an invent of what they owned to prove to himself t she was wrong. But a added up the list her v grew stronger and stro inside him . . . "This burns nothing of ours!

"Everything you got's gone!" Witchg cackled.

So that's the kind woman she was! hadn't given her enough, so she let his h burn without turning a hand!

He tried to be disgusted with her, but thoughts wobbled and suddenly he was membering her when they had been married. She was a beautiful, strong girl had looked at him without lust, and with fear. He remembered how she had stud with him almost every night those f years . . . how embarrassed he had been learning the alphabet from his wife . . . h gently and persistently she had taught h arithmetic. He remembered her having t children up there in that room with just Emma to help. He wanted to hate her, but stood there like the last man on earth watc ing the final desolation and remembering h Her yellow hair, sweet body and sly jok were gone. There wasn't any more hous There wouldn't be any more kids and dinn waiting. He'd live as he did before they we married, alone, tired and dirty. He had to g her out of his mind.

"Why didn't somebody get here to he me?" he asked.



Witchgrass turned his head on one si and looked up at Mathiew in surprise. "Don you know the ansa to that yo'self?"

Before Mathiew's slow words came, Witc grass went on and there was a gentle, hal amused laughter in his voice.

(Continued on Page 186)

Conscience is a stick which everyone takes up to beat his neighbor and not for application to his own back.

—BALZAC.

At maple-sugaring time folks head towards the sugar camp for "sugar-on-snow."

Pancakes and Vermont Maid Syrup

Real Old-Time Treat!

For Vermont Maid Syrup our skilled blenders select maple sugar that is unusually full-flavored; then they blend it with cane sugar. This blend gives you, at moderate cost, real maple sugar flavor that is uniformly rich and delicious—everybody's favorite!

• • •

Your grocer has Vermont Maid Syrup in attractive glass jugs, ready for your table. In the big, generous 24-ounce size—your family can pour all they want on their pancakes or waffles. Also in handy 12-ounce size.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.,
Burlington, Vermont.

Made by the makers of My-T-Fine Desserts and Brer Rabbit Molasses.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, ETC.,

Required by the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts of March 3, 1933, and July 2, 1946, of LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, published monthly at Philadelphia, Pa., for October 1, 1950.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA } ss COUNTY OF PHILADELPHIA }

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared Beatrice Blackmar Gould, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the Editor of the Ladies' Home Journal and that the following is, to the best of her knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management, etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts of March 3, 1933, and July 2, 1946 (section 537, Postal Laws and Regulations), printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are:

Publisher, The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Editors, Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, Hopewell, New Jersey.

Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman, Philadelphia, Pa.

Business Manager, None.

2. That the owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding one per cent or more of total amount of stock.)

The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Cary W. Bok, Camden, Maine.
Curtis Bok, Philadelphia, Pa.
Mary Louise Curtis Bok Foundation, Philadelphia, Pa.
W. Curtis Bok, Cary W. Bok and Edith Evans Braun, Trustees of the Locust Trust, Philadelphia, Pa.
W. Curtis Bok, Cary W. Bok and Edith Evans Braun, Trustees of the Swastika Trust, Philadelphia, Pa.
Trustees U/W of Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Deceased, Philadelphia, Pa.
William G. Welsh, New Bedford, Mass.
Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Philadelphia, Pa.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are:

None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

BEATRICE BLACKMAR GOULD, Editor

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 25th day of August, 1950.

W. C. ZIMMERMAN, Notary Public

[SEAL]

(My commission expires February 3, 1953)

Wake up to a— Real American Breakfast

Aunt Jemima Pancakes with plenty of syrup, butter and bacon!

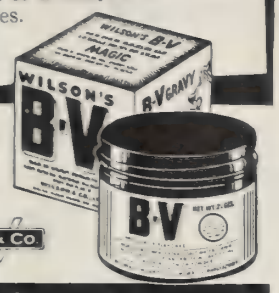
So Light, so Tender . . .
MORE WOMEN PREFER AUNT JEMIMAS
than all other brands combined!

WANT TO JOIN America's biggest Breakfast Club? Well, here's all you do:

Let your fork sink into the fluffy lightness of a stack of golden Aunt Jemimas, running with butter and dripping with syrup. Then, taste their delicate goodness . . . enjoy their melting tenderness . . . and you're "in"!—a member for life!

Yes, you'll want Aunt Jemimas again and again from that moment on. And—you'll be in good company. Because Aunt Jemima Pancakes are America's favorite kind!

Get some from your grocer—today!



AUNT JEMIMA
Pancakes, Buckwheats & Waffles

Delicious Nutritious
BEEF BROTH
Every single time with B-V

B-V BROTH

Dissolve 4 tsp. WILSON'S B-V in ¼ cup hot water. Stir in 3¾ cups hot water and pepper to taste. Serves four. This makes a tempting, satisfying Beef Broth. For a change use tomato juice for ⅓ of water, add cooked rice or a tasty combination of vegetables.

You just can't beat a Wilson Canned Meat.

WILSON & CO. INC

Ha Wilson label protects your table for the best o' season's eating- always buy BREAST O' CHICKEN

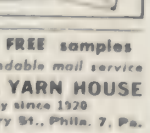
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
the label that brings you only the best o' tuna
FREE recipe booklet. Write Westgate-Sun Harbor Co
1995 Bay Front, Dept. J 8 San Diego 13, California



Mortite KEEPS THE COLD OUT

SAVES FUEL AND MONEY

Cordlike and pliable, Mortite is the perfect weatherstripping. Goes on in a jiffy without tools or tacks. Keeps out wind, dust, dirt. Anyone can press it around windows, doors, transoms, baseboards. Weatherstrip a whole window for 29¢—costs even less if you use the larger packages. Get Mortite at stores or write for circular. J. W. Mortell Co., 555 Burch St., Kankakee, Ill.

CHRISTMAS decorations
ALL-FIREPROOF
DOUBL-GLO
TRADE MARK REG.

HAND KNITTING WOOL
Send for FREE samples prompt, dependable mail service
COLONIAL YARN HOUSE
Quality since 1920
1221-R Cherry St., Phila. 7, Pa.

MATERNITY DRESSES
FREE CATALOG
Advance Styles
CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A 729 Bell., Kansas City, 6, Mo.

(Continued from Page 184)

"Th' ain't nobody here! That's why. All my folks gone away befo' dark. They know th' ain't no Christmas at Mathiew Dekker's. They gone walkin' out to find their friends and look for happiness."

He laughed to himself, and then he cocked his head on one side again.

"This is yo comeuppance, Mr. Matt! I been 'spectin' it fo' a long time!"

"What are you talking about?" The power was coming back into his voice, but it didn't frighten the old man.

"You been strong enough to work fo' pennies and save to buy a hondred acres of good land. I seen you tear de jungle off'n it with yo' bare hands, and plant de pastures. I seen you knock de trees down, slice up de trunks, and build you a house! Dat's true, but still you comes terrible close to bein' de meanest white man I ever know'd!"

"You got a lickin' comin' to you!" Mathiew growled.

"Dat's just like I was thinkin'!" Witchgrass went on. "On a night when every man in de whole world is bein' friends with every other man, I'm de only creature come to help you. You'd be burnin' like a roast pig right now if I didn't drug in de water an' wake you up, an' git you out . . . and you talkin' mean to me! Shame on you, Mr. Matt!"

Then he laughed happily.

"But you ain't gonna lay yo' hands on me, 'cause this is Christmas! Even de air is magical!"

His body ached so painfully, Mathiew wanted to lie down. Only the beauty of the fire kept him standing there.

"You throwed out a chile's Christmas tree!" Witchgrass crooned. "Dat's as mean as a man kin get, and look what it done for you!"

Blood was dripping into his left eye, and when he wiped it away he remembered Maggie saying, "Santy Claus is much, much stronger'n you!" Behind his eyes he pictured her saucy nose and the way it was habitually turned away from him.

A whining noise rose into the night as the nails began to pull from what wood there was left. With a crash that spewed a golden cloud of sparks into the black sky, the fire brought the house down to the ground where it could gnaw at its skeleton.

As if that were the signal for utter destruction, the massive ridgepole of the barn gave way, and thundered down through the wild flame. Where his buildings had been there were now only orange-yellow lakes of flame. Even the stone chimney had cracked and gone down with its house.

He felt sick with heat, pain and the certain knowledge of his own destitution. He turned away, walking into the darkness with the cool north wind at his back.

When he got to Joe Ryan's he half expected to see someone standing in the yard watching his fire across the pastures. But maybe they, too, were tired of looking.

As he opened the gate and walked up to the lighted house, he heard the put-put of the gas engine in the back yard, and he thought of the gun he knew Joe Ryan had kept loaded for years. He'd never heard it called anything but the "gun," and now he wondered dully what kind it was, and whether Joe would shoot the minute he saw him. He didn't know.

He stood before the door for a long minute, listening to the soft music inside, and the excited whisper of voices. Those people in there—the Ryans, his own family—didn't want him, and suddenly it hurt him more than his burns and wounds to know that.

When Witchgrass spoke to him, his voice had the patience and understanding of an enormous lifetime. "Straighten up yo' heart, Mr. Matt, and go in. You got to."

Mathiew rapped twice, then opened the door to Joe Ryan's house, and the Christmas party was turned into a breathless, silent group of statues. Only the fire moved, and it popped merrily in the fireplace. Joe Ryan stood tall on the hearth with his right arm resting on the mantel. Not two inches beyond the tips of his fingers lay the gun. It was a heavy-looking forty-five-caliber revolver and his fingers stayed by it.

Mary Ann sat in a rocker by one corner of the hearth, her face gray with worry. Her hands were empty and Mathiew knew she had put the baby to bed somewhere in the Ryans' house.

Jane Ryan, her hair surprisingly gray while her husband's was still dark, had been helping Georgie to work a mechanical train whose little track ran all the way around the Christmas tree. Still on her knees, with the engine in her hands, she watched him from the floor.

Three of the Ryans' children, two boys and a girl not older than Maggie, and his two made five. It seemed like more, however.

Maggie and the Ryans' little girl had been pretending to put a doll to sleep. It was a rag doll with careful home stitching, and he knew Jane had made it.

The Ryan boys had been scrambling on the floor like house cats, making strange, playful noises, and playing with a red wagon—a red wagon made of a fruit picker's sturdy field box. Mathiew wondered why he hadn't made Georgie one like it.

The purpose of wise reading is to bring sunshine into our hearts and to drive moonshine out of our heads. —JOHN MORLEY.

The silence in the gaily decked living room would have been complete except that the voices coming from the radio went on singing, ". . . The world in solemn stillness lay to hear the a-angels sing. Peace on the earth! Good will to men! . . ."

"Kin I come in?" Mathiew asked, and his voice was deep in his throat.

Joe Ryan watched him quietly for a long minute. "It's Christmas, ain't it?" he said levelly. "Come on in."

Mathiew walked in and crossed to stand by Mary Ann's chair. "It was good of you to take my family in," he said. "I owe you for that, Joe."

"Mathiew!" Mary Ann's voice was tight. "You're hurt! It looks terrible!"

He took his eyes away from Joe's, and, when he looked down at her, joy began to rise inside him. She wasn't gone! She'd come back to him! Everything would be as it was before—only better, much better!

"Don't worry about it," he said. "Don't worry none about that house either. Pick out the next one—one that don't burn. I'll see it's built for you . . . with things in it you want."

She was holding his hand against her face, and he could feel her tears on his hot skin. There were important things to say, but he couldn't think of how to say them. She was soft . . . forgiving . . . easygoing . . . kind of like the Ryans. And suddenly he was glad she was! He was glad they were all there! He was glad he knew them! He wished he could tell them so! If only he had a little something to give each of them, but his hands were empty.

He saw Jane studying him. There was a frown on her face, but a gentle smile around the corners of her mouth was only barely hidden.

"Jane." Her name sounded strange in his voice. "Would you have a place for Witchgrass to sleep?"

"We sure enough do," she said pleasantly.

He gently took his hand away from Mary Ann and stepped over to Maggie.

She was sitting in a small rocking chair, holding the doll, and he noticed for the first time that she had on a pink nightgown, a prettier one than she had ever owned. When he knelt in front of her, her big blue eyes watched him owlishly and quietly.

"You're only a little wench, Maggie," he said softly. "But you know an awful lot about Santy Claus. He jest beat the hell out of me!"

The clear high voices from the radio sang, "Noel! Noel! Noel! Noel!"

Jane Ryan was saying, "Come in, Witchgrass, and have Christmas!"

Mathiew looked incredibly awkward, kneeling there, still so huge, his clothes half burned, his skin roasted red, his face dirty with soot, the dried blood on his head, and the tears in his eyes.

"I—I got a lot to learn, Maggie," he stammered. "You—you gotta help me!"

Maggie smiled and, with the queenliness of a little girl, her small hand reached up in wonder to touch the wound on his temple. "Merry Christmas, daddy!" she whispered.

COMMUNITY BEGINS AT HOME

(Continued from Page 12)

plenty of time, since her afternoons were free, for rest, recreation or personal tasks. The house had a modern laundry, washing machine, constant hot water, a mangle and electric irons. But at the end of the first week she handed me a bundle of clothes as I was driving into the village, and asked me to deliver it to her mother to wash.

"My clothes," she said innocently.

Now Mary's mother, the wife of a workman, had no washing machine, and depended for hot water on a tank over a wood stove. She had three other children and a husband for whom to cook, sew, clean and wash, and a garden and small flock of chickens to care for. I was flabbergasted that Mary should add this burden to her mother and said so.

"But mamma always did it," said Mary. "I don't know how to wash and iron!"

I took Mary and the clothes into the laundry, and said, "Right now you are going to learn. What will you do when you marry one day? Still send the clothes to mamma?" Later I helped her iron a nightgown, a blouse, an apron. She was awkward at first, particularly with sleeves, but after an hour she was beaming.

"It's not really hard," she cried.

There was no difficulty with Mary. She was, by nature, a kind girl. But later when I called on her mother to pass the time of day the latter asked anxiously, "Why hasn't Mary sent her clothes?" I told her and she burst into tears! "I had to work so hard when I was Mary's age," she said. "I was so glad when she got a job with you—no cooking over hot stoves, no laundry, nice light work."

I had to persuade Mary's mother that she was making an inconsiderate and selfish young woman out of a naturally fine daughter, by making a slave of herself. Mary, it was apparent, had no clear notion of what her father earned or how her mother toiled. In high school, boarding in a neighboring village, she was away in winter, and in summer spent her days swimming or boating on the lake, going to picnics and having a "vacation"—until a nice light job turned up. She was keeping her good wages for future "good times." Never a present for the devoted mother, no contribution to the family who sacrificed to send her to school, no thought of her younger sisters!

Mary's mother was also making a snob of her daughter. "I suppose the other help showed her how to launder," she said.

Amazement registered on her face when I said, "No. I showed her."

"Can you wash and iron?" she asked.

"Why, of course I can. How do you think I was brought up?" I heard myself replying indignantly. "I can iron beautifully," I bragged, "French pleats—everything. I don't do it," I confessed, "except now and then. I have too much other work to do. But I'd hate not to be able to do anything required in my own home. I'd feel . . . inferior."

These reminiscences and comments are inspired by young Betty Boeger's rather wistful plea: "We want to be considered old enough to share in the secrets and responsibilities of the family."

Betty had some other cogent things to say, as well. But they all amounted to the same thing: "We want to be responsible members of a community." And community begins at home. THE END

The All-Family Holiday Drink!

So pure...So good...So wholesome for everyone!

Copyright 1950 by The Seven-Up Company

You like it... it likes you!

FAMILY GAME BOOKLET. Family fun suggestions for youngsters and grownups! Send 20¢ in coin to FAMILY FUN, 1523 S. 10th St., St. Louis (4), Missouri, or your local Seven-Up Bottling Company.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

THE NEW-FORMULA

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Proved by exhaustive clinical study to be an unusually effective preparation to PREVENT IMPETIGO

PREVENT RAW BUTTOCKS PREVENT DIAPER RASH PREVENT HEAT RASH

Now, science brings your baby new freedom from common skin irritations—with new-formula Johnson's Baby Lotion.

One of the most effective preparations ever developed to prevent impetigo, cradle cap, diaper rash and heat rash. And yet with all its amazing germ-killing properties, this new lotion is wonderfully bland to baby's tender skin. Soothing, snow-white, pleasant to use.

So get new-formula Johnson's Baby Lotion today—and give your baby this newly found protection.

Tested for 10,000 baby days—results amazing!

Eight leading hospitals tested new-formula Johnson's Baby Lotion against generally accepted methods of skin care. With usual methods, skin irritations were found to range as high as 55%. With new Lotion care, skin irritation dropped to an average of less than 2%.

Stops impetigo epidemic. Commonly accepted methods failed to halt an epidemic which had been in progress four months in a large hospital nursery. New Lotion treatment stopped further outbreaks and cleared existing cases within ten days!

Guard your baby's skin—with Johnson's Baby Lotion!

Use Lotion every day. Smooth on after baby's bath and at every diaper change. Keeps skin softer, smoother, doesn't interfere with normal skin function. Provides wonderful protection against dreaded impetigo and rashes that make baby so fretful.

Ends "ammonia diaper" odor, too. New Johnson's Baby Lotion prevents that unpleasant nursery smell. Keeps baby sweet and fresh while it protects his delicate skin. Get a bottle today!

Available in 49¢ and 98¢ sizes

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson

ESTHER F. BUBLEY

Sound teeth must first be built—the food he eats is the most important factor in his dental health.

Nutrition—Still the Key to Good Teeth

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

IT is an odd fact that every new medical discovery brings some risk of increasing as well as of diminishing the disease or condition it is supposed to combat. This is because the new "miracle" techniques are so likely to be accepted as the final answer that all other methods, and often needed precautions, are discarded.

In recent years, I have seen this happen in connection with the care of children's teeth. Many new dental products and methods, such as the ammoniated dentifrices and fluoride-treated water, are available now to help prevent the development of tooth decay. With all these new aids, mothers are inclined to forget that sound teeth must still be built from the inside out, instead of the other way round. Proper nutrition is still the solid foundation on which sound teeth must be built.

This has been demonstrated many times, and particularly well in an interesting experiment that I like to tell about when mothers come to me for advice about their children's teeth. Doctors and dentists today know that heredity plays an important part in dental health. Children of parents with "poor teeth"—teeth soft in structure and easily susceptible to decay—are often likely to have similarly troublesome teeth.

The experiment in question concerns a young bride who had always had trouble with her teeth. Her husband also had poor teeth, so it seemed likely that their children would suffer from the same condition. The wife, knowing that their bad dental heredity would be a handicap to their children, asked her doctor for advice. Together they planned a nutritional war against future tooth decay—in her yet unborn children—and established the regimen to be followed after the babies were conceived.

Subsequently, she became the mother of two children, both boys. When I last heard of them the boys were 15 and 17 years old. The 17-year-old had never shown a sign of tooth decay, and the mother and doctor were disappointed when, during a checkup, the dentist discovered that the younger boy had one tiny cavity!

How did they do it? The odds against the boys were heavy, as we have seen, and their triumph was correspondingly spectacular.

Most important among the controllable conditions was the matter of nutrition. The GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 50 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Information on prenatal care is given in BEFORE THE BABY COMES, No. 2383, which is priced at 50 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

(Continued on Page 191)

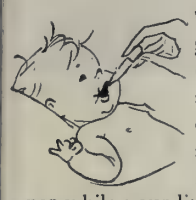
PEEK OVER MY SHOULDER at this enthusiastic letter:

Dear Mrs. Gerber,



I can't begin to tell you how interested and pleased I was to see some of the foods my baby likes so much being prepared at Gerber's Oakland plant recently. One of the most exciting and reassuring parts of my "tour" was watching the white-uniformed girl at the Quality Control Table. She looked as neat and efficient (and busy) as a nurse in a doctor's office. In fact, watching her check every batch of food was almost like taking my little Alan to the doctor for a check-up. The food was weighed, had its temperature taken, was tested for texture—oh, just everything. I do wish more mothers could see for themselves how every bit of Baby's good-tasting Gerber's is carefully "nursed" every step of the way.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Alice Herman

YOU'RE ALL WELCOME. Any time any of you mothers (or daddies) find yourself near Fremont, Mich. or Oakland, Cal., do come in and see what makes Gerber's as good as doctors and babies say they are.

WORK-SAVER. If Baby's getting Vitamin D drops, you can easily avoid oily spots on clothing. Give the sunshine vitamin right from the dropper while your little he or she is in the bath.

HOLIDAY PUDDING FOR TOTS, toddlers and even big brother or sister in the First Grade. This colorful, delicious wholesome dessert is Gerber's Plums-with-Tapioca. All ready to serve, of course, like all Gerber's from Starting Cereals through Junior Foods. So trot out Plums-with-Tapioca for the "small fry" when the grown-ups dig into their plum pudding. That's much too rich for the younger set.

FREE—samples of Gerber's 3 Cereals. Write Dept. 812-0, Fremont, Mich. In Canada, write Gerber-Ogilvie, Ltd., Niagara Falls, Canada.

father and child doing fine...

(with Baby's Favorite Foods)

Watch the proud grin on Pop's face when occasionally you let him take over at Baby's feeding time. When Baby starts on cereal, for instance, set out a small spoon, a big bib and some Gerber's Cereal. See how smoothly things go. For babies like the extra-smoothness and mild flavor of Gerber's Cereal Food, Strained Oatmeal and Barley Cereal.

Ask that other important man (your doctor) when to start feeding Baby Gerber's True-Flavor Meats, Fruits, Vegetables and Desserts. For variety helps increase Baby's appetite. And Gerber's offer more foods babies like and need—from Starting Cereals through Junior Foods. That's because we spend all our time preparing Baby Foods!

Always something new, too! Have Daddy or you had the fun of feeding your tot Gerber's new Orange Pudding? Such a tasty and nutritious dessert or between-meal snack. Get some—soon.

Babies are our business . . . our only business!

Gerber's

BABY FOODS

For free reproduction of this painting, write to Johnson & Johnson, Box 1006, Dept. D, New Brunswick, N. J.

"Mommy always says you're safe when you use Johnson & Johnson"

New exclusive formula: Now Red Cross Adhesive Tape gives better sticking qualities and greater freedom from skin irritations.

Red Cross Cotton comes to you sterile. This long-fibered cotton is the whitest, softest, most absorbent surgical cotton available.

Sealed in individual envelopes, Red Cross Sterile Gauze Pads are soft, absorbent, absolutely sterile. Ideal for First Aid and Baby Care.

Fine mesh, pliable gauze with clean-cut edges, Red Cross Gauze Bandages ravel less, stay neater. Famous for sterility and quality.

Individually wrapped and sterile, BAND-AID Adhesive Bandages are convenient protection for small cuts, blisters, and abrasions.

This product has no connection whatever with American National Red Cross.

Surgical dressings...high in quality...low in price... Johnson & Johnson other was painstaking in seeing that her t was well balanced during her pregnancies. om early infancy on, minerals and vita- ns were emphasized in the diets chosen for e boys. Plenty of milk, fresh vegetables, its and whole-grain cereals were always luded. Hard, solid foods that had to be ewed thoroughly were given whenever ssible, for, like other body structures, e teeth must work to be healthy. Starchy ds and sweets were provided sparingly.

(Continued from Page 188)

The other "controllable conditions" that re important for these youngsters, and e equally important for all, have to do th daily care of the teeth. All my own chil- en and grandchildren have been trained to ush their teeth every morning and evening. ong with a proper diet, I believe this prac- e contributes importantly to good dental alth. Another rule which has been enforced my own family, and which I think is still sential if the child's teeth are to be safe- arded, is this: Make it a habit to visit the ntist at least once a year.

Many mothers make the mistake of neg- cting the small child's teeth, with the idea at the baby teeth will soon be replaced by rmanent ones anyway, so it doesn't matter cavities are permitted to develop. This is wrong notion. The condition of the baby, or deciduous, teeth is an important deter- mining factor in the condition of the per- manent teeth.

Ammoniated dentifrices and fluoride- treated water are all right as further precau- tions. But they cannot take the place of the right foods and the right care which build good, hard teeth from within.

If you use these new techniques—and I have no objection to them in themselves—please do so in addition to a proper diet regi- men and tooth care, backed by regular trips to the dentist. Otherwise, I fear, we shall find ourselves treating a symptom, and letting the underlying cause go unchecked.

NEWS ABOUT CHILDREN

By Irma Simonton Black

THE fact that a normal dose of vitamin A is good for a growing child does not im- ply that a double dose would be doubly good. Such well-intentioned but misguided logic may do serious harm. Dr. John Caffey (Pedi- atrics, Vol. 5, No. 3) describes the effects of vitamin-A poisoning—tender swellings on bones, pain, lack of appetite, hyperirritability. With such potent vitamins as the concen- trated fish oils, it is particularly important to measure the dosage accurately, and to follow directions carefully. The unaccountable ap- petite of some youngsters for the stuff is no reason to feed it to them indiscriminately, ei- ther. Few people are aware of the very real physical dangers involved in consistent ove dosing over a long period of time.

A comprehensive survey of recent studies of nail biting by Drs. Maury Massler and Anthony J. Malone (American Journal of Orthodontics, Vol. 36, No. 5) brings out the fact that it is one of the most common habits among children and young adults—including over 40 per cent of school children. Nail biting is likely to begin between the ages of 4 and 6, with another high point at puberty.

Simple occasional nail biting merely indi- cates some temporary internal tension and needs no treatment, say the authors. Constant nail biting is a symptom of more seri- ous difficulty. Much nail biting, they say, stems from condemned thumb sucking, and it is intensified by condemnation. Treatment should include the co-operation of the child, and should be aimed at reducing emotional stress and increasing his security. There is, incidentally, no evidence that nail biting af- fects the teeth in any way.

WHY CAN'T OUR MOTHERS BREAST-FEED?

(Continued from Page 43)

f the deaths that occurred in the group, 6.7 er cent were among the breast-fed, 27.2 per ent among the partially breast-fed, and 66.1 er cent among the artificially fed.

However, it is in the epidemics that occa- ionally sweep hospital nurseries, with hor- ifying cost in newborn lives, that the uperiority of mother's milk over formulas is roved most dramatically. The American ournal of Obstetrics and Gynecology reports hat in a diarrhea epidemic in an American ospital, 18 of the 25 bottle babies died. There were no deaths either among the 8 who were entirely breast-fed, or among the getting breast milk in addition to formulas.

The Lancet, Britain's leading medical ournal, states that in a diarrhea epidemic in large English hospital 10 out of the 30 babies on cow's milk died, as against 6 of the 51 breast-fed. While in an outbreak of gastro- enteritis in another English nursery 15 of the 18 artificially fed babies died, the breast- fed escaped entirely.

Yet the physical reasons for breast feed- ng, important as they are when the living or dying of a treasured infant is concerned, are outweighed by the psychological. For after all, most babies survive on bottle feedings, and do quite nicely too. But to what extent the bottle era has robbed mothers and babies alike of the tender, loving bond that should exist between them, it is impossible to esti- mate. Psychiatrists, concerned about the number of rejected, antagonistic children in our culture, have come to believe that suckling and contact with a warm, human skin is one of the baby's primary love needs. If this is denied where a mother is able to supply it, harmful frustrations are thought to result. Assuredly it is hard for any woman to reject a child she has suckled at her breast. Mothers who perform this function success- fully proclaim it one of the great joys of a woman's life. The mutual love it engenders helps to weather later strains.

"It is not our viewpoint that all babies who are breast-fed will grow up to be happy adults, or vice versa," say Drs. Samuel Stone and Harry Bakwin in the Journal of Pediatrics. "We do feel it is one step, and an important one, in establishing proper inter- relationships between mother and child, and in providing suitable outlets for the young baby's budding emotional needs."

It is for all these reasons that American pediatricians today as a body, joined by many obstetricians, general physicians and nurses, are working earnestly to bring breast feeding back. But the principal reason is to restore to women the essential motherliness that a number of leading psychiatrists feel we are in some danger of losing, as a people.

If you were to visit St. Mary's Hospital in Rochester, Minnesota, conducted under the auspices of the Mayo Clinic, or the Grace- New Haven Hospital, conducted by the Yale Medical School, you would find male pedia- tricians and obstetricians gravely showing new mothers how to hold and fondle their babies, the first step in successful breast feeding. You would find nurses employing every art to increase breast milk. To these people, the decline of breast feeding is not an academic question. It is a real and vital one, going to the root of our present jangled mother-child relationships.

Why can't our mothers breast-feed? A number of medical authorities are laying the major share of the blame squarely on the doorstep of their own profession.

Says Dr. Frank Howard Richardson in the lead article of a recent Journal of the Amer- ican Medical Association, "Most formidable of all obstacles to breast feeding is the indif- ference, and at times the actual opposition, of a large segment of the medical profession. Next comes the attitude of the personnel in so many institutions [hospitals], especially the nurses and supervisors, who naturally take their cue from those above them."

Doctors Stone and Bakwin, writing in the Journal of Pediatrics, state that in many hos- pitals breast feeding is actually discouraged, Intimate talks leave us few friends.

—CHINESE PROVERB.

"because it interferes with the 'routine' of the nursery."

In the soul searching about breast feeding now going on, even childbirth anesthesia, long considered one of womankind's greatest boons, has come in for re-examination. This is not because the doctors concerned about breast feeding think women ought to suffer. It is because unconsciousness at the time of the baby's birth is believed by some author- ities to inhibit motherliness, and hence to interfere with a woman's natural desire to nurse her baby.

According to Dr. Helene Deutsch, a prom- inent psychoanalyst and author of the monu- mental Psychology of Women, genuine motherliness, as opposed to the dreams and fantasies of pregnancy, begins with the last moment of delivery. The very second the baby emerges into the world, the mother has an influx of ecstatic feelings about it.

But few women delivered in hospitals realize this first full ecstasy today. Says Doc- tor Deutsch, "In women who have been de- livered under narcosis, this reaction is post- poned and can never be as intense and gratifi- fying as when the child is immediately wel- comed after the birth task."

A much more serious deterrent to breast feeding, however, is the practice in many hospitals of starting bottles soon after the baby's birth. The purpose is to maintain the baby's weight through the first week. But Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Chicago's world- famous health commissioner, tells us that the weight loss, which is normal and natural, usually takes place just the same, and the only result, as a rule, is to defeat breast feeding.

"The baby given bottles is not hungry, does not try to nurse vigorously, and hence the breast does not get the stimulation needed to keep up the milk supply," says Doctor Bundesen. "The milk secreted grad- ually diminishes. It is only a few weeks before the quantity is so small that the breast feed- ing is stopped entirely."

Most hospitals skip the 2 A.M. nursing, giving a bottle instead. This has an adverse effect on the mother's milk supply. During the day, babies are brought to the mothers according to hospital schedules, instead of according to the babies' own hunger pains. In all too few places are new mothers in- structed in the techniques of nursing, and helped to carry them out. Only natural nursers can produce copiously under so formidable an array of obstacles. The rest are told after a few days that they "haven't enough milk."

Anne Sylvester's case would seem to fall into the category of mothers defeated by doc- tors and hospitals. Says Dr. Frank Howard Richardson, "An unsolved medical mystery has always been the willingness of so many physicians to abandon breast feeding with- out a serious effort to conserve it."

But there's a lot of psychology mixed up in this too. Mental conflicts and emotional maladjustments to which women are prone in our culture, and to which Marynia Farn- ham called attention in Modern Woman: The Lost Sex, and Margaret Mead in Male and Female, are believed by some authorities to interfere with breast feeding.

Doctor Deutsch states that motherliness has three components: tenderness, specifi- cally colored activity—that is, activity cen- tered about the offspring—and altruism. This last is defined in maternal terms as "based on the fact that with regard to the child, the mother is completely selfless and willing to sacrifice everything, including her life."

Have American mothers lost the will to sacrifice for their children? For there is that computed 50 per cent of mothers who refuse

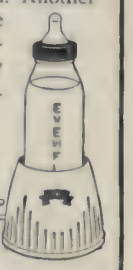
By Welsh
The Original and Only "BOODLE BUGGY"

Mom and Sis share the fun when Each has a "BOODLE BUGGY"

A DOLL CARRIAGE...A BABY CAR- RIAGE, BOTH HAVE THE SAME FEATURES...CONVERT INTO A TRAVEL BED OR BASSINET. EASY TO FOLD, PACK AND STORE!

☆

Mother! SEND DATE OF YOUR BABY'S BIRTH TO WELSH CO. FOR AN INTERESTING HOROSCOPE



AT LEADING STORES
WELSH COMPANY
Largest Manufacturer of Folding Baby Carriages
1535 S. Eighth St. St. Louis 4, Mo.

Get The Best—Ask For Evenflo!

Ideal Baby Shower Gifts

Today, nearly all babies are bottle fed. That's why the new Evenflo Nurser Lay- ette is an appreciated gift. This 33-piece feeding set includes: six 8-oz. and two 4-oz. Evenflo bottles each with its nipple, cap and sealing disc, and also one 6-oz. pkg. Evenflo Brushless Bottle Cleanser that removes milk film like magic and makes bottles sparkling clean. Another fine baby gift is Evenflo Bottle Warmer with automatic shut- off. Ask for these gifts at baby shops, drug and dept. stores.

Evenflo®
LAYETTE $2.25
Baby Bottle Warmer $1.89
Brushless Bottle Cleanser (1 lb.) 59c
Nursers 25c, Nipples and parts 10c ea.
America's Most Popular Nurser to try to nurse their babies. Following are the reasons they give, as reported by a number of doctors and nurses:

1. Fear of impairing the figure. (Though the fact is that whether or not a woman nurses her baby has nothing to do with the return of shapely outlines. This is dependent upon weight control through proper diet, and support of the breasts by well-fitted bras during the entire period that they are enlarged.)

2. Revulsion against breast feeding as "an animal process."

3. Unwillingness to "give up my freedom."

In the past there has been a tendency on the part of many doctors to accept such objections. One obstetrician confessed to me, "When a mother doesn't want to nurse her baby, I tell her she is unable to, because of inferior milk or some such pretext. Otherwise if the baby were to get sick or to die, she might have guilt feelings."

But where doctors and hospitals have the courage to fight for their convictions, talk straightforwardly to the mothers and adjust hospital routines to the babies' welfare, all these various obstacles to breast feeding are being overcome. Explains Miss Kate Hyder, head obstetrical nurse at Grace-New Haven Hospital, "Intelligent mothers want to give their babies the best. What is needed is to make them realize that breast feeding is a big part of it and that accepting this respo sibility makes them better suited for moth hood and for life."

Hospitals where the nurses use all th skill and wisdom to help mothers nurse th babies are reporting success with anywh from 70 to 80 per cent. There are commu ties—Des Moines, Iowa, is one—wh breast feeding has become the style amo the younger social set, which in many pla disdains it. This is the result of long hamm ing by leading doctors and hospitals. "Su cessful breast feeding is a matter of son body's paying attention," says Dr. Herm N. Bundesen.

Probably the most complete program i bringing back motherliness in all its phas is that of the Grace-New Haven Hospit under the direction of the Yale Obstetric Department.

The mothers who plan to be delivered he are indoctrinated in breast feeding first, by pediatrician they meet when they regist at the clinic. (Fathers, too, are included the prenatal courses, allowed in the lab room, and invited to watch their babies nurs privileges denied in many hospitals. Grac New Haven believes these things foster fathe liness and thus contribute to a mother's pea of mind and happiness in her role.)

Next, the expectant mothers are train for childbirth through exercises, and throu

BRINGING UP PARENTS

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

A FIVE-YEAR-OLD asks, "How much is eighteen elevens and twenty tens?" Parents are constantly faced with such questions. The form of the question makes sense, but the content is obviously beyond the comprehension of the child. Why, then, does he ask the question? It may be that he is trying to compete with an older child; or he is trying to keep a contact with a grownup; or he is playfully elaborating something he does understand, like two ones and two twos. How should we answer the child's question? First of all, we should try to sense the motive behind it—just as we do with all behavior. Rejecting the question entirely by saying that it is "silly" or that the child is "too young to know" is the same as rejecting the child. It's better to go along with the form of the question and switch the child to something he can understand. For example, you might say, "That's a hard question—but I can tell you what three and three is." Such an answer helps his self-respect, maintains his contact with you, and aids his learning.

"Don't bother to finish it, daddy—I just wanted to see you fill your fountain pen."

information about the birth mechanism. This robs the process of much of its terrors and makes it possible to cut down the use of anesthetics at delivery. It should be noted that anesthetics are never withheld, and are given if the patient wishes them. But out of the first 1100 women delivered at the Yale Clinic under this program, 948 were fully conscious when their babies were born, 25 per cent dispensed with anesthetics altogether. This was by the mothers' own wish. Their reward—the ecstatic thrill of welcoming their infants into the world, with its attendant outpouring of motherliness.

A rest period follows the baby's birth. Then the whole obstetrical department swings into a carefully worked out program for helping each mother get well started on breast feeding. "We do anything to get our mothers through that important first week," says Miss Hyder.

No bottles are given in the nursery unless the doctors feel they are absolutely necessary. Instead, babies clamoring for food are brought in to their mothers at regular intervals, including the 2 A.M. one when in so many hospitals a bottle is given. On the sixth and seventh days, when there is usually a hunger spurt, the baby may be brought in every two hours.

The regular stimulation of a really hungry infant, tugging ravenously at the breast, is all many women need to start their milk flowing freely. Glen Cove Memorial Hospital on Long Island sent its breast-feeding record up merely by taking the babies to the mothers for every feeding, including the 2 A.M. But Grace-New Haven does not stop with this.

The nurses stay with the new mothers until they are sure that suckling is proceeding satisfactorily. They show how to get the nipple into the baby's mouth, and how to extract it without damage by gently forcing the baby's jaws apart. Further to protect the nipple—for sore nipples are another important cause of failure—nursing at first is permitted for only five minutes on each side.

"We watch those nipples like hawks," says Miss Hyder, "and work with the mother to keep them from getting sore. If they do become sore, we stop the nursing temporarily and express the milk. That keeps it flowing until the nipples heal."

The mothers also are taught how to express the remaining milk when the baby does not empty the breasts, another expedient for keeping the milk glands working.

The period of leaving the baby with the mother is gradually extended. She is taught how to hold it in all positions, and how to sit and rock it. For nursing, however, a semi-reclining position is preferred at Grace-New Haven.

Meanwhile, every possible psychological aid is given. Dr. Herbert Thoms, head of the Yale Obstetrical Department, believes that a main reason for refusal to try breast feeding is a secret fear of failing. Given confidence and encouragement, most mothers will do their best, he finds. If there is a mental conflict or emotional block that interferes, doctors and nurses "talk it out" with the mother, and often are able to help.

UNDER this system, by the end of the vital first week most mothers are well launched on breast feeding. The usual experience is that the milk supply increases gradually thereafter, and by the end of six weeks is firmly established. The mother who takes plenty of rest, follows her doctor's dietary suggestions and is willing to dedicate six months to giving her baby the best possible start, has little trouble in keeping it going.

Doctor Thoms thinks that the trend is changing, and in a healthy way. "Young women today want babies—one of the few realities of life in this uncertain age. I believe that a group of what you might call professional mothers is developing; that is, mothers who put their babies and children first in their lives, instead of second to other interests. I think they're wonderful!"

It has been thoroughly proved that when doctors and hospitals devotedly help mothers to nurse their babies, instead of defeating them in the beginning with formulas and sacrosanct routines, the great majority of women are successful. The number of doctors and hospitals who pay attention to breast feeding is growing. There is justification for feeling that in the future fewer mothers will be cheated, as Anne Sylvester was, of an anticipated joy and privilege.

Helps for Successful Breast Feeding

The average hospital today is crowded and understaffed. Nevertheless, mothers tactful in their approach in most cases can secure the small extra attention needed to accomplish breast feeding. The following measures are helpful:

1. Prepare the nipples during pregnancy. Clean gently every day with soap and warm water, then dash cold water on them to toughen. Brushing them gently daily with a camel's-hair brush is believed by some doctors to encourage the growth of epithelium, which protects the tenderer tissue.

2. If you plan to have a pediatrician for your baby, engage him before the baby is born and ask him to take over the supervision of the baby in the nursery, with special regard to breast feeding. If your obstetrician will care for the baby as well, tell him you want very much to nurse your baby, and ask him to order no bottles unless they are absolutely needed.

3. The first few times the nurse brings your baby to you, ask her to help you get started with nursing—show you how to draw out an inverted nipple, if you have one; how to insert it into the baby's mouth, getting all of it in, including the brown circle at the base; how to stimulate the baby's interest by softly stroking its cheek; how to disengage the nipple by gently pressing baby's jaws open.

4. Be careful not to nurse more than five minutes on each side for the first few days. Extend the period gradually thereafter. If the nipples begin to be sore, report this immediately to nurse or doctor. If nipples become too painful or cracked, ask to be shown how to express the milk from the breast yourself, while they heal. This milk may then be fed to the baby, and expressing the milk will keep the milk glands working.

5. Don't worry at failure in the beginning. The first fluid that comes is not milk, but colostrum. The hungrier the baby gets, the harder it will try. Regard these first experiences as a practice period, against the time when the milk comes in on the fourth or fifth day.

6. Be sure the breasts are emptied at each feeding. If the baby does not do this, express the milk yourself. Milk remaining in the breasts interferes with producing more.

7. Don't worry if your baby loses weight. An infant strong and well nourished at birth can lose a pound and even more under some circumstances, without giving cause for anxiety. Doctors now are satisfied if birth weight is regained by the end of three weeks. The doctor will be watching, and will start complementary feedings if they are necessary. A serene, untroubled mind is one of the first requisites for successful nursing.

8. Ask to have your baby brought to you for the 2 A.M. feeding.

9. When you get home, do nothing at first except to care for your baby—overdoing cuts down milk. Feed your baby when it seems to be hungry, without regard to the clock. Babies may go to sleep at the breast, then wake and cry shortly after, hunting around as though for food. It is proper to put the baby to the breast again—perhaps it had not finished. In these early days, give the baby the benefit of every doubt.

10. Follow the same diet regimen your doctor gave you during pregnancy—plenty of meat, eggs, vegetables and fruit—and drink lots of fluid, including a quart of milk a day. (It may be skim milk for those who must watch weight.) If your milk declines, consult your doctor and also cut down your activity. In low periods of milk production, some mothers find that beer is helpful, perhaps for its relaxing effect.

11. Don't give up! The great majority of mothers fail because they become discouraged too soon. Keep in close touch with your doctor; don't hesitate to ask his help with this important phase of your baby's well-being.

THE END

MUSTANG Gaytees for all children are real Wild West winners at foiling wet feet. Bucking-bronco trim, cowboy tops. Black and white, Tutone brown, brown-and-tan, red-and-white.

POLARETTE Gaytees feel so soft and cozy over your stockinged feet—they're warmly fleece-lined. Wear tops turned down or up. Smart wedge heels. Red, black, brown, green.

Fashions in Health!

MARQUETTE Gaytees of handsome, weather-wise rubber with shearling cuffs keep feet warm and dry, everywhere, any time. Flat sole fits all shoes. Black, brown.

MIDWAY Gaytees are perfect with tailored clothes, unobtrusive with furs. Cut to give ankles a neat, pretty line. Slide-fastened at side. Black, brown, white.

U.S. Gaytees

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

Veto Gives All-Day Protection Against Perspiration and Odor —In Just 5 Seconds!

New Veto positively says no, no to underarm "O". Super-effective Veto stops odor instantly . . . checks perspiration more effectively! It's an exclusive "wonder-formula."

Veto is light, fluffy—smooths on and absorbs as easily as vanishing cream. Never cakes or dries out in the jar. Has a delightful fragrance you'll love. And it's mild, won't irritate normal skin. Harmless to fabrics.

Guard daintiness from bath to bath. Use super-effective Veto daily. Get it now at any cosmetic counter.

Veto Protection Lasts from Bath to Bath!

EXQUISITE FORM BRASSIERE, INC. New York 16 • Los Angeles 14 • Toronto, Canada

TELL ME DOCTOR

(Continued from Page 31)

the bladder attachments. Now, about your breasts?"

"We-ell, they seem to feel heavier I've had to get a bigger and more substantial brassière."

"Suppose you let me see them. . . . Ah, yes, I imagine they are larger than when I examined you last. Yes, and here you can see a slight ring of pigmentation around the nipple. There'll be more there later, as well as some in other parts of the body—the middle line of the lower abdomen, in particular, and possibly even some on the face. And here you can see about a dozen follicles, like exaggerated goose flesh, in the pigmented area. Now, I will take this breast and press from the outside border toward the nipple, gently but firmly. So. There, you see a tiny drop of colorless serum exudes from the nipple."

"Is that a sign of pregnancy?"

"It could be. At least it's significant, I'd say. Now I'm going to have you put on the examining table, in order to make an internal examination. . . . Yes, there are definite changes here," the doctor continued. "The neck of the womb is soft, and the uterine body is larger and softer."

"What do you mean by soft, Doctor?"

"Touch your finger to the tip of your nose. You will find that that has just about the degree of hardness of a normal, unpregnant cervix. Now touch it to your lip. Note the difference? That just about indicates the degree of change that has taken place."

"It's pretty soft, isn't it?"

"The cervix isn't the softest part, however. The greatest change has taken place where the neck of the womb joins the body. It is so soft here that my examining fingers scarcely have the tactile sense to feel anything at all. That is considered a very significant sign. Yes, and here is something else. The lining of the vaginal canal is distinctly purplish in color, rather than the normal pink."

To know how to be silent is more difficult, and more profitable, than to know how to speak. —FÉE.

"Then there's no doubt about my being pregnant?"

"I couldn't go so far as to say that. These symptoms I have pointed out are only the early, so-called presumptive signs of pregnancy. Personally, I am entirely satisfied that you are pregnant—two and a half months, I would estimate. I couldn't go before a court of law and swear to that as a fact, however. There are other conditions besides pregnancy which could conceivably produce any one—or every one—of these symptoms. Certain types of inflammation, or certain tumor formations, for instance."

"But there is a way you could tell positively, isn't there?"

"If you're thinking of the A-Z test, you're right. It is one early finding that I believe is accepted as positive, even in a court of law. It derives its name from the two physicians who discovered it, Doctors Aschheim and Zondek. It is more commonly known as the rabbit test."

"Could I have it done?"

"Certainly you could, if it's worth the trouble and expense to you. You realize that a little more time will establish our diagnosis beyond any possibility of doubt, don't you?"

"YES, but I'd like to know for certain right now. How do we go about obtaining this rabbit test?"

"Well, it depends upon the fact that there are present in the blood of every pregnant woman certain hormones that are created by her pregnant condition. A person's blood is being pumped constantly through the kidneys for the purpose of separating out certain waste materials, among which are found excessive quantities of these hormones. Therefore it is a fact that these specific hormones will be found in the urine of any woman who is pregnant.

"For the A-Z test we take a small amount of urine and inject it with a hypodermic needle into the blood stream of a virgin rabbit—there's a nice little vein in the animal's ear which is easy to enter. We wait forty-eight hours and then kill the rabbit, open her abdomen and examine her ovaries. If there was no pregnancy hormone in the urine which we injected, nothing unusual will be apparent and the test is negative. If the hormone was present, however, it will be noted that it has so profoundly stimulated the ovarian tissue of that little rabbit as to cause small hemorrhages. They appear as little black spots that always look to me like tiny globules of caviar."

"And that's a positive test, Doctor?"

"YES, and you can rely upon it if it is positive. If negative, I'm not so sure. I've known a number of outstanding errors on the negative side. I think it makes a lot of difference who does the injecting and the autopsy on the rabbits. And rabbits are expensive, these days. The test can be done on mice or rats also, however."

"I think I'd like it done, Doctor."

"All right, we'll go right ahead with it tomorrow."

"Why not today?"

"Because I want a morning specimen of urine. You must be very careful about taking it too—have a very clean bottle, preferably a new one. A slight contamination with medication might kill the rabbit."

"The poor thing! I wouldn't want to do that."

"But she has to die anyhow."

"I forgot that. Couldn't you use a rat?"

"You'd better leave that to me."

"Of course."

"They do a similar test using a female giant African frog. The injection stimulates her ovaries to extrude ova within a very short time, and she doesn't have to be killed to read the result—in fact, she can be used over and over again for the same purpose."

"I should think that would be the best way."

"It is—at least, it's the quickest. The only handicap is that these frogs are hard to get and a nuisance to keep. So we usually rely on rabbits."

"I wish you'd tell me what other positive signs there are, the ones which come later, I mean."

"I will, gladly. The positive signs of pregnancy are the presence of life, as denoted by fetal movements and a fetal heart, and verification by X ray."

"About how soon should I notice life, Doctor? Oh, you've already told me—about the eighteenth week."

"That's right, provided your senses are very acute, as I believe they will be," the doctor told her. "Call it the twentieth week. I would likely be able to hear a fetal heart by the eighteenth, I imagine. I would also be able to hear fetal movements about that time, as well as the souffle or swish of the blood being pumped out of the afterbirth into the cord."

"Could you? Just imagine all that going on inside me. How soon could you take an X-ray picture of my baby?"

"At about the time you notice life—say four and a half months of pregnancy."

"I'd like that too. What a thought—having a picture of one's baby before it was born! I'm so interested in all this."

"I see that you are and I approve of it."

"Now what do we do, Doctor?"

"For the present you'll be coming here once a month, and more often later on. However, don't forget that you are coming in tomorrow with that urine for the A-Z. I'll finish your examination then—and there are still a number of points to check, as well as some instructions I have to give you. You see, I am going ahead on the predication that you are pregnant."

(To Be Continued)

ROOM IN THE INN

(Continued from Page 35)

we came at last to the immense Christmas tree, surely bigger every year than the last.

When everybody was there the party began. Games and music and surprises followed one another at Mrs. Tamplin's imperious and kind command until the hour grew late. Then we heard the tinkling of bells and Mrs. Tamplin held up her finger.

"Hush—Santa's come!"

And there he was, miraculously behind the tree exactly as though he had come down the chimney, fat, red-cheeked, clothed in scarlet and sprinkled with snow, and his pack as big as himself. We knew, of course, he was really good, stout Mr. Tamplin, but we wouldn't believe it. And what toys came out of the pack: beautiful expensive things our parents could not buy for us, wonderful dolls and paintboxes and engines and books, toys we had never heard of and certainly never dreamed of possessing! And after that, the wonderful cakes and candies and ices which Santa insisted must all be eaten up! Dear Mrs. Tamplin, wherever you are lying now, your soul is in heaven forever because once you made heaven come true for little alien children growing up in a foreign land.

Our own Big Party is a modest affair in comparison, held in the barn and without any luxury at all. But the same joy attends. We begin inviting people the day after Thanksgiving and go on inviting until the last minute. The barn is a place for rough play, but we dress it up with pine boughs touched with a silvered brush, and we go into our own woods and cut a big pine tree to stand beside the fireplace. The children hang the bright balls and tinsel and the lights, and between the great beams we hang the mistletoe. We heap red apples in a wooden trough and pile the fireplace with logs, and wait for our guests at dusk. By some Christmas magic it almost always snows that night and our guests arrive red-cheeked and powdered with snowflakes.

THE Big Party is a reckless affair. Everybody has invited everybody and we never know or even try to know how many people are coming. People begin to gather upon the hour and they stay late. Babies who cannot last out the evening—for everybody brings the babies—can sleep on cushions on the floor. The fun begins when there is a crowd. It always used to be marionettes when our children were little, but now they feel too grown up for the miniature plays. Sometimes we have a full-size play, put on by the high-school children; sometimes we invite guests from abroad to entertain us; and perhaps there is a motion picture and certainly there is music. The formal entertainment must not last too long. When it is over we have the first installment of food—chicken sandwiches, homemade cake and cookies, nuts and punch and coffee—and then the dancers take the middle of the floor and everybody else sits in a circle around to watch.

THE floor was made for roller skating on rainy winter days and for basketball and volleyball or just ordinary roughhousing. On this night of The Big Party, though, we have polished it up for dancing. The band plays more and more frantically as the night goes on, and young people tend to forget that parents sit in the circle. In the corners of the big barn, behind the backs of parents, small fry entertain themselves happily with wrestling and roughhousing, and the babies sleep peacefully on.

It has to end sometime. The band remembers that it is long past midnight, mountains of sandwiches have sunk down and the punch bowls are low. Outside, the snow is piling deep. Sleepy babies are lifted from their pillows and small children sticky with lollipops are forced into warm coats and only the young men and women linger. Yet even they must part, for tomorrow is here and it is already Christmas Eve. The hubbub dies down and finally only the family is left. We put out the lights and cross the snowy lawn, and once more The Big Party takes its place in tradition and in memory.

Most of the year our house is a quiet place, though we have many children and grandchildren, and they have many playmates and schoolfellows. We live in the country in the middle of land enough so that we hear no noise except from an occasional airplane, soaring near the sun. Woods divide us from the distant road, and it is not a noisy road at that. The house is sprawling enough to provide everyone with his own room, and the television, against which the elders are still rebellious, is relegated to a small tuck-away place in the ell under the big walnut tree. The Back views, sizes and prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 52 & 53

Vogue Design No. 7168. Weskit or blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7225. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6231. Skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7223. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6440. Skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 6822. Slacks; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6910. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7082. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6914. Cape stole; sizes Small (30–32), Medium (34–36), Large (38–40). 60c.
Vogue Design No. 7101. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38 bust. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 7102. "Easy-to-Make" aprons. Waist sizes Small (22–24), Medium (26–28), Large (30–32). 40c.

for Christmas angels

...made by me

Wise mothers know how to keep their cherubs beautiful . . . on a budget. They sew and alter clothes for fast-growing youngsters on a wonderful White Rotary. See furniture-styled Whites at leading department stores.

See the Yellow Pages of your telephone directory for nearest White Sewing Department

AMERICAN MADE

White SEWING MACHINES Since 1876

WHITE SEWING MACHINE CORPORATION · CLEVELAND 1 · OHIO · · · IN CANADA: TORONTO

TUMS Beat BAKING SODA for Acid Indigestion

Tums neutralize almost twice as much excess stomach acid as the same amount of baking soda. Very important, Tums can't cause acid rebound. That's why Tums give you fast—longer lasting relief. You can eat your favorite foods without suffering from heartburn, gas due to acid indigestion. Get Tums from your druggist today. Only 10¢ a roll; 3 roll package a quarter.

for the tummy

AFTER BREAKFAST
Take one or two Tums. See if you don't feel better fast.

Get a copy of this book to help you plan your ski vacation

Maps, photos, full description of localities are all here. Where to go to best enjoy the splendid snow conditions, brilliant winter sunshine, crisp dry air, comfortable modern inns and hotels of

LA PROVINCE DE Québec

Write today for your copy of this booklet to: Provincial Publicity Bureau, Parliament Buildings, Québec City, Canada; or 48 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20.

barn is the place for noisy games and the record player. There is no law against laughter and children's voices anywhere, and these are loudest at croquet and tennis or in the small swimming pool. The baseball field is beyond the barn and the 4-H teams from neighboring villages make merry there without disturbing the peace of the house.

In winter the outdoor silence deepens. The barn may be full of noise on a Saturday, but the windows are shut against the cold. In the house itself, except at evening, everybody pursues his own interest. The library chairs are draped with lanky legs and tousled heads. Somebody is making cookies in the kitchen. An artist works at his desk in his own room. Even the visiting babies busy themselves with the toy cabinet in the living room, maintained especially for them. We meet and share meals or games, but we are a busy family, with many interests, some shared, some solitary, all engrossing. I am sometimes surprised, myself, in the midst of my work at my desk, to listen and hear not a sound. I get up and go out in search of children and find them absorbed with pets or play or books or music or gardening. One tall boy is always to be found at the dairy barn, another is likely to be in the play barn with the records. A young daughter has a couple of the babies in tow. Even when there is no school, everybody is busy at something he wants to do.

As Christmas comes near, everything changes. We believe in Christmas, every one of us. We cherish every custom of world and family. Ever since our present teen-agers had their first winter, we have done exactly the same things every Christmas, and yet each year we have always added something new. For us Christmas is far more than a day or two. It begins weeks ahead, privately even before that. But we have agreed not to let it emerge full-fledged until the day after Thanksgiving.

To be fair, we decided years ago that we must give Thanksgiving Day its due as a day especially for America, our own country, and we devote ourselves to the day heartily enough. Grown-up children bring their little children, and together we sit down to a table stretched to its limit and beyond, so that we have to add the Pembroke at one end. The turkey raised upon our farm makes his appearance, inferior only infinitesimally to his brother, whom we are saving for Christmas, and mince pies take his place in the oven. A family football game follows dinner; for being country folk, we dine at midday and sup at night.

. . . Whenever I think of it, I realize again that Christmas in our house really began decades ago in that far-off other land of mine in China. We seldom thought or spoke of being American and we did not feel solitary. I especially did not feel so, because then I had known no other country and had no other people. Only at Christmas did I feel, through my parents, the reality of my own land across the sea and another people, unseen and yet also mine. The rest of the year I came and went among the Chinese farm families who lived at the foot of the low hill upon which our house was built, played happily with little Chinese girls, and always spoke Chinese except to my parents.

At Christmas there was a difference even beyond the party at Mrs. Tamplin's house. My Chinese playmates knew nothing about Christmas except that it was a foreign festival. They were polite and accepted small gifts of love which we made to them, but still they did not know what Christmas was. True, the people in my father's church celebrated in their courteous fashion the birth of an unknown god-man some two thousand years ago. Rather awkwardly they added this day to the other good days in the year. The Christmas story was not entirely strange to them, for Chinese history is full of god-men, born of virgin mothers who, performing their daily duties in home or field or by the clothes-washing pond, were visited in solitary moments by a god. Their sons, thus conceived, were always men of genius and valor and righteousness with all the power that flows from that invincible combination.

True, we Americans thought our God-man was different and even better. My father taught us so. In spite of all, the god-men of the Chinese were, he said, heathen, and not the beloved and only begotten Son, Who bore upon Himself the sins of the world. It was a long time before I understood that god-men always bear upon themselves the sins of the world. It was Confucius who said, five hundred years before Jesus was born, "The inferior man blames others, but the superior man ever blames himself." Here in my American home, I have brought my children up on that profound truth until now when I begin to speak it they join in and chant it with me. I suppose they grow weary of it. I used to grow weary of the precepts of my own youth, yet I have remembered them.

It is strange how at Christmastime the old memories of life now gone come flooding back to me. It is more than a life gone—it is a world gone. The world we live in this Christmas is not like any other we have ever known. How many mothers and fathers weep, as we do in our hearts, when we watch our tall boys reaching up the Christmas tree to hang the tinsel and the silver balls! Another Christmas and where will they be? What is this world which we have made where the young can no longer count upon their future? God forgive us all, how have we let it come to this?

. . . Yes, the children trim the Christmas tree now. We parents used to do it, waiting until night and the last excited child was in bed, and then, shutting all doors, we wrought in secret, as all parents do on Christmas Eve, the eternal magic of Christmas morning. Long past midnight we worked, once until nearly dawn when four scooters bought and hidden away weeks before turned out to be not ready to ride, as we had supposed, but knocked down and to be assembled. We assembled them somehow and they stood scarlet bright beneath the tree before we slept. That last moment, when the tree is finished, and we stand to see what we have made, each year more beautiful to us, is a sacred one, consecrating a new love and home. We feel the house alive in every stone and beam and threshold.

The Christmas tree itself is an object sacred in every home. Even in China we always had a tree, a tree of some sort, sometimes a bamboo when pines were lacking. A bamboo makes a delicate, fairy sort of Christmas tree. Its slender branches will not bear much weight. They do not break, but they bend low under the smallest gifts. The leaves, too, curl very soon, and turn a silver gray. But the skeleton is beautiful, the branches symmetrical and the jointed trunk is strong. One thing America has given to China, as Germany gave it to America, is the Christmas tree. There are many Chinese children who love the brightly lighted tree as well as American children do, and in many homes, even where the Birthday is not known, the tree is placed, surrounded with sweets and colored fruits.

Every year my parents raised the tree in our little church on a Chinese street and invited the people to come in. That was pleasant enough and there was a plenty of peanuts and candy and oranges for the children. But for me the heart of Christmas was not there. It was always in our own home, on Christmas morning, with no one but our small family gathered about our little tree. The gifts were few and it did not take long to see them all. But we lingered and then the talk began about America, the country I did not know, but to which I belonged. It was on Christmas morning that I knew my parents could be sick with longing for their own country and their own kind. I did not suspect it at other times, when they were busy and often gay. But on Christmas the glow of the tree shed its light across the sea, and in that glory I saw the beloved land and the people who were my own. It was a magic land and of course it did not really exist. There never exists such a land as the exile remembers on Christmas morning. It is dream country, and its citizens are angels. I am here now, in the land of my ancestors, and yet on Christmas mornings even yet, especially when the snow falls over our rolling countryside and we wake to a white Christmas, I am homesick for the magic land I used to think America was, a land where all is peace and men are truly brothers. Surely sometime? O Christmas, come, when our tall sons need not face the darkening future and life cut off! O Christ Child, show us that such things need not be! We are so skilled in war, so fumbling in the ways of making peace. We choose the easy way, and for this we shall not be forgiven. Of those to whom much is given, much is expected. At Christmastime I know again what I have always known. In the midst of joy, in the safety of our home, among our living children, I feel the anger of the world descend upon us, who have been given much, and yet have not found the ways of peace. The old wise words come back to me again, "The inferior man blames others, but the superior man ever blames himself."

I blame myself, my own, and the bitter taste of a Christmas long gone comes back again into my mouth, a year when I was only twelve.

. . . We lived then in a part of China where the land was rich, and near a great and thriving city at the crossroads of the Yangtze River and the Grand Canal. Because of our plenty, there came from time to time into our region hordes of famine-stricken people from the north, where the Yellow River often overflowed its banks, as it has done again this year. That year the people came south a few weeks before Christmas. Thousands and tens of thousands swelled into hundreds of thousands. They built miserable huts, no larger than coffins, for winter shelter and they begged in swarms upon the streets and they poured through the city gates into the fertile valleys outside the walls and begged at farmhouse doors. Our house, like every other, was surrounded by a protecting wall, and front and back there were the stout gates, usually left unlocked in the daytime though always barred at night. Now we had to keep them barred by day as well, for though my parents worked night and day with the relief forces in the city, with the Buddhists and the Taoists and the Catholics and the other Protestants, and all such good people, to relieve the starvation that killed many hundreds every day, it was not enough. The people had waited too long. They had clung too desperately to their land and only when the

(Continued on Page 199)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Winter Evening

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

Quiet a moment, with the storybook
Upon his knees, he lifts a shining face.
His eyes are brimmed with dreams, and he must look
More closely to discern the darkening space
Between him and the night.
O traveler, wait;
Turn not the page, but let the dragon lie
Unwakened in his cave: the hour is late
And Mars is red against a lowering sky.

Let sleep round out the story, and no sound
Of outward strife knit real to the unreal.
The knight, victorious, with the laurel crowned,
Wears at his side the sharp and conquering steel.
May all you learn of war be written here
Where virtue triumphs and the end is clear!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Rosalind thought her face was clean

...until she took the "tissue test"!

Do you feel that all cleansing creams are alike? So did Rosalind Russell until she convinced herself with the "Tissue Test" that there really is a difference in cleansing creams!

We went right into Rosalind's dressing room while she was filming "Listen—the Night" for Independent Artists. We asked her to get her face as clean as she could with her regular cream. Then we invited her to try Woodbury Cold Cream on her "immaculately clean" face.

We handed her a tissue to take it off.

The tissue told a startling story. Even after a thorough cleansing with her regular cream, Woodbury floated out hidden dirt!

Why is Woodbury so different? Because it has Penaten, a new miracle ingredient that actually penetrates deeper into your pores. Penaten lets Woodbury's wonderful cleansing oils go deeper than any cream has gone before to loosen every trace of grime and make-up.

Thanks to wonder-working Penaten, Woodbury Cold Cream smooths your skin more effectively, too. The rich oils go deeper into the upper layers of your skin, smooth it gently when it's dry and rough. Tiny, dry-skin lines, little rough flakes just melt away. Touch your face—it's silken soft!

Do you really think your face is clean? Try the "Tissue Test"—and be sure! Buy a jar today—20¢ to 97¢, plus tax.

Woodbury Cold Cream floats out hidden dirt...

penetrates deeper because it contains Penaten

Corday 2030-7841. It's very seldom that you see a carpet with such a fascinating-looking weave as Corday. Textured like the bark of a tree, or the ripples on a sand dune. Practical, too . . . it's snag-resistant. About $11.95* a sq. yd.

Fervak 1020-9439. Any house, but especially a modern one, would be lucky to get such a handsome new carpet. Casual and "tweedy" looking, in a delicious blend of colors. And the price . . . a delight! Around $9.25* a sq. yd.

*Prices subject to change. Slightly higher in the West.

You can afford to be choosy...

when it's Bigelow Carpets you choose!

PERHAPS you're just married . . . furnishing your first home . . . hoping it will be "just perfect." You want carpets that are modern in mood . . . modest in price. Well, your Bigelow dealer can show you exactly what you've set your heart on.

For Bigelow may be the oldest carpet company in the country, but it's got young-hearted stylists. Bigelow may make carpets for millionaires' mansions, but it also has them priced as low as $7.25* a square yard.

And every Bigelow Carpet . . . modern or traditional, at whatever price . . . is made of aristocratic imported wools, specially treated to keep springy, "lively," and lovely for many years.

Beauvais 1040-1841; about $11.95* sq. yd.

Beauvais 1040-1842; about $11.95* sq. yd.

Chorale 1140-3006; around $13.50* sq. yd.

Cassandra 1080-4607; about $16.75* sq. yd.

Fervak 1020-9442; around $9.25* sq. yd.

No matter what style you choose, or what you want to pay, Bigelow gives you a wide, wonderful choice of unbeatable values. So, when you look for your carpet, be sure to look for one wearing the Bigelow label.

Consult the booklet, "Bigelow Home Decorator." Tells, shows how to achieve beautiful rooms. Get it from your Bigelow dealer, or send 25c to Bigelow's Home Service Bureau, P. O. Box 470, New York 16, N.Y.

Bigelow
Rugs and Carpets

Beauty you can see . . . quality you can trust . . . since 1825 children were dying did they set out on foot for the south. We forgot Christmas that year and all its plans and hopes. I saw my mother working all day at great caldrons of rice, and at night she and my father put on ragged Chinese garments and went out among the huts to put a silver dollar into each doorway, hiding their faces so that none would know they were Americans, lest in their despair the hordes of starving break into our gates and destroy us by day. We scarcely slept and we ate the same food we prepared for the hungry.

(Continued from Page 196)

Yet every morning the dead were lifted from our gates as they were lifted from every gate every day. They came to beg, to beat upon the locked gate with their last strength and then to die there. We dared not open to them, no one dared to open the gate of a house, for the starving would fall upon the house as locusts fall upon a field of wheat. I have tried sometimes to tell Americans how human beings behave when they are starved, but I cannot get them to understand. One has to see to know. And bitter above all is the needlessness of such suffering. China never starves entire. She has riches of food. But she has never in modern times had a government which carries food from one place to another for the people. When will we learn that there need be no starving anywhere in the world? In one country food is thrown away, in another the people die, today, as then. May we be forgiven for not seeking out the ways of peace!

That Christmas when I was twelve the blessed day drew near in spite of the agony of the people. A week before Christmas, I remember, I asked my mother, "Shall we not have the Tree this year?"

My mother was exhausted and she did not look up. She stood beside the big earthen stove in the outside kitchen where the caldrons were steaming with hot rice gruel.

"What tree?" she asked. Her eyes were blank.

I could not answer. It was the final proof of the frightfulness of the days. My mother had forgotten Christmas.

I went away and wept. Never again was the world the same. I had seen suffering and it had changed life for me. I understood from that day, I think, that suffering and starvation anywhere in the world affect everybody upon the earth. Sooner or later, and I pray not too late, we shall all know it.

I said no more about Christmas, I remember. Instead I plunged into helping my parents with all my twelve-year-old strength. Our utmost could not meet the dreadful need, but we did what we could.

On Christmas Eve my mother remembered and said, "You see, children, that we cannot have Christmas this year. Instead of the nice things we usually eat, we must share the food of the poor, and instead of gifts to each other we will give what we have to buy more rice."

So there was no tree that year, no gifts, no Christmas feast. Christmas Day was spent like the other days before and after it, and yet it was a day different, too, from any of them. Among the starving who lay at our gates a little baby was born. As it was with that other Child of Bethlehem Whose mother "laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn," my mother took the young woman into our gate and the baby was born in our house. The baby was dead a few minutes after he was born. Neither did the young mother live. Where the father was we did not know. We did not know their names. We buried them in the Christian cemetery, nameless, and the dust of these two, the unknown mother and child, lay mingled with the dust of Christians. Somehow that gave comfort to my mother for she had wept terribly when the baby died. He was just a little handful of bones. There was nothing with which to begin life.

"One simply cannot think of such things," people have said sometimes when I have tried to tell this story. But I have not learned how not to think of them. I cannot forget. Today in my own country, at this Christmas time of joy and wonder, I think of them. For the mother and child were not beggars. They were not thieves or wastrels. They were simply people who had nowhere to lay their heads. While others ate they starved, through no fault of their own. They could have been fed, and all like them can be fed. The earth has riches of food not yet tapped and the sea has untouched stores. We have never really tried to feed the hungry.

Now, every Christmas at the hour when the tree is trimmed and the children are asleep, when our house stands waiting and at peace, I remember the mother and the child and I dedicate myself anew. They are not dead but living, alive in the haunted and hungry peoples of the earth, who die upon the doorsteps.

I have told our children about the mother and child. In a way the story has become part of the Christmas spirit in our house, so that Christmas here has become more than a festival of merriment. It has become, too, a time of sacrament, a remembrance of things yet to be done.

. . . I suppose that it was the nameless mother and child who made us receive, one Christmastime, two little children who had no home, for whom in this vast and beautiful country of ours there was no room in the inn. From time to time, during the fifteen years I have lived in this farmhouse which more than any other spot in the world has become for me my home, I have received letters from unknown persons asking me to find somehow a place for a certain little homeless child. There is always the same reason why no home has been found and they appeal to me as a last resort, "hoping,"

If you say "There is no God" I can only ask how a speck of a mortal, living for a moment on an atom of an earth in plain sight of an infinite universe full of beauty, wonder and design, can confidently hold so improbable a view.

—DR. CHARLES W. ELIOT:
Charles W. Eliot, Volume II,
by Henry James (Houghton Mifflin Company).

the letter always reads, "that you can perhaps find some Asian family who might be willing to adopt the child."

This means that the child has the blood of Asia in him. But it is not pure blood. It is half American. Before he was conceived, somewhere a young man and a young woman met and mingled their blood, through love which knows neither East nor West, and then there was born the child, and both East and West reject him.

"We do not want to adopt a child with any white blood in him," a Negro woman whose husband is Chinese once wrote me. "The white blood always predominates."

"We do not want any child with Asian blood," the white woman writes. "Oriental blood always predominates."

The predominating blood, I have learned, always means the blood that bears the weight of prejudice, the color that is despised. And so the little child that is not wanted at the inn is homeless among the millions of homes in the world, the millions of families who close the door.

I think what happened in our house began on that earlier Christmas of the mother and child who died in China. At any rate, one particular letter came to us one Christmas season telling of a child whose father was Asian and whose mother was American a little boy only fifteen months old, with brown skin and great black eyes and curling black hair.

We had thought our family was finished. Our children were growing up and our house was full, or so we thought. I know now that the house is never as full as one thinks.

I read the letter aloud to the children. It said quite clearly that unless we could find an adoptive home for the child, he would be put in a Negro orphanage. Now an orphanage is bad enough, but a Negro orphanage is worst of all for a little boy who is not a Negro. For me all human creatures are valuable alike and a black skin, a brown, a white are the same in beauty. But there is a curse here in our land, a shameful prejudice against some, and our little boy, because of his lovely gold-brown skin, might be forced, if he were thought a Negro, to grow up under that burden of prejudice which no child should have to bear, and certainly not a little boy who is not a Negro at all. He was, the letter said, a child of unusual heritage and intelligence, else they would not have bothered to write to me.

"What shall we do?" I asked the children.

They answered with silence and thoughtful eyes.

"What shall we do?" I asked the father of the family.

"It doesn't seem right to let him go to that orphanage," he said.

The house was already full of Christmas. We had cut the Christmas trees ourselves from little trees planted years ago, one big tree for the barn party and a slender and graceful one for the house where the ceilings are low. Under the beds and in closets there were the piles of Christmas presents ready and wrapped. On the dining-room mantel the holly made a background for the little straw angels and reindeer and Santa Claus in his sleigh that we had once brought home from Sweden when the children were babies. The four-colored paper birds hung swinging below from the beams, and straw-and-tinsel stars shone there, all made by farm folk in Sweden for their own homes at Christmas.

We hurried home from Sweden that earlier year to get back in time for Christmas. We were not travelers when the children were small, believing that parents belong at home, but we were once compelled to make one hasty journey across the Atlantic. During the brief busy days in Stockholm we took time to buy gifts for everybody and especially we bought the little straw angels and Santa in his sleigh with his reindeer, and yes, some straw pigs to trot behind the angels on the mantel, and the straw-and-tinsel stars. They have become part of our American Christmas now.

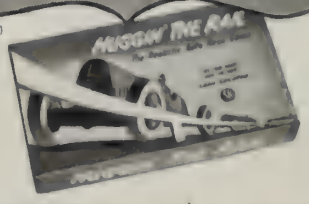
. . . Could we take another child? . . . We had cut the holly from our own holly trees and at the big front door the huge wreath with the red ribbon hung from the brass knocker. The wreaths are always hung at all the windows the day before The Big Party, so that the lights shine through them to welcome our guests. The red candles were in the silver candlesticks and the turkey was stuffed and the plum pudding made and the Christmas music waiting to be sung and sung again.

We begin singing Christmas carols after Thanksgiving. Someone hums a tune, there is a catch of music from upstairs, and, listening, I hear O Little Town of Bethlehem. The music swells as the days pass and long before Christmas we gather at the piano at night before we go to bed and we sing the Christmas songs. Long ago in China I had learned to love Christmas carols sung under our windows by Chinese schoolboys, the children of those who had forsaken their own gods to follow the God-man of other lands and white-faced strangers. I first heard O Little Town of Bethlehem in Chinese, and from Chinese children the song rose out of the night, "Oh, come to my heart, Lord Jesus, there is room in my heart for Thee." That made Christmas belong to everybody in the world.

. . . "We must do whatever we think right," the father of the family said. Our smallest child, a blue-eyed, brown-haired daughter, crept into my room one night. "Mother, we will have to take that baby or I won't have a good time this Christmas," she said.

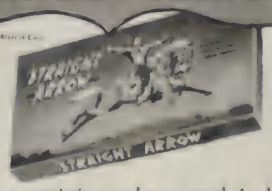
So with the approval of all I wrote the letter that brought him to us, a tiny dark child in the middle of the night, given to us by kindly strangers who went away again and left him, a little silent bundle of woe, his eyes enormous, and he sucking desperately on a small thumb that seemed permanent in his mouth. I took off his coat and cap and held him close for a long time. He did not cry or speak. He was like a little animal, stricken to stone with fear. I have seen a

S&R AMERICA'S FAVORITE GAMES



PARCHEESI
AMERICA'S MOST POPULAR GAME.
No home complete without it! $1 & $2.

MacDONALD'S FARM
(Trademark)



The fun-way to be a farmer. Stock up the farm—corner the market—trade and unload surplus stocks . . . $2.00

SAFARI
(Trademark)

You're facing a ferocious lion. Would you shoot or trap him? In SAFARI, you must decide FAST. Lions, Elephants, Gorillas! $2.00

HUGGIN' THE RAIL
(Trademark)

Real auto race game with new intriguing gadget—the lane-locator . $2.00

STRAIGHT ARROW

The rip snortin' cowboy and Indian game—with STRAIGHT ARROW as the hero $2.00

OTHER POPULAR S & R GAMES
CABBY — Unique fun-packed game. $1.50
MR. REE — Who killed Aunt Cora? The greatest of detective games. $2.00
MR. DOODLE'S DOG — Kids love pups. $1.50
MEET THE PRESIDENTS — 1950's history-making game. $3.00
ELSIE & HER FAMILY — The ideal game for young children. $1.50
CARGOES — World travel, adventure. $2.00

On sale at all leading toy and department stores.

S&R Selchow & Righter Co.
200 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

EATON'S VIKING PARCHMENT—Strictly tailored to men's tastes, the White paper is crisp and smooth as parchment. Large two-fold single sheets. Pictured, $1. Also in a hinged box of similar styling, $2

EATON'S ENGLISH IVY — Fresh green ivy [illegible] entwines the delicate embossed lattice panel. Decorated and plain single letter pages are boxed together. In White, Grey, Ivory. $1

EATON'S GOLDEN ACCENT—A restrained touch of embossed gold-leaf is the precious personality accent on this letter paper. In White, Blue, Grey, Pink, Green, each color with its own motif. $1.

EATON'S VEIL-LURE — Lovely flower designs printed on the envelope linings are veiled by the exquisitely sheer paper. In White with forget-me-nots, Blue with violets, Pink with carnations. $1.50

EATON'S HIGHLAND — A [illegible] with precautions of [illegible] Fluorescent $5. Other Highland Correct [illegible] from $1.50 to $2.

A Good Gift for Anyone at Anytime Especially at Christmas Eaton's fine Letter Papers

THESE AND OTHER BEAUTIFUL EATON LETTER PAPER GIFTS — AT FINE STORES NOW baby rabbit stop like that in the field when the dogs came by.

I carried him upstairs and we undressed him and washed him and put him into the crib we had brought down from the attic, and laid him there. Still there was not a word and still the thumb was in the mouth and great dark eyes stared at one face and then another. One by one the family went to bed and I sat there alone with the baby. I let the light burn low so that there would not be darkness and so that he might see me, and I sang a little to him now and again. Once or twice he began to sob softly, and then he put out his other hand, the one he could spare, and I took it and held it and after a long time he slept. Some of the pain of that Chinese mother and child, now so long dust, was taken away from me that night.

The baby is a little boy now, his fears are gone, and he is happy and hearty. Life will not be easy for him and he will have to be strong enough to meet in other ways the burden which he escaped when he did not go to the Negro orphanage. But perhaps the world will be better by the time he grows up. It must be better, or we shall destroy one another with hate before that day.

Once the door opens, it is never closed again, of course. That is true of hearts as well as houses. The very same Christmas season a baby was born in a hospital not far from our house, and again he was one of those who belong to both sides of the world, his father Asian, his mother American. We did not hesitate this time. We sent for him at once and he was given to us because there was no place for him to go. We even had to send clothes for him, for he had none of his own, just the cotton shirt that hospital babies wear. It was fun to buy a layette again, and to have a tiny baby in the house who looked at me with Chinese eyes. I realized suddenly that, happy as I had been, I had missed my other people, too, and I was glad to have my Chinese-American baby. Today he runs everywhere, and talks incessantly, a child of gaiety and darting mischief, daring everything and fearing nothing.

Man does not need much, but he cannot do without love and the constancy of those he has chosen and who are pledged to him. —GOETHE.

Our new babies stayed in our house for three and a half months while we planned how to keep them always. Had we been younger, my husband and I, we would have become their adoptive parents. But parents must be young enough to see babies through to the years when they are grown and can take care of themselves, and we were not young. Good grandparents we could be, and so we decided that we would find younger parents for them near us, where we could still be one family. A fine old farmhouse stood empty in the middle of our farm and next our own house. It had belonged to other people now gone and was for sale. If we could find parents and they would live there, it would be almost like keeping the babies in our own house.

We thought of all our young friends. The parents must be kind, and wide of heart so that these little children would not seem strange to them. They must belong to this region, deeply rooted, so that the children could put down roots too. Here where we live we are surrounded by Quakers and Mennonites of both the old and new variety. We thought of them and the thought began to center upon a certain two whom we had known for years enough to know them well. If they were willing, they were the ones.

We talked with them long one night and they held the babies while we talked. They did not decide at once, for they are careful people, steadfast when they have made up their minds. But one day a few weeks later they came back. "We have long wanted to do something more as our share in the world's life," they said. "We think this is it."

And so it came to pass. Friends everywhere in the community helped to buy the house and furnish it simply. The parents brought their things, too, and one day in the spring we took the babies up the field path to their own home and their parents. We named it Welcome House. The babies can run across the field themselves now to Gran and Granddaddy's house, and they spend every Sunday here, and Christmas joy repeats itself every day and especially on Sundays when they come to spend the day and the dining-room table stretches its full length for all the growing children.

Stanch friends stand by to make Welcome House secure. What the house needs someone finds for it. The children live a natural family life, brothers and sisters from everywhere, but all Americans, for in America all were born.

THE doors which Christmas opens never close. Five more times the doors of Welcome House and of our hearts have opened for other children: a darling little Japanese-American girl, three more sturdy Chinese-Americans, and now within the last month, our tiny Korean boy. American though the children are, nurtured in the good ways of American life, we teach them, too, of their other lands, the great and ancient civilizations of Asia, the mother lands of the earth.

They give as they receive. They bring gifts to our community, to our homes and school and the church where their parents take them on Sundays, and these gifts are the lively intelligence of India shining through our first child's dark eyes, the gaiety of China in the mischief and fun which make the nature of our second child, the dainty grace of Japan in our tiny girl, the health and heartiness of China, too, in the older three, and all the dignity of Korea, the Land of Morning Calm, is in our baby's noble head. It is our hope, our dream, brightened by every Christmas together, that our world-children, as we call them, will be the sort of people the world so sorely needs, the ones who understand both East and West, who belong to both, and who therefore can bring the two hemispheres together in peace. We believe that when children are brought up so to be, they will so continue.

. . . This is our Christmas faith. In a way it is already being fulfilled. I have spent the last hour holding our little Korean boy in my arms and thinking across the years. Here into this quiet American countryside, where a handful of years ago no one ever thought of Asia, the world is beginning to penetrate. The war really began it, I suppose. From here as elsewhere the farm boys, the village sons went to China and the Philippines, to India and Japan and Korea, and some of them came back again.

The son of my neighbor said, "I hate to think of our men fighting in Korea. The folks over there were mighty nice to me. Wonderful they were, really, so gentle and sort of cultivated, if you know what I mean."

"I do know," I said.

Yes, I know. I have watched the magic of our Korean baby. He looks very Oriental, his skin is a dark cream, his large eyes are almond shaped, and he has a great dignity. He looks like a young Buddha. My friend who has never seen such a baby seems a little afraid of him. She thinks he looks strange, perhaps, not like the babies she knows.

But that lasts only a few minutes. He smiles, he reaches for her necklace, her brooch, he coos and answers her baby talk, and she says with surprise, "He's really like any other baby, isn't he?"

"Yes, he really is," I answer.

I know that the alchemy of human brotherhood is beginning to work in her. It always does if we do but meet face-to-face. We soon cease to see the shape of eye or the color of the skin. The love that Christmas stirs in the heart lives beyond the day and becomes a part of life. That is the purpose and meaning of Christmas, and Christmas is fulfilled only when love lives on into life, the good love, the world love.

. . . Christmas morning has become more for us, then, than just the day when we as a family among families rejoice. It has changed,

(Continued on Page 202)

HERE AT CLAIRE McCARDELL'S HOME the famous fashion designer entertains with the same assured taste you see in a McCardell creation. On the card table every time: new Congress decks. "Breaking the Congress seal is the nicest start for a game," says Claire McCardell.

One touch tells you—

WHAT A DIFFERENCE CEL-U-TONE FINISH MAKES!

It's that rich gleam and glide no other cards have . . . that smoother Congress "slip," that livelier Congress "snap." CEL-U-TONE FINISH does it! And see how gemlike their colors flash against the gold and silver glow of their edges! To offer such cardplaying luxury is the finest compliment you can pay your guests.

FREE! Complete 1950 rules for CANASTA, the new game millions are playing! With valuable strategy hints. Just mail a self-addressed stamped envelope to Dept. 29, The United States Playing Card Company, Cincinnati 12, Ohio. (In Canada, The International Playing Card Co., Windsor, Ont.)

Haviland China

Your favorite store cordially invites you to see Haviland China.

Haviland France
ESTABLISHED 1842
Theodore Haviland New York
MADE IN AMERICA

You may obtain booklet of patterns and history of Haviland China by sending 25¢.

Haviland & Co
24 WEST 57TH STREET, NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

"MEXENE PEPS UP POTATOES"

Says
Mrs. Alva A. Slease of East Gary, Ind.

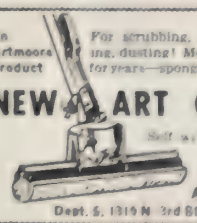
No matter how commonplace the meal, Mexene adds that special flavor that wins compliments for the cook! Just ask Mrs. Slease! She uses this All-Purpose Seasoning, a unique blend of rare peppers and spices, to give taste delight to vegetables, meats, spaghetti, soups, salads and seafoods. Ask your grocer for the one and only Mexene All-Purpose Seasoning.



Walker's AUSTEX Chili Co.
CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STEW
BRAISED BEEF HASH • SANDWICH SPREAD
SPAGHETTI and MEAT BALLS

An Artmoore Product

For scrubbing, waxing, wall washing, dusting! Mechanism built to last for years—sponge head easily replaced.

NEW ART CLEANER

Self-wringing self-cleaning. See your Artmoore dealer or write

ARTMOORE CO.
Dept. S, 1319 N. 3rd St., Milwaukee 12, Wis.

JOLLY TIME FOR YOUR HOLIDAY FUN ALWAYS POPS
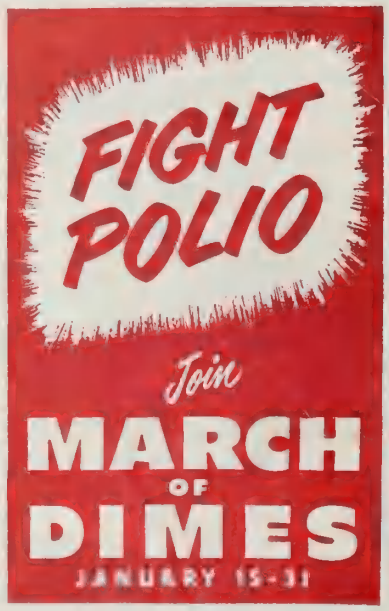
JOLLY TIME POP CORN

(Continued from Page 200)

of course, through the years. When our children were little, the day began strenuously. There were then four little ones and the middle-sized one, and the little ones woke at dawn. We learned through experience that the temper of the day lasted better if we had breakfast before we opened the big door to disclose the tree. The compromise was and still is that we have the stockings first, and then we all hurry through breakfast together. The stockings hang under the living-room chimney piece, a nice long line of them, very slack when they are hung on Christmas Eve after the carols are sung and just before the good nights are said. They are very full on Christmas morning. The stockings are sacred to Santa Claus. The middle-sized child, who is now full-sized and gets home for only a day or so from her job, helps us to fill them. The teen-agers are still children at Christmas and are sent early to bed. In the stockings are the small things, the tiny toys, the unusual sweet, the candy cane, the doll, the precious bit of jewelry that might be lost in the profusion of the tree. It was in the toe of my own stocking that I once found my gold thimble, and another year my string of pearls. In the toe of her Christmas stocking the blue-eyed child found the ring she wanted, and there the boys found their first watches.

Christmas breakfast is a hasty affair of scrambled eggs and bacon and toast and coffee with orange juice gulped down between and never mind washing the dishes. We have no helper in the kitchen or anywhere around the place on Christmas Day. We believe everybody ought to be at home that day and so we serve ourselves. It is an uneasy feeling to have lonely souls in the house longing for their own homes and families, while they are compelled to service. It clouds the pure joy of the house. Let each serve himself on Christmas Day.

The turkey is ready, stuffed the day before. I put him in the oven after breakfast and set the temperature for a long quiet baking for the solitary bird. Then we crowd through the living room together and the father slips in first to light the tree and to push back the sliding doors into the library where the tree stands. It was not always a library. In the days of small children it was the playroom, but the years went by and toys became games and so we moved the playroom to the barn and lined the old room with bookshelves and made it the family library. Such now it is, and the tree stands between the two French windows that look into the court. For a moment no one moves. The sight is so old, as old as my childhood in China, and yet it holds for us all the magic it has for the youngest, for whom it is the First Christmas.



The children trim the Christmas tree nowadays and the trimmings are as familiar as the house itself. We have the blue angel that we have always had and the colored balls, renewed only when one falls to the floor in silvery shatters, and we never try any new or modernistic trimmings. We want the tree to look exactly the same every Christmas, exactly as the oldest child remembers it looked the first time she saw it, and that is the way it is. Under the tree among the heaped gifts is the tiny crèche, the manger lighted by a star, and our children, from the oldest to the youngest, kneel before it to look in wonder and tenderness. It makes the old story come alive again more than words can do. Yet even so it would only be a pictured scene did we not have the experience of our world-children. When another world-baby finds us somehow and is laid in my arms and our children gather around to see the newly born, we live the Christmas story in our own house.

"Aren't you afraid?" Someone is always asking that.

"Afraid of what?" I ask in reply.

The answer is always something different and yet it is always the same. Afraid of taking in strangers, afraid of responsibility, afraid of your "own" children marrying or wanting to marry one of the "others" someday, afraid of the trouble, the worry, the care of them all. The answer is that I am afraid of nothing of the sort. I might be afraid if it weren't that I have found so many people who feel just as we do and who welcome the world-children with us. If you cannot believe it, then you do not know our community.

The spirit of good William Penn still lives among us, he who would not war against the dark-skinned Indians because he took them for his brothers. Here in our community there live those who still so believe that all men are brothers, and to our world-children they stand as kinfolk and friends, and to us as helpers. Quietly a small but strangely steady stream of money flows into the bank. Long ago those who followed the Star brought gifts of silver and gold to the Child, and He was the first world-child of all. They bring gifts today to our world-children: precious myrrh of friendship with its comfort for sorrow, for these children of the world must meet their own sorrows and they need friends as well as family; and fragrant frankincense for joy, for the world-children, if they are loved enough, are joyful children. Around our tree gathers all the world family, father and mother and children, and we are the grandparents and our children are the near and younger kinfolk.

It is an all-day affair, this Christmas Day, and we stop for the dinner as usual in the middle of it. The turkey has done his duty in the oven, submitting with the best possible grace to being roasted tender and crisply brown, and the stuffing is made from our own Chinese chestnuts, gathered from our trees in the autumn.

Christmas perhaps starts as far back as that, when the first frosts fall and chestnut burrs split open and the whole family takes baskets and puts on thick gloves and goes across the creek to the opposite hillside to gather the nuts. They are so sweet that all they need is to be partially boiled, their shells slit to let out steam, and then, peeled and crumbled and mixed with half a cup of melted butter, a little salt dashed in, their richness permeates the bird. We do not bother with soups or other filling foods before the turkey appears. It would be an insult to his highness. While the last basting is done, the children fly about and set the long table in the dining room again. We have to add a table at the end, for we number twenty or so when we sit down.

As the turkey proves his tender worth, we venture hopes that his relatives do as well on other tables. For three days ago we packed and sent boxes for our grown-up children and their families, for an uncle's house and an aunt's Christmas dinner. Each box held another turkey from our farm. The best gifts come, we think, from farm and garden, and tucked in around the turkeys are our own scrapple, a pound or two of our own sausage, a jar of cranberry sauce, some honey in the comb from our hives under the pear trees in the orchard, and a jar of our special horseradish-and-beet relish. We like thus to share our Christmas dinner.

Whatever we are elsewhere in life, in Christmas dinners we are conservatives and fundamentalists. We eat the orthodox food with turkey, American food. On other days our shelf of cookbooks from every country may provide us Chinese meals or Indian dishes or foods from France and Spain, but we are all-American on Christmas Day. No, wait—the dessert is plum pudding, which I make myself after an English recipe as old as the Christmas carol. With complete lack of originality, somebody always says every Christmas at the dinner table, "There never was such a goose—pudding!" The turkey legs, whittled down as to meat, always go to keep the youngest quiet, a family tradition, for our earliest home movies show our two tall sons, on their first Christmas and then in rompers, chewing on the huge drumsticks. Pudding must be tasted by everyone unless he is too young for teeth. Then he only gets a taste of hard sauce.

Glazed sweet potatoes and a salad flank the turkey, green peas, perhaps—we allow ourselves some latitude on vegetables—and coffee for all afterward, with cocoa for the tinies, for all are equal on Christmas Day, and the feast is over. Many hands of many sizes clear the table and wash the dishes and we talk awhile and Grandfather smokes a pipe and Grandmother steals a moment to look into some new books, and then the children can wait no longer. We go back to the blessed tree.

It is always night before we are done, and the last moments are drawn out as long as possible. The spreading branches are searched again and again for some lingering tiny parcel. We cannot bear to let the day end, and when all is over a child or two will feel the tree too dear to stand forlorn and stripped. He puts some boxes back, piles up some brightly colored books, rescues the prettiest ribbons, and kneels down before the crèche to live over again the precious day. I watch the face, absorbed in wonder, lit by the tree lights, dreaming. I do not ask what thoughts are shaping in that child mind. I know, for I myself have dreamed.

On Christmas night there is a special joy, no longer of anticipation, but now realized and satisfied. We know what we have been given and each one sits down to enjoy afresh the pleasure of the gift received and given.

"How did you know that was what I wanted?" the child asks the parent and the parent asks the child, and each replies, "I remember you said so long ago—oh, weeks—and I wrote it down."

There are gifts so good that they were not imagined possible, and then it is sweet to have it said, "I thought it looked like you."

We have no costly gifts. There are too many of us for that. Shoes have to be bought for many feet. Clothes are worn out quickly by healthy children and they eat prodigiously every day. We live plainly and we give simple gifts, made at home if possible. But there is always one special gift for each upon the tree.

It is not too late even in the darkness to try new skis if there is snow, or skates upon the pond, and to go to the barn to hear new records and dance awhile, or play basketball, table tennis or volleyball, or roller skate. Christmas night is the night for everything, the fulfillment, the night of peace. Our world-babies fall asleep, clutching dolls and Teddy bears, and the little ones hold horns and mouth organs and toy trucks and engines and our middle-sized daughters try on new frocks and our boys their knitted gloves and woolen socks. Candies and cakes are tasted and cookies fill the bowl and nobody can think of supper, they declare—until, after the little ones are asleep, they appear in the kitchen, young appetites in search of cold turkey.

We are all in bed by midnight. Christmas is over, the children sigh. And yet we know it is never over. As soon as one is gone, another one is born in hope and faith for yet another year. Across the field in Welcome House our world-babies sleep, each in his bed or crib. We are one family, gathered here from over all the globe, in love. There is always room in Our Inn. THE END

I WAS LURED BY THE BEAUTY,

I PEEKED AT THE PRICE TAG, AND THEN...

I JUMPED FOR JOY! Here was just what I had been looking for... smart. Boltaflex-covered furniture to last for years... and at a price that pleased my pocketbook.

I looked at the range of rich decorator colors and patterns. I felt the soft warmth of the Boltaflex material. Who'd think you could afford them on a button-budget!

But Boltaflex beauty isn't just "skin deep." First of all, it's got the sweetest disposition. No matter how many times it's flexed, it pops right back to its original shape. Then, too, it's so easy to take care of... soap and water keep it clean as a whistle. What's more, Boltaflex won't chip or peel, and it resists staining, fading and scuffing!

Your favorite stores carry Boltaflex by-the-yard and feature Boltaflex-covered furniture. Look for the Boltaflex tag. It's your guide to the smartest styles at good old-fashioned prices.

Boltaflex sells BY-THE-YARD at all leading department stores. It is also available in SEALTUFT, the stitchless, quilted plastic. For further information, store names and descriptive folder, write Dept. J-512. BOLTA PRODUCTS SALES, INC., LAWRENCE, MASS.

Platform rocker and ottoman in deep red BOLTAFLEX for the man of the house.

Dinette in washable Pearlized BOLTAFLEX, matching the chairs to the table top.

Television chairs and hassock covered in lustrous BOLTAFLEX. Note wall paneling of BOLTAFLEX with SEALTUFT.

Boltaflex* means Covered with Lasting Beauty

*ALL-PLASTIC MATERIAL

(Continued from Page 104)

metal legs sawed down and painted dull black, two inner-spring mattresses and five back cushions, with the upholstering thrown in free of charge. The rug, a 9′ x 12′ Indian drugget, costs a fraction of the usual fortune. Lay a flush door from a builders' supply firm on a cut-down kitchen-drawer unit from a mail-order house, add a support at the other end, and you have a desk that is roomier than any to be found at a comparable price. A kitchen unit, painted at home, was used because its drawers are 24″ deep. A top resistant to moisture, acid and burns was added to the coffee table, not to mention eye appeal, by setting white kitchen or bathroom tiles in a wooden frame filled with rubber cement. For the price of a wad of cheesecloth, some white paint and oiled stencil paper, the walls of the dining space were dressed up in a decorator-done effect. (Outline cutout wallpaper figures on the stencil paper as a guide for your razor blade when you cut your pattern. The cheesecloth wad is better than a dripping brush, and the paint should be thick and patted on as you repeat the pattern horizontally.) The draw curtains across the picture window are heavy enough to shut out heat and glare when the weather is warm, and to hold in warmth when the weather is cold. And yet they're nothing more costly than unbleached muslin dyed dark blue at the cleaner's. The cement floor, originally pigmented another color, was painted a turquoise-blue and waxed.

Though the foregoing are the high spots in this room, when it comes to good-looking dollar stretchers, it's just as well to keep in mind that Italian imports, now coming into this country, are often inexpensive, considering their excellent design and honest workmanship. The two chairs with the rush seats and backs are points in case. The pottery lamp base is Italian, too, a jar wired and fitted at an electrical shop. All the materials of the grass family, from the West Indies and t Pacific islands, are perfect for a modern i terior and are also easy on the bank balanc For instance: the bamboo blinds, the ratt coffee table, the collapsible rattan side tabl the China-matting panel that brings the fro of the free-standing closet up to ceiling heig beside the dining space, and the grass-fabr lamp shade. (The grass fabric was fitted ov a plain translucent shade. The collapsible t ble has a secondhand top.) And Mexican i ports are frequently the greatest bargains them all.

In the photographs, the lantern over t dining table, the blue-glass water j wired and fitted as a lamp base, and t secondhand wrought-iron lamp base are fro Mexico. The birch desk chair and the bir radio-and-storage cabinet are parts of a mo ern set now available the country over. T extension dining table, of maple, and the di ing chairs, of cord and metal, are also mode American. Italian, West Indian, Polynesia Mexican, American and East Indian (cour ing the drugget rug)—they all add up to smooth blend on a moderate budget.

We keep on talking about dress goods a felt for upholstery materials. In fact, can't remind you often enough how practi and inexpensive they are. Felt is 72″ wi so that it took only two yards to make t cushions of the hassock, of violet and gre respectively. The cushions are tightly stuff with cotton, but sawdust filling would crease their weight. The other cushions a pillows are covered in a heavy cotton dr goods. And if you're wondering what t fascinating object is we've put the peanu in, it's a wire lettuce basket. You know: y hold the handle and whirl the basket arou to get the lettuce dry enough for salad. B why shouldn't you use it to pass the peanu in? Or potato chips or corn chips or shri chips or crackers or popcorn or pretzels?

BUDGET

1 Dining table	$ 29.95
2 Corded black iron chairs @ $28.00	56.00
1 Mexican tin lantern	15.00
2 Open armchairs @ $30.00	60.00
2 Sets bedsprings on legs @ $13.95	27.90
2 Inner-spring mattresses @ $24.95	49.90
4 36″ back cushions @ $7.50	30.00
1 24″ back cushion	5.00
1 Natural-birch bench for cabinet units	13.95
1 Natural-birch 2-drawer unit	37.50
1 Natural-birch 2-door cabinet	32.50
1 Natural-birch slat-back side chair	17.95
1 Drawer unit for desk (unassembled)	21.45
1 Birch-veneer wood door for desk top	15.00
1 Rug	37.50
1 Folding rattan side table	13.50
1 Round wood top for above	5.00
1 Rattan coffee table	29.50
49 White tiles for coffee table @ 8¢	3.92
1 Black iron lamp and grass shade	17.00
1 Italian pottery lamp and pleated shade	17.89
1 Mexican glass lamp and white shade	23.29
15 Yards fabric for day beds @ $2.49	37.35
2 Yards felt for hassocks @ $4.98	9.96
7 Yards striped cotton for pillows and chair pads @ $1.19	8.33
24 Yards unbleached muslin for curtains and pillows @ 29¢	6.96
2½ Yards red canvas for bench cushion @ $1.50	3.75
12 Feet curtain track @ 16¢	1.92
2 Dozen curtain carriers @ 30¢	.60
20 Pounds cotton for seat pads, pillows, bench cushion and hassock cushions @ 35¢	7.00
2 Bamboo blinds @ $7.20	14.40
1 Bench	4.00
1½ Yards chain for lantern @ 40¢	.60
3 Yards China matting for panel @ $1.00	3.00
Total	$657.57

It measures up

This country's telephone service is one of its greatest assets in time of emergency. It unites millions of people—helps thousands of businesses get things done quicker—is a vital part of our national defense.

Since 1941, the Bell System has increased the number of telephones by more than 16,000,000. There are nearly twice as many now as nine years ago. Billions of dollars have been spent for new telephone equipment. The number of telephone employees has increased to more than 600,000.

All this growth and size are proving of extra value right now. One reason this country can outproduce any other is because it has the most and the best telephone service in the world.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Printed in U. S.